TO AMERICAN HEROES

DEDICATION OF MONUMENTS ON CHICKAMAUGA'S FIELD.

Most Brilliant and Stirring Demonstration of Patriotism Since the Civil War—South Wild with Enthusiasm—Park Has No Counterpart.

After Thirty-two Years.

Patriotism and pleasure held sway in the South. From the Grand Army encampment at Louisville to the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park was a solid streak of red, white and blue. Everywhere along the route the hundreds of thousands of people joined the scores of thousands of visitors in one grand burst of patriotic enthusiasm. Chattanooga, the pretty little Southern Tennessee city, caught the spirit, and for the five days devoted to the dedicatory exercises on the famous field of Chickamauga she was gay with flowers and bunting.

The South and its people turned everything loose and went in for a period of festivities and freedom, with the dual desire to celebrate the dedication and to honor the stars and stripes. In short, it was a holiday for all the people and they went into it with an enthusiasm that insured great enjoyment.

But the exercises were not without a serious side. The dedication of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga Military Park upon the thirty-second anniversary of the battle of Chickamauga, and the accompanying State and society celebrations, constitute the most brilliant and stirring pageant and patriotic demonstration the country has seen since the civil war. It took place by an act of Congress, and under the direction of Government officials. It was national in character, and included both Union and Confederate characters and organizations. Its object is the fostering of friendly and reunion sentiments. The patriotism of the nation was assembled on two adjacent battlefields, one of which saw a victory for the Confederates, and the other a victory for the Union arms.

As the dedication was a national event and as the ceremonies and proceedings were under the immediate direction of Secretary of War Lamont nearly every prominent official of the United States Government and of the different States were present. Among them were the Cabinet, the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the Vice President and twenty United States Senators, the Speaker of the House and thirty Representatives, Lieut. Gen. Schofield and Maj. Gen. Miles, accompanied by a large body of regular troops and Admiral Gherardi and Admiral Walker, of the United States Navy.

There was a large attendance of patriotic military organizations, some of which purposely arranged to hold their regular annual celebration at the same time and place as the dedication exercises. First among these was the Society of the Army of the Cumberland, which celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary. The Army of the Cumberland entertained as its special guests at Chattanooga the Society of the Army of the Tennessee, which held its twenty-seventh annual reunion Sept. 16 and 17, at Cincinnati.

The Confederate Society of the Army of the Tennessee was also present in force. A large delegation went from the annual encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic at Louisville. It is estimated that 75 per cent. of the veterans found their way to Chattanooga. There was also a large attendance of the Sons of Veterans. Gen. W. S. Rosecrans was ill in California, and sent word that he could not come. Gen. James Longstreet, of the Confederate army, attended upon condition that he be not asked to participate in the exercises. He was accompanied by Gen. A. P. Stewart, one of his brigade commanders in the battle.

The dedication exercises proper occupied the first two days, and opened and closed with a salute of 100 guns. The official program was as follows:

First day—Grand parade of veterans, North and South. Dedication of the Chickamauga section of the park. Exercises at Snodgrass Hill, opened by Secretary Lamont. Orators, Gen. John M. Palmer of Illinois (Union) and Gen. John B. Gordon of Georgia (Confederate). Eight p. m., at Chattanooga, exercises conducted by the Society of the Army of the Tennessee (Union) and the Army of Tennessee (Confederate), Gen. Granville M. Dodge presiding. Orators, Gen. O. O. Howard, U. S. A., and Gen. Joseph Wheeler of Alabama.

Second day—Dedication of the Chattanooga section of the park, exercises beginning at noon at Chattanooga. Orators, Gen. Charles H. Grosvenor of Ohio (Union) and Gen. William H. Bate of Tennessee (Confederate). Eight p. m., at Chattanooga, exercises conducted by veterans of the Army of the Potomac (Union) and the Army of Northern Virginia (Confederate), Gen. Edward C. Walthall of Mississippi presiding. Orators, Gen. Orlando Smith and Gov. William C. Oates of Alabama.

The dedication ceremonies at the park were under the direction of Secretary of War Lamont. Bishop Hunt of Tennessee delivered the invocation and Bishop Keane of Richmond gave the benediction. Speeches were made by Gen. Warner on behalf of the committee, and by Gen. Dodge for the Army of the Tennessee.

The Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park is the grandest reservation of its kind in the world, and in many respects the most comprehensive and extended military object lesson. The United States Government has spent on it $750,000 since its establishment was authorized in 1890, and various State Governments about $500,000 more, making a total of $1,250,000. The plan was to restore the old lines of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga campaigns (Sept. 19-20 and Nov. 24-25, 1863,) as they were when the battles were fought, to mark all the points of attack or defense by either side, to set up monuments to commemorate the troops which fought, and so far as practicable restore the fields to their original condition; and this design has been carried out to the letter.

The Chickamauga and Chattanooga campaigns were in a measure representative of the whole country. Chickamauga is held by military experts to have been the best demonstration of the pluck, endurance, prowess and strategy of the American soldier ever given and, measured by percentage of losses and the duration of the fighting, the deadliest conflict of modern times, while its sequel and companionpiece, Chattanooga, is considered to have been the most spectacular engagement.

Of the ten square miles constituting the area of the park something over 5,000 acres are forest and about 1,000 acres open farms. A central driveway, passing through and overlooking all the heavy fighting ground, has been built twenty miles long. Forty-two miles of the roads of the battles have been reopened and improved in a substantial and enduring manner, and new roads have been closed up. Many of the minor roads have also been cut out and graded, so that there are now about sixty miles of driveways in the park, all of them along the roads of the war. The removal of underbrush and the clearing out of the new growth of timber have opened the forest so that carriages can drive through it in all directions, and the appearance now is like that of an immense area of forest pasture in the Blue Grass region.

The Chickamauga portion of the park is connected with the Chattanooga end of it by national driveways. Within the park the Government has set up 400 historical tablets and will set up 1,600 more hereafter, each three or four feet, consisting of cast-iron plates, glazed black, fastened to iron posts set in concrete. On these tablets in embossed white letters are set forth briefly and impartially the historic details of the six battles—Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Lookout Mountain, Orchard Knob, Wauhatchie and Brown's Ferry. They also mark the positions of army headquarters, corps, divisions and brigades, both Union and Confederate, and the parts taken by each organization are concisely stated, without censure and without praise. Besides these tablets, the Government has erected nine handsome granite monuments, all different, one for each of the organizations of regular troops engaged in the battles. It has also built, on the spots where they fell, eight pyramidal monuments of novel design, each ten feet high, constructed of eight-inch shells, in honor of four general Union officers and four Confederate officers killed in action.

In addition, the Government has built five tall observation towers of iron and steel seventy feet high, two on Missionary Ridge and three on Chickamauga field, from which the landscape below is seen clearly and easily recognizable from its markings. And, finally, the Government has marked the most important fighting positions occupied by each of the thirty-five Union batteries and thirty-nine Confederate batteries engaged in the battles by 400 mounted cannon of the types and appearance then used, giving to the fields an impressive element of realism. Two guns mark each battery location, and, inasmuch as some of the batteries occupied several different positions and did notable fighting at different points in the fields at separate stages of the battles, many positions have had to be duplicated, thus utilizing in all 400 cannon to locate the spots occupied by the seventy-four batteries.

The only private monument yet contracted for is to be erected to commemorate the valor of George W. Landrum, a lieutenant of the Second Ohio Regiment, who was shot on the afternoon of Sept. 20, 1863, by some men of the Third Tennessee Regiment, while carrying a verbal message from General Thomas to General Rosecrans. His dying words were: "I am glad to have shed my blood in so noble a cause."

But while the national government has marked these positions it has been left to the States having troops in the battles to erect monuments to State regiments and organizations and to the military societies to commemorate the particular services of their membership.

Twenty-eight States had organizations in these battles, a more general representation than appeared upon any other battlefield of the war. Five States had troops on both sides—Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri, West Virginia and Maryland. At Chickamauga Rosecrans had 129 regiments of infantry and enough cavalry and artillery to make up a total of 182 organizations. Bragg had 138 regiments of infantry, 33 of cavalry, and 41 batteries. Still, despite the general representation, four Northern States furnished the bulk of the Union troops. These were Ohio with 55 organizations, Indiana with 37, Illinois with 33, and Kentucky with 17. On the Confederate side Tennessee had 56 organizations at Chickamauga, Alabama had 36, Georgia 24, Mississippi 21, and Arkansas 16. In the Chattanooga movement Grant had 220 regiments of infantry and, with his cavalry and artillery, 261 organizations. Bragg had 163 regiments of infantry, 33 regiments of cavalry and 46 batteries, altogether 242 organizations. The distribution by States was a little wider, but the bulk of the troops were furnished by Ohio, Illinois and Indiana, Ohio having 69 organizations there, Illinois 55, Indiana 34, Missouri 17, New York 16, Pennsylvania 12, Iowa 11, and Wisconsin 10. On the Confederate side Tennessee furnished 54 organizations, Georgia 50, Alabama 44, Mississippi 13, and Carolina 15. The States have as a rule provided one memorial for each organization, making a spectacle which has no counterpart on any other battlefield in the world.

BATTLE OF CHICKAMAUGA.

Most Remarkable and Sanguinary of Modern Wars.

It was on the afternoon of Sept. 18, 1863, that the first shot was fired. All that day Bragg, who had been flanked out of Chattanooga, had been trying to get his army between Rosencrans and the City of Chattanooga, and Rosecrans, who had sent his army South in pursuit of Bragg, having discovered Bragg's design, was making an equally desperate effort to concentrate his scattered divisions between Bragg and the city. At that time the forest was primeval in denseness, and the underbrush so thick that it was impossible to see more than 100 yards ahead. Ignorant of each other's exact location, the two armies came nearer to each other. At daybreak on Saturday morning, Sept. 19, they came face to face in this forest of pines and Indian-like jungle of underbrush, and by 7:30 o'clock that morning the most remarkable battle of the civil war was raging in all its fury.

The losses were appalling. In the next forty-eight hours 26,000 men were killed, and neither side had won. At the end of two days both armies withdrew from the field. General Rosecrans retaining possession of Chattanooga, the objective point of the campaign. General Rosecrans had in action thirty brigades of infantry, five of cavalry, one of mounted infantry and thirty-three batteries, aggregating 56,160 officers and men. General Bragg had thirty-five brigades of infantry, ten of cavalry and about thirty batteries, aggregating probably 65,000 men. The percentage of mortality for the time of fighting is claimed to be greater than known in any battle in ancient or modern history.

But the battle had other features of a remarkable nature. As a general thing the armies knew of each other's approach. An attack being made or threatened by a large force was the signal for the smaller to retreat. The approach of one regiment upon another regiment was usually known to the eye of each. But at the battle of Chickamauga there was no warning, and hence no preparation. Unaware of their proximity, the two armies came face to face in a sudden and terrible crash, and the smoke from the guns of the men on one side mingled with the smoke of the guns of the men on the other. Often it was a hand-to-hand conflict. The denseness of the forest shortened the vision, and regiment met regiment almost at elbows.

The battle field proper is about six miles long north and south, and a little more than two miles wide east and west, this now being about the size of the ground reserved for the park. On this small plot of ground thousands and thousands of men met, fought and died in the bloodiest battle of the war. Brigade after brigade, regiment after regiment and division after division went up those pine-clad slopes only to fall back again, repulsed. Neither side knew at any time during the two days' battle what it had lost or what the other perhaps had gained.

For twenty-seven years after this memorable battle nothing was done to commemorate the spot. The underbrush was the same, and the forest denser than ever, for the trees which had been shot down or shattered had healed and grown again, stronger, bigger and taller than before. Once an enterprising gentleman started a sawmill in the vicinity, but quit the business at the end of a month with a choice assortment of ruined saws. For years and years no sawmill man would dare touch a piece of timber from the Chickamauga battle field, for he never knew when the teeth of his circular would plow into a shattered cannon ball or a nest of flattened bullets. For two days it fairly rained lead and iron in that forest, and bullets pattered like raindrops on the autumn leaves. No wonder the oaks and pines carry memories of the battle. For that reason this timber has never been of use to man except in the way of relics.

Jeff Hooster, of Kokomo, bet he could go around the court house square on the tops of the trees, jumping from one to the other like a flying squirrel. The first jump he missed the limb and fell on a sharp-pointed iron picket fence, tearing off a piece of flesh as large as a man's hand. He will not play flying squirrel again.

The millions of dead fish that have been scooped out of White river above the dam, near Anderson, and either buried or cremated, have left the water in a very foul condition. The smell is noticeable a half-mile from the stream. Fever is raging between that city and Moss Island, two miles below, as the result of the stench. The dam is condemned and will have to be torn out, thus freeing the putrid water.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

On the following morning the reserved, melancholy Lord Bayneham spent more than an hour in one of the finest toy-shops in London, and selected a parcel of toys that would gladden the heart of any child. He was punctual to his appointment, and found Captain Massey ready for him.

"The weather is fine; we shall have a glorious drive," said the Captain; "but what is this enormous parcel? It came some hours since, to be left here for you."

"It contains nothing but toys for Lionel," said Lord Bayneham, blushing like a school-girl as he spoke.

It was a glorious drive; the sweet May evening was full of beauty; earth and sky seemd to smile. The hawthorn and chestnut were in bloom, the fragrance of spring blossoms filled the air. They said but little. Captain Massey seemed lost in thought, and Lord Bayneham was dreaming of the May morning years ago when he had first met the fair young girl who seemed lost to him forever.

It was a sad face upon which Mrs. Massey gazed when she welcomed her old favorite to the house.

"My son told me how altered you were," she said, holding out both hands to Lord Bayneham.

"Life has not been a path of roses for me," he replied.

"Nor for any of us," interrupted the lady. "I have gathered more thorns than flowers."

Mrs. Massey was a stately gentlewoman, one of the old school, kind and charitable, yet dignified and reserved, and a firm believer in etiquette. If she had a fault, her son declared it was in being too frigidly correct and proper.

She was dressed as Lord Bayneham remembered always to have seen her, in the stiffest of brocades and the most costly of lace caps. She made many inquiries about Lady Bayneham and Miss Earle, yet her visitor thought there was something unusual in her manner. She talked more than he had ever heard her, and seemed afraid of a moment's silence. It was a relief when the child came in and ran straight up to Lord Bayneham.

Ah, what was it? Why did his eyes fill with tears as the tender arms clung to him? Why did the sweet childish voice seem to reach the depths of his heart, and stir fountains that had long been sealed and dry?

"My son tells me you have taken a wonderful fancy to this little boy," said Mrs. Massey. "He is a noble little fellow, and we are all fond of him."

"I have never loved a child before," said Lord Bayneham, and his lips trembled as he spoke; "and, in my solitary life I do not think I shall ever care so much for one again."

"Would you like to live with this gentleman, Lionel?" asked Mrs. Massey.

"Yes," said the child, "but I cannot, because I cannot leave mamma."

"I am to be introduced in proper form to-day," said Lord Bayneham; "what is my little friend's name? I shall ask permission to take him down to Bayneham with me."

Captain Massey smiled a strange smile that the Earl could not understand.

"Would you like to see Lionel's mamma and ask her permission?" said Mrs. Massey.

"Yes," replied Lord Bayneham; "if it would not be an intrusion."

"I can answer that it would not," said the lady. Her face was strangely pale, and Lord Bayneham wondered at the emotion he read there.

"She is in the boudoir here," said Mrs. Massey; "go and make your request, my lord."

"Will you introduce me?—the lady is a stranger; I shall need an introduction," said Lord Bayneham.

"Go alone," said Captain Massey; and even as he spoke Lord Bayneham noticed the change in his voice—the nervous, agitated expression of his face. "Go alone," continued the Captain; "Lionel will introduce you."

A strange tremor seized Lord Bayneham; a strange, vague hope came to him as he looked in those pale, agitated faces. He tried to speak and ask another question, but his lips seemed numb and dumb.

"Lionel," said Captain Massey, "go with the gentleman, and take him to your mamma."

The child gently laid his little hand on Lord Bayneham's and led him through the long drawing-room. A door at the other end of the apartment led to the boudoir. He turned the handle and opened it, slowly moving, as one whose senses are wrapped in a dream. He saw a small, pretty room, where fragrant flowers were blooming, and golden sunbeams came in through clouds of white lace. He saw—was this a dream?—a golden head raised as he entered, a beautiful face, sweet and pure and tender; he saw violet eyes full of tears, quivering lips that tried in vain to utter his name; he saw two little white hands clasped as he had seen them clasped years ago, and a thick mist swam before him, a noise as of rushing waters filled his ears. A little voice aroused him; the child ran from him to the lady.

"This is mamma," he said, proudly turning to Lord Bayneham.

It was no dream—it was his own wife clinging to him, her tender arms clasped round him, her beautiful face wet with tears so near his own, the golden head drooping on his breast. It was no fancy, no dream, but a real, glorious truth. Once before he had wept like a child—it was when he lost her.

Again the strength of his manhood seemed to desert him, and the warm tears fell upon the golden head.

"Claude," whispered a gentle voice, "can you ever forgive me—forgive me for doubting you, and leaving you? I can never pardon myself."

"The fault was my own," he replied; "I was jealous and impatient."

"Nobody speaks to me," said a pitiful voice, and a little face looked up in wonder; then Lord Bayneham remembered the boy—he had called Hilda mamma. He looked once into her face.

"Who is it?" he whispered—"this little one who calls you mother?"

For all answer she placed the child in his arms.

"It is your son," she said, "your son and mine."

"Do not scold me," she said, when that trance of happiness was broken, "do not scold me, Claude. When I left you I did not know that heaven would give me this priceless gift. My baby was born here, six months after I left your house. I meant to send him to you when he was old enough to leave me."

"Hush!" said Lord Bayneham; "do not say such words as those, Hilda, darling. This is a golden hour—we will not spoil it."

Then Lady Hilda, taking the little one, said: "Lionel, you must love this gentleman. You remember all I have told you of your own papa, whom you had never seen—how kind, and brave, and good he was. This is papa, and you must love him."

"I do love him," said the child, quietly; "I loved him yesterday, without knowing why."

"I have been too bewildered to ask how you came here," said Lord Bayneham to his wife.

"Let others tell that story for me," she said, quietly; "first let me explain why I left you, Claude. It was all a terrible mistake; we can speak freely—my oath binds me no longer, for Captain Massey told me yesterday my father is dead."

"I was with him," said Lord Bayneham, "and his last words were for you."

"I cannot tell how this secret weighed upon me," she continued. "My poor mother sought me at Bayneham; she came there to look at me and die. The poor sick woman who died at Firs cottage and lies in the little graveyard—she was my mother, Claude."

"How could you ever dream that I should love you less for that?" he said, kissing the beautiful face raised to his.

"From the day she told me her story and mine," concluded Lady Hilda, "my life was one long sorrow; I was wretched at keeping a secret from you, yet I dared not break my oath. Once, you know, Claude, I asked you what you should do if after marriage you found you had been mistaken in your wife, and had taken some one tainted with disgrace to your home; you said such a one must return to her friends."

"But how could I suppose those words applied to yourself?" said Lord Bayneham.

"You could not," she replied. "My father came, and my miserable secret weighed upon me with double force. I was bewildered. He has told you all, Claude? Ah, then, you know of the notes he wrote to me, of the interview I was compelled to have with him in the Lady's Walk. When you came that morning into my room and said that you knew all, I believed you had discovered my secret, and that your anger arose from that cause."

"I saw it afterward," said Lord Bayneham. "I only meant that I knew all the secret of your night walk. What a mistake it was, Hilda! What years of misery it has caused us! If you had but trusted me, darling, instead of going away!"

"If there is any excuse," said Lady Hilda, "it lies in the fact that I was half mad. Three days after I left home I was taken ill with a severe attack of brain fever, and the snow lay on the ground before I was myself again."

"And you have seen nothing of all my advertisements?" said Lord Bayneham.

"No," she replied; "when I left you I left all the world; when shelter was offered to me here, I accepted it on the condition that no one should see or hear of me, and that the news of the outer world should not be told to me. I thought I would soon die. It seemed to me then I had no right to Lady Hutton's money—no claim upon her fortune. I wanted to be dead to everything, since I could no longer live to you."

"Poor child!" said her husband, gently; "but why, at least, did you not tell me of Lionel's birth?"

"I meant to send him to you," she replied. "I did not forget that, although my son, he is your heir. I would have sent him in two more years. Remember, it has all been a mistake, Claude. I thought you would never allow me to return to Bayneham when you knew my secret."

A knock at the door interrupted Lady Hilda.

"Come in," she said, and Mrs. Massey entered, her face glowing with smiles.

"Did you know the lady?" she asked Lord Bayneham, who met her with a torrent of thanks. "My son is anxious to know if he may enter."

"Since we owe our happiness in a great measure to him," replied Lord Bayneham, "his request is very reasonable. Ah, Massey!" he cried, as the master of the house entered, "how am I to thank you for your great kindness. Now explain to me why and how I find my lost treasure here."

"It is a very long story," said Captain Massey, "but you shall hear every detail.

"It is more than three years since I received orders to go to India on an especial and confidential mission. The day before starting I went to Euston Square to inquire about some luggage sent for me. There was great confusion at the station, owing to the arrival of several trains. I was standing on the platform watching the scene with some amusement, when my attention was attracted by a lady leaving a first-class carriage. She wore a cloak and a thick veil; she seemed uncertain where to go—lost and bewildered. I saw her go to one of the seats and place herself there. For one whole hour she rested there, and I watched her. She did not appear to be waiting for any one, and no one took any heed of her. Then she rose, and stood for a few minutes as though uncertain what to do. 'She seems bewildered with trouble,' I said to myself; 'I wonder if I could help her?'

"I went very respectfully up to her, and raising my hat, asked if I could be of any service to her. She did not seem to understand me. When I repeated the question she threw back her veil, and looked at me with wild, woful eyes. Imagine my horror at recognizing in this grieving, bewildered lady no other than the young Countess of Bayneham, Lady Hutton's ward.

"'Lady Bayneham,' I said, 'do you not know me? I am Captain Massey, your husband's friend.'

"'Yes, I know you,' she replied; then she laid her hand on my arm. 'Will you help me, Captain Massey,' she said, humbly; 'I have left home and my husband forever. I feel very ill; my brain is on fire, I believe. Can you take me somewhere, where I can lie down to die?'

"I looked at her in utter amaze; the lovely, brilliant Lady of Bayneham, here in this deplorable state?

"'Does Lord Bayneham know?' I began, but she interrupted me.

"'If you cannot take my word on trust,' she said, 'leave me; I can bear no questions—I cannot endure the sound of his name. If you will befriend me, take me from here.'

"Her face was deadly pale, and her eyes burned with a wild, strange light; she trembled violently. My only fear was lest she should fall; she looked like a bruised, broken lily.

"'I will befriend you, Lady Bayneham,' I said; 'try and walk a few steps with me. I will take you to my mother's and leave you in her charge.'

"As I have told you, on the morning following I was to start for India; time, therefore, was very precious. We walked out of the station yard, and then I took a cab. It was a long drive to my mother's house here at Kew. Lady Bayneham never once spoke. She sat white and cold and still as a marble statue.

"My dear mother was amazed to see me return so accompanied, and her amazement was increased when she knew it was Lady Bayneham whom I had brought to find refuge under her roof.

"That night Lady Bayneham told us part of her story. She laid no blame upon you, but much upon herself. She said she had left home because you knew the story of her parentage and were displeased; she would not wait until you sent her away; and she seemed so fearfully agitated at the mention of return that we agreed it was better to defer it until she should have regained health and strength.

"Lady Hilda made a compact with us; we promised entire and perfect secrecy as to her place of concealment—we promised that under the shlter of our roof she should be hidden from that outer world she dreaded so much, and that no news of it should be told to her. She was to be as one dead in life. We promised all she asked. My mother dared not oppose one word, so critical was her state. In the event of her death, you, Lord Bayneham, were to be sent for. She begged us to call her by her mother's name of Hurst, and we did so.

"I never saw her from that night until a few days ago. I set sail for India, and the news came to me that the unhappy lady was lying ill of brain fever, and the doctors despaired of her life.

"For many long weeks she lay unconscious of all around her. Then I heard that under the shelter of our roof the heir of Bayneham was born. I returned a few days since, and found him a beautiful, noble little fellow. I would not remain in my mother's house, Bayneham; it has been sacred to your wife. I shall always believe Providence led me to the gardens yesterday. But for that, the mistake would never have been explained. When I reached home and told your wife your story, I knew how much she loved you."

"God bless you, Massey!" exclaimed Lord Bayneham; "you are the truest friend man ever had. Thank you, and you, madame," he continued, turning to Mrs. Massey; "thank you for your care and love of my dear wife."

"She has been like a beloved daughter to me," said the old lady; "having lived with her, I am at a loss how to live without her. I often fancied that the advertisements I read so constantly applied to her, but I dared not mention them. I wished her to grow quite strong and well before again discussing the subject of her return."

ANOTHER MYTH EXPLODED.

The Story of Jackson's Cotton Bale Breastworks a Mere Fiction.

There are few of the school boys of several generations preceding the present who do not remember being taught that Gen. Jackson won the battle of New Orleans by throwing up a breastwork of cotton bales and meeting the British assault behind them.

A dramatic account of this was in all the school histories and several others, and the novelty of the affair appealed vividly to the imagination. The cold facts of later history prove this all to have been fiction. Henry Adams, in his history of Madison's administration, describes the battle of New Orleans and mentions no such feature. McMaster, in his latest volume, refers to the story in a note only to say that there were two or three cotton bales used in one place, and they were either set on fire or knocked out at once.

Jackson's line of breastworks was of earth irregularly thrown up and of varying height along its length. The trained sharpshooters of the West did great work as marksmen behind it, and so galled the heavily laden British troops that they had no alternative but to be shot or retreat before the American line.

The school book story used to be that the Americans lost six killed and seven wounded. McMasters places the figures of killed and wounded at seventy. The British, it seems, were not all repulsed according to the popular story. The right line of the American troops was driven in, and the British left advanced a mile in the rear of Jackson on the way to New Orleans.

He was really flanked by this success, but the terrific slaughter he inflicted upon the British in the center, involving the death of the first and second generals in command, completely dispirited them and induced the return of that wing of their army that was on the way to the city.—Boston Herald.

Economy in Spelling.

Some French statistician has turned himself loose on the subject of wasted words and letters. The French and English languages are, as he proves with many figures, especially open to criticism in this matter, and money is lost every year by lack of verbal economy. The French language contains 13 per cent of useless letters. There are 6,800 journals published in the language, and they print 108,000,000,000 letters every year, so that 14,200,000,000 words are printed, not because they are needed, but because they have come to be used in the French language as it is spoken. The writer computes that $1,988,000 is the annual cost of this useless expenditure of printers' ink in France alone.

Of journals printed in the English language there are 17,000, and they are larger. Twelve per cent of our printed letters are skipped over by the tongues pronouncing the words, and so $7,000,000 is thrown away. Useless letters, he goes on to say, fill up a large amount of space on paper, and in this way is lost $15,600,000 in France. The time taken up in writing these useless letters, if estimated at $5 a day per journalist, is worth $4,500,000. Grand total, $32,600,000.—Baltimore Sun.

Thoughtful and Gallant.

In a recent trial at Sienna, the beauty of a servant girl summoned as a witness had a dramatic effect on judge, jury and counsel. While undergoing examination she stood facing the magistrate, who, in a commendable spirit of justice and gallantry, said:

"I beg you, my pretty girl, to turn also toward the jury, as I do not wish it to be said that I alone have the privilege of admiring your beauty."

Italy has a greater number of orders of nobility than any other European country. Any foreigner who has the money to pay for it can secure an Italian order to wear on his coat, and thus be in fashion when he goes to a reception in an European city.

MUSTER DAYS OF OLD.

FESTIVAL IN WHICH OUR GRANDFATHERS DELIGHTED.

Militia Laws of the States—What a Militiaman Was Required to Have on Muster Day—The Amenities of the Occasion.

Source of Mirth.

There are many elderly men still living in this country who remember the "muster days" of half a century ago, and what events they were in the course of the year to those country districts whose local happenings were few and comparatively unimportant. All or nearly all the States had militia laws, and though for the most part these were a dead letter on the statute books, there were from time to time efforts made to carry them out by assembling as many of the male population as could be induced to come on a stated day for the nominal purpose of drill. Theoretically every man of militia age was bound to come, but practically nobody came who did not feel like it, and those who did drilled much as they pleased, which was not very much, the most of the day being spent in bartering, horse racing, or other ways familiar to the country folk of that day when they got together. In fact, in not a few parts of the country, particularly in the South, the spring and fall muster days were made semi-annual fetes, in which the original purpose of the gatherings was quite lost sight of in the diversions they inspired.

According to the militia laws of most of the States, there were company musters at least twice a year; often these were held quarterly, while once a year there was a regimental or brigade muster, at some central town in the district, which was indeed a very grand occasion and gave an opportunity to the regimental and brigade officers for the display of all their finery. These opportunities, however, golden as they were, did not occur often enough to fix themselves in the popular mind as did the company muster, and whenever muster day is mentioned in our earlier annals, unless otherwise specified, the company muster is understood to be meant.

Legally, every man was not only bound to be present, but was bound to come properly equipped for military duty, or, as one such law specified, "with one gun and a sufficient ramrod and bayonet, with two flints, one powder horn, one bag of bullets, one haversack with two days' provisions, one belt," and various other articles necessary to the equipment of a soldier. As a matter of fact, however, when the company actually assembled for drill, military equipments were conspicuous by their absence. If there were any muskets with bayonets, they were probably relics of the war of independence, while the majority of the company were provided with ordinary rifles or fowling pieces, though an occasional old-fashioned blunderbuss put in an appearance, and not a few, in default of guns, had hoe handles, walking canes and cornstalks. Those who carried firearms, as a rule, were also provided with powder horns and bags of bullets; a few had belts, but of the haversacks with provisions there was not a trace, since most lived within easy reach of their own homes, and could see no use in carrying victuals to the muster only to carry them back again. Neither was any attempt made at uniform, save in the case of some revolutionary veteran or soldier of 1812, who was proud of his military record and glad of the chance to sport his uniform. As to the rest, each wore what he had, or what pleased him best, and next to the man in regimentals would stand a bold militia man in his shirt sleeves and with but one suspender, while beyond him would be ranged men with and without coats, men with "beaver hats," with straw hats, with coonskin caps, the tail hanging down behind, with felt or "wool" hats, the brims flapping over their eyes.

But these things are incongruous only in the eyes of those who are looking for incongruities, and the militiamen of our early days were little accustomed to notice trifles like these. Not dandies themselves, they despised dandyism in others, and the man with a "boiled shirt," the man with a pair of shining boots, or the man with tight-fitting gloves, would have been regarded much as a sensible, well-dressed man of the present day regards a dude. They put on no airs themselves; they would tolerate no airs in others. They lived plainly, dressed plainly, and talked as plainly as they dressed and lived.

Each company elected its own officers, the most popular man in the crowd being the captain. Holding his office as the result of his popularity it was naturally expected that this officer would not be too hard on the men; that is to say, that he would drill them no longer than was absolutely necessary to comply with the law, and if he saw his way clear to dispense with everything but the roll-call, so much the better, for then there would be the more time left for the other business of the day. The captain generally kept this matter in mind, too, and the drilling that was done was frequently of a perfunctory and nominal character.

The muster day could be at once distinguished from all other days by the most casual visitor to the district or village where the muster was to take place. Early in the morning countrymen would begin to arrive, some on horseback some on foot, three out of five attended by one or more dogs, generally curs of very low degree. As soon as the arrivals had put up their horses, by hitching them to a convenient bough in the grove that was always near the "training ground," they proceeded to "refresh" at the country store, and then joining their friends in the grove near by, began the discussion of topics of live interest, such as the condition of the growing crops, the state of local politics, the probabilities of national issues, and such other matters of moment as occurred to them at the time as worthy of consideration. The discussions were not without heat and fervor, and occasionally a difference of opinion took place among friends that could only be settled by an appeal to arms. In such cases a ring was formed, and the friends of the disputants standing by to see fair play, the difficulty was speedily adjusted by the use of nature's weapons. No prize was offered, save the consciousness of victory well earned, but this was enough, and when the battle was over, and one of the contestants had cried "enough," there was no doubt in the mind of the bystanders as to which was the better man.

The rules of the prize ring were not in the least regarded in these amateur contests for victory. A little of everything was allowed. The fighters bit, kicked, scratched, gouged, pulled hair, struck anywhere they could, and in short went into the contest, not for the purpose of observing a set of rules, but of winning a victory.

About such places there were always noted characters who appeared to better advantage at muster than anywhere else. Sixty years ago, in East Tennessee, there was a notable fighter named Joe Collins. Joe was always spoiling for a fight, and rarely allowed a muster day to pass without one. His usual costume was a pair of linsey-wolsey unmentionables, a pair of moccasins, a wool hat and a shirt of the same material, worn open at the neck. When Joe had a little difference of opinion with any one which he deemed it desirable to settle at once, he caught his shirt at the back of his neck, gave it a fling that sometimes threw it ten steps away, and was ready for the battle.

The local politician was another character who made himself prominent at the musters. They were notable occasions for making votes, and when the election was not distant, the candidates were always numerous. The qualifications for electioneering were somewhat different then, it is true, but the principle was the same. The candidate of those days was an adept in "shooting for beef," in pitching quoits and in various other amusements of that kind, and resorted to any of them to make himself popular, always, however, first and last, relying on his treating abilities to clinch whatever popularity he might be able to gain by other means. He might be canvassing for a State or county office, or only for the captaincy of the company at the next election, but the means were the same.

The muster was generally a holiday for the colored folks, and well did they improve it. Dressed in their best, they flocked to the scene, and enjoyed the military maneuvers as much or even more than the sisters and other female relatives of the hardy veterans. But their enjoyment was not confined to looking at the soldiers. In the intervals of military evolutions, they danced to the music of a solitary fiddle, and no matter how great the heat of the sun or how profuse the perspiration that poured down their sable skins, they never allowed such trifles as heat or perspiration to interfere with their pleasure. Among their number, however, were always some who had an eye to business, and on every muster ground an old "mammy," with a little stand of gingercakes, apples, soda water or watermelons, was a familiar figure.

To the expert in military affairs the muster days were a source of boundless mirth, but for all that they had their uses. They kept up a military spirit in the people at a time when a military spirit was a necessity. A country born amid the clash of arms naturally turned towards the profession of arms, and the fact that we did not become a nation of soldiers was due to other causes. In the early days, Indian fighting was a matter of daily occurrence all along the frontier, and some show of military organization was an absolute necessity. While the Indian wars were on, in the districts most exposed to Indian raids, the militia musters were stern realities, but as adventurous men gradually pushed the frontier further on to the West, the districts left behind found the militia drill a superfluity; little by little it was converted that there was no need for drilling, that any number of troops that might be necessary for the defense of the country could be raised in a month, no one could see any particular necessity for drilling in the sun, and so the muster day, with its legal provisions of bayonets and flints, haversacks and bags of bullets, quietly passed into disuse, and finally almost into oblivion.

Didn't Like Mark Twain's Stories.

About this time Mark Twain came to visit us, and he had a habit of making midday lunch his principal meal, so when 6 o'clock dinner came he would walk up and down the room, crossing it diagonally, and telling us the most amusing stories while we ate our dinner. He always put on low-heeled slippers for this promenade, and something about the singularity of the proceeding as a whole inspired Snap with distrust. He followed Mr. Clemens up and down, up and down, the room, occasionally sniffing at the low-heeled slippers; and when a louder burst of laughter than usual greeted some of the delightful stories, Snap would growl and try to worry the peripatetic footgear, until Mr. Clemens became conscious of him, and slowly turned a wondering consideration upon him.—St. Nicholas.

The Speed of Electricity.

The speed of electricity under the most favorable conditions is now established to be 180,000 miles a second. What this enormous speed implies is somewhat dimly suggested by an illustration recently used by the eminent scientist Sir Robert Bell. Suppose that a row of telegraph posts 25,000 miles long were erected around the earth at the equator. Suppose that a wire were stretched upon these posts for this circuit of 25,000 miles, and that then another complete circuit was taken by the same wire around the same posts, and then another and yet another. In fact, let the wire be wound no fewer than seven times completely about this great globe. We should then find that an electric signal sent into the wire at one end would accomplish the circuit in one second of time.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

At last accounts the woman who started the shirt waist fashion had more followers than the Lord.

BUSINESS OUTLOOK

A good article on the present business conditions is a recent letter received by John Robbins, from a business house he has relations. It is Wells & Nellegar Co. of Chicago, jobbers in hardware and cutlery, and reads:

"You will see written up in the papers from time to time articles showing both sides of the picture. One day you will think to read the article that nails, iron, etc., are going to $5.00 a keg. The next day some poor fellow who is short on material of this kind will get up an article stating that the boom is about to burst. We have every confidence in the present condition of the iron and steel market, for, if you will stop to think for a moment you will recall that this country has been standing still for 5 years and only such improvements have been put forth as were an absolute necessity. The population has been increasing rapidly and the country is settling up with a wonderful degree of rapidity, and when it comes to the matter of the steel industry, with these prosperous conditions staring the country in the face, steel makers have awakened up all at the moment to realize that the demand for steel and iron for a period of years is to be unprecedented in the history of this nation.

If you will recall the various towns that you have visited, you will see that Electric Lines and Cable cars are being put in, calling for tremendous tonage of steel and iron, and doing away, unfortunately, with horse flesh, that under other circumstances would be required, which is the occasion of the low price of horses.

Furthermore, the railroads that are now built require in their repairs a tremendous tonage, that would give the mills of this country enough orders to keep them running a good share of the time if there were no other industries beside that. As the country prospers in good crops, etc., these railroads will build extensions call for still greater tonage of steel. There is scarcely a town hall, school house, or factory built anywhere on the line of your travels that do not use to a greater or less extent many tons of steel and iron, that 5 years ago was never thought of.

Ships are being built of steel, and in the handling of a larger quantity of ore from the Lake Superior region to Chicago, Cleveland and Buffalo, I am informed that it will require two ships where we have had one, as the demand is so great. Even canal boats are now being built of steel, and in the construction of cars, steel is very largely used in the frame work, so that you will readily see that in these few ways that I have indicated, and there are thousands of others, the present prices of steel billets and pig iron, which is where all of our advances originate, have come to stay, and we predict that in '96 you may look for much higher prices than we are having to-day. By comparison the prices that we are selling goods at to-day have assumed about the normal condition of 3 years ago.

We were shown a bonafide order a day or two since taken from the Standard Oil Company, for 65,000 tons of hoop iron. This is nearly enough to keep one mill going for a year; we speak of this to show you what the requirements of the country are, that we really know nothing about."

Successful Treatment.

AUBURN JUNCTION, Sept. 13, '95

To whom it may concern:

This is to testify that five years ago while working at the sawmill of A. B. Nickey & Son, I became ruptured in the left side, from which I have suffered ever since and because of which I could not do any heavy or lifting work any such work gave me severe pain. Hearing of Dr. Casebeer's success in treating ruptures, I called upon him when at Auburn and put myself in his hands for treatment. After one or two treatments I felt stronger and five treatments have made me sound and well. I now feel as strong and sound and am now doing as hard work as I ever did. I did not lose a day from work on account of the treatment and am only surprised at the doctor's success in curing me so soon and so effectually. The Fidelity Rupture Cure is a success.

A Close Call

The many friends of Scott Blain, in this and Whitley and Noble counties, will be interested to learn that he was in the big railroad holdup near Waupaca, Wis., Thursday night. It was his passenger train or rather the train his engine was drawing and when he saw a lantern held up, near a lot of ties and old rails on the track he slowed up as quick as he could but could not stop in time. His engine struck the pile of ties and was thrown from the track and ran on the ties and then on the ground for about 300 feet. But as the engine did not turn over, he was not hurt. The train was under fire of the robbers over an hour but no one was hit, though the cars showed many bullet marks. The safe in the express car had been locked when it left St. Paul, when the train left, and even the express messenger did not know the combination. The robbers used a dozen sticks of dynamite to blow it open, but failed and then ran off. The engineer, Scott Blain, who is a cousin of the COURIER family, tells his part of the story in brief as follows:

"I saw their signal and knew it was not our men. I applied the air brakes, but before I could stop the train we were off the track. When the shooting commenced I jumped off the cab and laid down in the high grass. They covered my fireman with their guns, but did not notice me. I crawled into the woods, got away and came down to Waupaca to report."

James W. McClellen Dead.

Wils McClellan died to-day noon. He originally had some sort of fever and after this appeared to be under control, he seemed to take a relapse. All was done for him that the best medical skill could do, but in vain. The loving care of his wife and the brotherly assistance of the Maccabees, were constant and unremitting. This morning came a serious hemorrhage of the lungs and in his weakened state it proved fatal. The funeral is at the Lutheran church Thursday, Sept 26, at 2 p. m. services by Rev. J. D Brosy. The interment is at Woodlawn. Mr. McClellan was thirty-one years old, and leaves an estimable wife and little child to mourn his early death.

As To News

A person never knows where to get the news. But as we passed Brown, Culbertson & Boland's Hardware store they called us in and related what Dan Welch (and his wife verified the statement) said about corn and corn cutting. It is necessary to tell about his big corn as the incident that occured when cutting the last shock will indicate the growth of the corn. Before relating the incident we will say that Mr Boland has vouched for the truth of the statement as Mr. Welch is an irishman and he says he has never known of an Irishman telling a lie. Mr Welch is also a brother in-law of H. R. Culbertson, and Hugh says he does all the lying for the firm and also the family. Not being entirely satisfied about the matter we took W. B. Brown and Frank Draggoo to the 6th street entrance to their store and their known record for truth and veracity with their candid way of telling it soon convinced us we could publish the item as told in their store and still maintain our reputation.

Mr. Welch has cleared off the large swamp on the east end of his farm which has long been headquarters for rattlesnakes. He finished cutting corn last Saturday and they treed a coon, on one corn stalk (a full grown coon and stalk both) and cut it down and killed the coon and at the last shock of corn they killed seven rattlesnakes. There was some dispute as to whether or not the coon was killed in falling but we have sent a special COURIER News gatherer to the scene to get the exact news, who will report later. Rattles on exhibition at B., C. & B.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BUTLER.

Carmie Carr who recently returned from Wis., has been confined to his bed for many of the past week with typoid fever. One of his little sons has been suffering from a similar cause. He is stopping with his mother west of town.

J. A. Campbell was called to Hudson last week to adjust a small lightning loss on a dwelling house owned by Mrs. Mary Teeters at that place.

T. C. Fralich, wife and children of Chicago are visiting Butler friends and seeing the Fair.

Jacob Helwig and family are improving, with hopes of early restoration to health.

On last Friday evening the spirit of one of Butler's long suffering and patient wives took its flight to a land of rest, buoyant with hopes of a bright immortality.

A few years ago there resided in a neighboring town, a young lady the only daughter of a devoted christian mother and a father whose worldly possessions enabled him to gratify all her reasonable wants, reared in the lap of luxury with every want supplied and a good education and many accomplishments. She was the envy of her associates. Her mother soon passed away when another entirely unlike her own, soon took her mother's place. This compelled her to seek a home with an aunt. About her seventeenth year she was united in marriage with a brilliant and promising young physician who rose rapidly to an envied place among his handicraft, but as he prospered temporally, he became more and more lost to every noble sentiment taught him by a good christian mother. His noble young wife was neglected and soon after wholly abandoned, to care for herself and a little daughter that had blessed their union, while the profligate husband squandered his earnings in vice. She took up her burden with womanly fortitude and bravely battled alone for bread, During this period her wealthy friends seemed to have deserted her. During all she seemed to be patient and forgiving and passed away apparently at peace with all. After her death her wealthy relatives came and carried away the senseless clay, whose noble tenant they had seemingly so sorely neglected.

A new store was opened in the Sudro Worth building last week. It is advertised as the "Sheriff Store".

A young man by the name of Rosenberry suffered severe shaking up last Saturday night as a result of rapid and careless riding on the street. He ran squarely into the large and spirited horse driven by Clyde Bleker, popping between the front and rear legs of the horse and on under the buggy, coming out but little worse for the tumble,—but the wheel—it was a shapeless mass of ruins, and what was worse, it was a borrowed wheel. We wonder why wheelmet can never get any sense pounded in them. They ought, always to approach any uncertain or unseen place with extreme care, and many accidents would be avoided.

Belle Lewis wife of Dr. Lewis died at her residence in the May Block on North Broadway last Friday night. She leaves a little daughter about nine years old. She was a daughter of Lewis Hendry of Angola. Her remains were removed to Angola by her father on Saturday evening after a short funeral service at the M. E. church Her funeral service took place at Ango a last Tuesday.

CONCORD

Mrs. Burley of Auburn is visiting her daughter Mrs. J. B. Gibford and her son D. D. Burgley near St. Joe.

Belle Milton left Tuesday for Marion where she will join her father,

Mrs. Hollabaugh of Fostoria, O., was called here by the serious illness of her daughter Mrs, Amanda Rowe, Dr, Casebeer was called and by close investigation found her in a critical condition and it was decided for her to go to Ft. Wayne for treatment. Later we understand she has undergone her surgical operation successfully. Her mother is a lady of considerable means and all that money can do is being done for the restoration of her daughter's health.

J. B, Draggoo lost one of his best horses Saturday. On an examination found his intestines knotted in several places.

G. W, Draggoo is attending the Fort Wayne races.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Culbertson are proud over their second daughter.

The farmers are slightly despondent over the prospects of their new sown wheat, owing to the dry and exceedingly hot weather.

Mrs. Charlie Reasoner, a few days ago underwent her internal operation has surpassed the expectation of her attending physicians and neighbors. Great praise is due Mrs. Ward and also the neighbors who so nobly responded to her call for the benefit of Mrs. R. as she would have left so many little children.

Little Walter Baker is much improved at this writing.

Mrs. Kinmont Hurt

Alex. Kinmont, who came down from Angolo last week, and on Friday afternoon. To-day, Mr. Eckhart received a letter from him saying that as they were going home that evening, when they got to the old Dan. Krum farm north of Waterloo, his horse, from some cause he cannot understand. began to kick and kept it up till the shafts were demolished. Mrs. Kinmount was thrown out and her ankle broken. She was taken to the Krum house where T. Hammon now lives and she was well cared for and Dr. Wood sent for. She is now getting along fairly well.

Are positively cured by

TRADE BOOTH'S HYOMEI MARK
"DRI-AYR"

326 West 33rd St. New York, July 22, 1895.

Dear Mr. Booth:

Mrs Stryker and I use the little Pocket Inhaler daily, and we regard it as a splendid companion. One of us has suffered many years with asthma, and the other from difficulty in breathing. After using Hyomei for nearly a month, we both find ourselves greatly relieved, and we are recommending the remedy to our friends.

REV. DR. PETER STRYKER
Pastor 34th St. Reformed Church

THE AUSTRALIAN DRY AIR CURE FOR HAY FEVER, BRONCHITIS, DIPTHERIA, CATARRH, ASTHMA. ETC.

The air, thoroughly charged with Hyomei is inhaled through the Pocket Inhaler at the mouth, and, after permeating the minutest air cells, is slowly exhaled through the nose. It is aromatic, delightful to inhale, inexpensive, and gives immediate relief. It stops all spasmodic coughing instantly, clears the voice, expands the lungs and increases the breathing capacity.

For sale by all first-class druggists, or POCKET INHALER OUTFIT COMPLETE, BY MAIL, $1.00,

With full directions for use. If you are still skeptical, send me your address, and my pamphlet shall prove that HYOMEI does cure Are you open to conviction?

Kendallville fair Sept. 30 to Oct. 4.

There are many good reasons why you should use One Minute Cough Cure. There are no reasons why you should not, if in need of help. The only harmless remedy that produces immediate results.

Attend the fair at Kendallville. Big premiums, fine races and great attractions.

J. G. Clapp was taken out to Kutzner's reunion yesterday afternoon, where he took three different pictures of the crowd. Mr. Clapp does elegant out-door work.

Cal Eunselman and wife and Mrs. Martha Britton left over the Wabash this morning for Indianapolis. They will attend the State Fair that is in session there this week.

J. E. Pomeroy returned this morning from a few weeks visit with relatives in Ohio. His wife remained at her home in Butler. She will be here next week, when they will look up a residence.

Mrs. Silver has been appointed inspector for the various corps of the W. R. C. in this part of the state. This includes Ligonier, Albion, Hamilton, Butler, Fremont, Dunkirk, Garrett, Angola Lagrange, Waterloo and Auburn.

A. G. Bartley of Magic, Pa., writes: I feel it a duty of mine to inform you and the public that De Witt's Witch Hazel Salve cured me of a very bad case of eczema. It also cured my boy of a running sore on his leg.

Cooper Altenburg, of Little Rock Arkansas, an Auburn boy of early days has been here a few days visiting old friends He had been at the reunion at Louisville and came up here while so near to us. His son-law and daughter of Kentucky were with him also.

At 8 o'clock to night at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Cal Grube, southwest of town will occur the marriage of their only daughter, Allie to George Bishop, Rev. Palmer of Huntington officiating. The COURIER extends congratulations.

J. E. Buchanan, who has purchased the Albion New Era, is the young man, who for some time studied law in the office of J. E. and J. H. Rose of this place. He is a young man of good character, and we think of fair ability. But the field he enters will try all his good qualities. As a friend to him and his family, the COURIER hopes he may succeed.

To night at sunset will begin the year 5656 of the Jewish calendar. The new year is known as "Rosh-hash shonah." This first day of the year is supposed to be the great day of judgment. According to rabbinical theology, on this day "God sets in judgment over the deeds of mankind. Two scrolls are open before him—one of the living the, other of the dead—into which, according to merit or divine wisdom, the heavenly arbitor of human fate records the name of men. On this day the decree goes forth whether life or death, plenty or poverty, peace or war shall befall men and countries."

Thursday's Daily.

Remember the Fair at Ligonier Sept 24 to 27.

Miss Kate Perfect, of Pleasant Lake, was the guest yesterday of Mrs. E. P. Rehser.

If you are in need of a watch there is no better place on earth to buy one than at F. J. Yeabera's jewelry store.

Herman Frechlich of Toledo has been in town a few days visiting friends. He is the guest of Chas. Eckhart and John St Clair, both old friends.

The Standard Sewing Machine is without a doubt the best machine for a family now on the market. Why? Because they run easy, fast, quiet and are the most durable. d3tw38 40

A. F. Clarke gave the COURIER some extra fine samples of his raising of potatoes this summer. He raises the Burbank and Early Rose, and must have had a big yield.

The Calumet blast furnaces in South Chicago that have been idle for three years, are going to start up again. It was the largest plant of its kind, when it was running, and will soon take lead again.

Marriage licenses have been issued up to date to Sam McKinley and Lillian Gump, John E. Griffin and Alda Lige, Charles Guahwa and Lizzie Shaffer, Walter Christinsen and Louisa Shutt, George Bishop and Allie Grube.

Commissioners Henderson and Hofelder and Supt. of County Farm, Bartels, went to Rochester this morning. The laying of the corner stone for the new court house occurs there to day and the gentlemen were invited for this occasion.

H. L. Hutton, secretary of the Angola fair called on us to-day. They expect an excellent fair this year. Their races especially will be good as considerable money is offered. Wednesday will be devoted to bicycle races, only. The dates our Oct. 8 to 11.

Sammie Davenport had a discouraging accident last evening. He was playing when he got entangled in the ropes he was using and was thrown in such a way as to put his knee out of joint. Dr. Vesta Swarts set it and he is resting well. But it takes a while to get it right.

Concord Cor St. Joe News:—Frank E. Draggoo of Auburn arrived from his outing trip to Petoskey, Mich., last Saturday evening and spent the Sabbath day with his parents at this place. He relates some wonderful fish stories. Some of the fish caught by the parties who went from Auburn the time he went were of immense size and plenty of them.

A Goshen man has started a new industry in that city. He is building play houses for children. The houses are so constructed as to be taken down on short notice. They are framed and put up with hooks dispensing with the use of nails or screws. The houses are covered with canvas, and after the summer is over may be moved indoors to accommodate their youthful inhabitants.

Friday's Daily.

If your bicycle needs repairing take it ty F. J. Yeabera's jewelry store and have it done right. d3tw38-40

The G. R. & I. will run a Farmer's Excursion to Grand Rapids, Oct. 8th. Fare from LaOtto $1.50 for the round trip.

Born, Sept. 19, 1895, to Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Rafter——a little Rafter——a fine little girl. And we send congratulations.

Mrs. Mary Barnes has returned, after an extended visit with friends in the east.

Mrs Phil. Plum, of Waterloo was in town this afternoon.

James Henderson, John Hoffelder and August Bartels returned to-day from Rochester.

It is truth in medicine that the smallest dose, that preforms a cure is the best. De Witt's Little Early Riser are the smallest pills, will preform a cure, and are the best.

Butter and eggs wanted at the PRINCESS store, four doors north of Farmers Bank. 37 39

Phil Myers and Joe Williamson have put down a well for Geo. Lanning. It is a good one too.

The new buildings at the Eckhart factory are nearly completed.

The Auburn Musical Club will render an interesting program at the next visitors' night. Sept. 30th.

Mrs. Dr. Siver, of Fort Wayne, was here a few hours to day the guest of her parents, Judge and Mrs. McClellan.

The healing properties of De Witt's Witch Hazel Salve are well known. It cures eczema, skin skin affections and is simply a perfect remedy for piles.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Reesch Gastown, a baby girl, weight 7½. Dr. Buchtel reports mother and child as doing nicely.

Say, why don't you try De Witt's Little Early Risers? These little pills cure headache, indigestion and constipation. They're small, but do the work.

Sam Campbell has been suffering for several days with rheumatism. To-day he was using Cory Shuger's bicycle and now he moves over the sidewalks quite rapidly.

Acts at once, never fails, One Minute Cough Cure. A remedy for asthma and that feverish condition which accompanies a severe cold. The only harmless remedy that produces immediate results.

J. P. Kandel, of Muncie, is in town, having arrived here last evening. He will be in town several days, and out with his father, Jacob Kandel in Richland. He reports business good for him and Frank Boyer, his partner, in the making of buggies.

As we were sitting in our sanctum today wondering what we would write about next. J. J. Lehner of Corunna, stepped in and laid down $1.50 and said "Send me the WEEKLY COURIER for a year." By the way, this is just what people are doing all over this county. They know that the COURIER contains more original matter each week than any other paper in the county. We do not use boiler plates but select the best matter from the DAILY each day. We are pleased to meet such men as Mr. Lehner.

October 15, 16, 17 and 18, are the dates for the Centennial Celebration at Fort Wayne. It will be 101 years from the time Gen Wayne built the old fort near meeting of the two rivers. They expect to have the grandest blowout in the history of the city.

Miss Ethel McKay played an excellent solo at school to day. She is a musician of rare ability, and takes pleasure in breaking the monotony of school life.

Oscar Clark who has been helper at the Lake Shore depot, has gone to Litchfield, Mich. where he has a similar job.

If you try a Standard Sewing Machine and get the good points about it you will buy no other. d3tw38-40

John Zimmerman and wife left this afternoon over the Lake Shore for Chattanooga, Tenn.

F. J. Yeabera, the Auburn jeweler, sells the Standard Sewing Machine. He always handles the best of everything.

A. M. Bailey, a well known citizen of Eugene, Oregon, says his wife has for years been troubled with chronic diarrhœa and used many remedies with little relief until she tried Chamberlain's Colic Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy, which has cured her sound and well. Give it a trial and you will be surprised at the prompt relief it affords. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord, druggists.

There is considerable feeling among some of the teachers in this county because they did not get a school. The fact is that Supt. Merica is not to blame for this State Superintendent Geeting has sent notice to all the county superintendents in the state that the examination of teachers will be made more rigid and difficult on account of a superfluous supply. He thinks by making the examination more difficult the number will not only be decreased but the service will be improved. While the desired end may be reached the teachers are not likely to take kindly to the new departure.

To Cure a Cold.

While in Chicago, Mr. Charles L. Kahler, a prominent shoe merchant of Des Moines, Iowa, had quite a time of it. He took such a severe cold that he could hardly talk or navigate, but the prompt use of Chamberlain's Cough remedy cured him of his cold so quickly that others at the hotel who had bad colds followed his example and half a dozen persons ordered it from the nearest drug store. They were profuse in their thanks to Mr Kahler for telling them how to cure a bad cold so quickly. For sale by Robbins & McCord, druggists.

Saturday's Daily.

A fine baby girl was born to Mr. and Mrs. Otis Rahl in Stamets Addition yesterday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Weaver left last Tuesday for Canton and New Berlin, O., where they will visit friends a few days.

You are respectfully invited to attend the Kendallville fair Sept. 30 to Oct. 4. It will be the finest exhibition ever held by that association.

Elton Campbell of Detroit writes us he has been quite sick and as soon as he is able to travel will go to Peru to the hospital which the Wabash has at that place.

Stomach and Bowel Complaints are best relieved by the timely use of De Witt's Colic & Cholera Cure. Insist on having this preparation. Don't take any other.

Nothing so distressing as a hacking cough. Nothing so foolish as to suffer from it. Nothing so dangerous if allowed to continue. One Minute Cough Cure gives immediate relief.

Mr. York has word from his wife at Coldwater, that she is no better, she having been in very poor health for some time. It is likely that Mr. York may conclude to move back there, as they have a good residence property in that city, and if Mrs. York's health remains poor, she will prefer to stay there.

Self denial is the one thing most difficult to inculcate and always hard to practice, especially when there are good things to eat within reach. But there is no self-denial necessary if you take Simmons Liver Regulator. It promotes digestion, prevents dyspepsia and a dose after a hearty meal of delicacies will prevent any discomfort. It's the best good-night toddy.

Astronomers have announced another eclipse of the moon to take place on Thursday night, October 17. It will be the first total eclipse so generally visible since 1888. The beginning of the total eclipse will take place at 7:15, and from that time the circular shadow of the earth will occupy more and more of the surface of the moon until at 11:06 the eclipse will become total.

There is a fellow down in Boone county, Ky., who is so cranky on the silver question that he goes about digging up all the goldenrod and marygolds, raises white corn, wont speak to his wife because she has golden hair, is forever denouncing the golden sun, has quit chewing tobacco because of its color, wont keep the golden rule and says he don't want to enter the golden gates. This certainly can't be Charles H. Bliss.

Last night it turned cold and this morning, citizens who in the heat of the last few days had threatened to take Sydney Smith's plan of "taking off one's flesh and sitting in his bones" to keep cool, began to hunt for an overcoat. It was a decided change, for there had been snow storms in the northwest.

Will Swarts left this morning over the B. & O. for Cincinnatti, O., where he will enter upon his third year of medicine at the Ohio Medical College. This is one of the best Medical Colleges in the United States. Many of the best physicians from this part of Indiana are graduates of this college. And by the way this is where Will took his first course and now is in the college where his first professors graduated. Dr. D. J. Swarts is also a graduate of the Ohio Medical College having graduated there thirty five years ago. Mr. Swarts will receive the degree Doctor of Medicine next April. He has had all the advantages of an experienced father and mother and being of good moral habits we predict for him a prosperous future.

The "New Process" Oil Heater is just what you want this kind of weather. It will heat a large room comfortably. Price reasonable. For sale by Pioneer Hardware Co.

Ira Brandon has some samples of corn he got down on his father-in-law's farm near Concord. The ears are over twelve inches in length.

J. Beuret received to day a shipment of new stoves. They are the "Jewel" and a nicer lot we have never seen. Watch for his ad.

While at the Pioneer Hardware store this morning a COURIER representative's attention was called to the fine line of heating stoves they carry. They have them in all styles and prices.

Read our list of the special prizes to be given at the Waterloo Fair. It is a new scheme and a big one. If information is needed, write to the secretary, M. Kirlinger, at Waterloo. Fair begins Oct. 7.

Miss Pearl Kelley returned Saturday evening from her recent visit to her mother at Omaha, Neb., and with other friends in that state. She stopped a few days on the way back, to visit the family of I. N. Cool at Logansport. She will return to Fort Wayne in a few days to take her place as a student at Westminster Seminary.

The Page Fence Giants play at Albion Monday, Oct. 7. This is the famous darkey club. The white club that is pitted against them is the "Chicago Unions". When the two captains meet, there will be something like Byron's interview between the devil and the angel Gabriel,

A new system of teaching has been inaugurated in the Elkhart schools. Each teacher has her individual room as before, but one teacher instructs all the grammar grades of the building in one particular study. Thus one teacher makes the rounds of the four rooms, teaching arithmetic, another teaches grammar, another history, going from room to room to impart the instruction. This has a good effect in giving the pupils the results of instruction by a specialist and gives the teacher a change of faces and surroundings each hour of the day.

THE KING
SIMMONS
REGULATOR

Reader, did you ever take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR, the "KING OF LIVER MEDICINES?" Everybody needs take a liver remedy. It is a sluggish or diseased liver that impairs digestion and causes constipation, when the waste that should be carried off remains in the body and poisons the whole system. That dull, heavy feeling is due to a torpid liver. Biliousness, Headache, Malaria and Indigestion are all liver diseases. Keep the liver active by an occasional dose of Simmons Liver Regulator and you'll get rid of these troubles, and give tone to the whole system. For a laxative Simmons Liver Regulator is BETTER THAN PILLS. It does not gripe, nor weaken, but greatly refreshes and strengthens.

S. Z. Dickinson writes from South Haven, Mich., that the peach trade is booming there. They send two steamboat loads each night except Sundays, one going to Chicago and one to Milwaukee. One farm has produced 11,000 bushels.

J. R. Lamson, of Washington, D. C., brother to Mrs. Barns, reached here yesterday for a brief stay with the relatives and friends. He found many old-time friends to greet him. He will be the guest while here, of the editor's family and Judge Penfield's.

A large number of the "New Process" Oil Heaters were sold last fall. They give the very best satisfaction. See them at the Pioneer Hardware Co's store.

John Fretz is able to sit up at the table and if no backset occurs may soon be out. It seems almost impossible that so bad a wound could be so soon controlled though of course it will still take some time to complete the healing.

Allen Shultz, of Franklin, was here today. He has been appointed administrator of the estate of the late Peter McIntosh. It is a good choice, and an administrator if one had been chosen before, would have saved them some money.

John G. Manger, editor of the Sun, Bridgeman, Mo., nominated Grover Cleveland for the Presidency, in Nov. 1882, while he was mayor of Buffalo, N. Y., is enthusiastic in his praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. He says; "I have used it for the past five years and consider it the best preparation of the kind in the market. It is as simple as sugar and coffee in this section. It is an article of merit and should be used in every household. For sale by Robbins and McCord, druggists 36-9

For Sprains and Bruises.

Irvin W. Larimore, physical director of the Y. M. C. A., Des Moines, Iowa, says he can conscientiously recommend Chamberlain's Pain Balm to athletes, gymnasts, bicyclists, foot ball players and the profession in general for bruises sprains and dislocations; also for soreness and stiffness of the muscles. When applied before the parts become swollen it will effect a cure in one half the time usually required. For sale by Robbins & McCord, druggists. 36 39

Sleepless Nights.

Who, but those who have had the unhappy experience, can tell the horror or appreciate the unhappy exprience of persons troubled with sleeplessness? The damnable hatred of all the demons in hell for mankind must surely be appeased by the consciousness of such human suffering. The long, dreary, unhappy hours, who can describe them and why is it necessary? If you have ever been troubled you know what they are, and if you have been spared you have no interest in the knowledge of such suffering.

Mrs. A. Bateham, Romulus, Mich., after describing her suffering from sleeplessness extending over a period of eight years, receiving at times only about twelve hours' sleep in a week, writes of Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer as follows: "I began taking it in common doses and the first night I slept eight hours and had a nap the next day. Every night since I have slept eight or ten hours. Oh, how thankful I am for having had Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer brought to my notice and for the benefit received from it. Stop and think, eight years of sleeplessness, and cured in a day, does it not seem like a miracle?" This medicine is equally as effective in curing nervous prostration, spasms, fits, sleeplessness, mental depression, exhausted vitality, despondency, sexual inferiority, debility. For sale by F. E. Davenport, druggist. 36 39.

There is enough red in the stars and stripes to suit the taste of any true American.

The emperor himself will admit that old Bismarck has once more become a bigger man than young William.

Barnum's show has a woman clown. It seems strange that woman has not invaded this field before; she often has made a circus in the home circles.

H. H. Holmes, like many professional criminals, is a total abstainer, notwithstanding the likelihood that one of these days he will take a drop too much.

A Kentucky physician shot and instantly killed one of his patients the other day. Isn't this sort of professional slaughter contrary to the medical code?

I notice that a gentleman by the name of Dieterich, living at Mobile, Ala., has had five wives, but nobody seems to be digging in his castle for family skeletons.—H. H. Holmes.

As Germany has appropriated 100,000 marks to purchase bicycles for the army we shall probably hear less talk about preparations for a war being afoot in that country.

An editorial notice of a woman's grocery store reads as follows: "Her tomatoes are as red as her own cheeks, her indigo is as blue as her own eyes, and her pepper as hot as her own temper."

The discovery of a "conspiracy of filibusters to overturn the republic of Hawaii" was evidently unnecessary at this stage of the game. News may be scarce, but it isn't so scarce as that would indicate.

Helen Gould is traveling "out West" under an assumed name. If Helen doesn't like her name and wants to change it, we believe the matter could be arranged without much difficulty, if she herself favors the idea.

New York can afford many private residences that cost more than $1,000,000 each, but for all that the recent police census shows that there are more than 50,000 children in the city who have been deprived of school facilities because of a lack of sufficient school buildings.

The new army regulations will make some important changes in the method of payment of troops, and probably will be found objectionable to all officers who command posts or companies. Instead of sending payments to the various posts throughout the country, the rolls will be made up at the headquarters of the army department, or at the posts where there is now located a pay headquarters. These rolls will be accompanied by envelopes containing the money due each officer and soldier, and will be sent to the commandant of each post by express. The commandant will distribute the rolls and money to the company commanders, and they will pay the troops and make the return.

An English lady was called on the other day by her footman, who announced that he had a grievance. Being encouraged to proceed, he stated his case as follows: "Your ladyship 'as how visits too many philanthropic and psychological women, and that sort of thing. They give such small tips that I feel ashamed of myself for receiving them. The temperance women give no tips at all. I suppose they think we servants spend all our tips in drink. Formerly the tips used to be nearly equal to the wages. I counted on them continuing so. This is my 'c[illegible]ped and I beg to inform your ladyship that I speak for Jemima and Susan, the housemaids, and for Green, the coachman." The lady answered that she feared she must get a new set of servants, and that, whether she did or not, she would cause placards to be posted in all the guests' rooms to inform them that servants were not allowed to receive tips. She was ready to allow, however, a small increase in the wages. If that was not satisfactory all might leave, and at once, if they desired. They took her at her word.

Western railroads, represented in solemn council by their general passenger agents, have practically refused to make any special rates for passenger traffic to the Atlanta exposition. The sapient agents present at the meeting declared their belief that the volume of traffic would not justify low rates. They assert that if under the rates they adopt business is rushing they will reduce the fare. This is as if a merchant should say: "I will sell this silk at $1 a yard. If the demand for it is lively I will make it 50 cents a yard." What merchant would invert the laws of trade thus by selling cheapest that for which there is most demand? The shopman creates demand by low prices; profits by great demand by exacting high prices. The railroads, instead of selling cloth by the yard, sell transportation by the mile. Their logical policy is to reduce rates when sales are small, thus stimulating trade. These Western roads insist on fixing high rates at first, with a promise that they shall be reduced if traffic increases in volume. But it will not increase until rates are lowered. Doubtless it will be urged that the railroad passenger agents are experts, knowing their own business. They were experts when they made the first half of the Chicago World's Fair a local enterprise only, because they would not carry out-of-town visitors at reasonable rates. They are experts now that they put the Atlanta exposition into quarantine. They are always expert in strangling and affronting the public—in killing the goose that lays for them the golden egg.

Notwithstanding the fact that many people trace the Missouri River in name from the Yellowstone country to the Gulf of Mexico, United States engineers are asserting the possibility of that stream becoming only a dry ravine. Government gauges at Sioux City, Iowa, show that the registered measurements for twenty years indicate a gradual decrease, until in 1895 the volume of water passing that point is 20 per cent. less than in 1878. Civilization has always played fast and loose with the geography of a new country. It has leveled the trackless forests and torn up its roots. It has encroached upon arid lands and made them fertile and productive. In nothing, however, has it worked more changes than in the great rivers of this country. East of the Mississippi the great rivers have suffered less, and yet the denuding of forest lands has materially affected the average depth of the Ohio. Forest lands which once were natural reservoirs of the rainfall have been stripped. The soft loam of dead leaves has become firm before the plowshare and the unveiled sun. The rainfall rushes down in the wet season, flooding the low lands—no longer trickling down throughout a whole summer and through a thousand springs, brooks and creeks. In the great semi-arid West there have been the most changes. Rivers which once floated steamboats are now crossed by small boys in knee breeches. Fed from snows in the mountains, the Arkansas, the Platte and the Kansas are almost drained before they cross the Colorado line eastward. Irrigating ditches have wrought great changes, and every year the drain is heavier and heavier. Engineers are at a loss to account for the decrease in upper Missouri curents, unless it be that the artesian basin of South Dakota, which has been so successfully tapped, is draining it. Whatever the cause, it may be safely conjectured that careless methods of handling enterprises affecting rivers are at the bottom of the apparent phenomenon.

Combination is the tendency of the age—as several million orators have remarked—and now this tendency is to assert itself in the management of the theaters. There is to be a theater syndicate, or "trust," and, presumably, the managers will operate the dramatic stage very much as the managers of the oil trust operate in shares of stock. They will control the market for plays, stars, leading ladies, "heavies" and "supes." They will invest even shares in the products of Mr. Pinero's talent and Mr. Ibsen's genius and monopolize the visible supply. They may even secure the option for all America on such priceless histrionic commodities as Bernhardt and Duse and Sir Henry Brodrib Irving. The facts suggest some amazing possibilities for the future. The drama is—or should be—classified in the world of art. What if the syndicate movement extend to the other branches of art? A time is conceivable when the market for modern French painters will be in the hands of a syndicate which will drive all competition to the wall. A painter not employed by the trust cannot hope to "sell." He must accept syndicate terms or get out of the business. Then there will be a sculpture trust and a music trust. We shall buy Brahms and Rubinstein and Dvorak by order through a syndicate, which will carefully grade prices to meet the demand. A poetry trust would be inevitable and could be handled magnificently. There would be a catalogue number and price list for every poem. William Morris, for instance, would rate as "A1" or "extra quality," Lewis Morris as "middling" or "inferior." We should order poems by telephone and pay the syndicate rates—or else put up with home-made poetry and run the risk of infringing some of the syndicate patents. In the end there will be one all-comprehensive syndicate of all these syndicates. There will be an art trust. The prospect is interesting, if not alluring. But just wait until John Ruskin hears of it and takes his pen in hand!

Invidious Comparisons.

"One who is now a member of Congress, or will be when the national legislature meets on the first Monday in December, and is sworn in, was, two dozen years ago, a county judge in the State from which he hails, and a more pompous and conceited judge never sat on the bench," said a Western man. "But that was long ago, and the years have taught him a good many things and improved him materially. However that may be, it happened that on one occasion in his court a lawyer was pleading a case and was making a regular red-fire-and-slow-curtain speech, which stirred the jury to its profoundest depths. In the course of his peroration he said:

"'And, gentlemen of the jury, as I stand at this bar to-day in behalf of a prisoner, whose health is such that at any moment he may be called before a greater judge than the judge of this court, I——'

"The judge on the bench rapped sharply on the desk, and the lawyer stopped suddenly and looked at him questioningly.

"'The gentleman,' said the court, with dignity, 'will please confine himself to the case before the jury and not permit himself to indulge in invidious comparisons.'

"It almost took the attorney's breath away, but he managed to pull himself together and finish in pretty fair shape."—Washington Star.

A Speaking Watch.

A Geneva, Switzerland, watchmaker is now engaged in spending all his spare time in perfecting a wonderful "speaking watch." His idea is to make a chronometer which will call out the hours and half hours instead of ringing a bell as do clocks and some of the modern high-priced watches. It is said that he has devoted much patient labor and study to his invention and that the speaking attachment is now almost complete. The hour-caller in this unique timepiece is a miniature phonograph, and on account of its having to use so many different words is a very complicated as well as a wonderfully minute apparatus. A "speaking watch" would certainly be a curiosity, but we fail to see wherein it would be of practical utility.

In Quantity Sufficient.

The late Master of Trinity, London, was asked by a lady whether a certain florid divine had not "a great deal of taste." The reply was: "Yes, indeed, madam—and all of it bad."

"I see most of your hair is gone," said Brown to Burton. "Yes," replied Burton, "it's left for parts unknown."

POLITICS OF THE DAY

ENEMIES OF COMMERCE.

On the stump, in Congress and in the press, the McKinleyites insist that their policy is just the reverse of free trade. They claim that all the foreign goods imported mean the loss of employment for American workmen, and that in order to increase prosperity the products of other countries should be shut out by a practically prohibitive tariff. The strongest objection that they can bring against the Wilson tariff is that under its operations imports have increased, and they promise that if restored to power they will enact a tariff law which will effectually prevent foreign trade in many lines which are now profitable. But when the protectionists drop out of their role as political partizans who depend on the high tariff as an issue on which they can get office, they argue for increased commerce as strongly as though they were free traders. For instance, in an editorial on New York city as a commercial port, the New York Tribune boasts of that city's growing importance as a center of commerce, predicts yet greater growth, and urges a costly system of harbor and terminal improvements in order that foreign trade may be attracted to New York.

From a business standpoint the Tribune is doing good work in favoring improved facilities for American commercial relations with foreign countries, but it is very inconsistent for a tradehating organ to encourage commerce.

Old Forge (N. Y.) dispatch: Ex-President Harrison had removed to-day a large molar which had caused him great pain. It was a wisdom tooth.

If the protection swindle is a sound public policy, as the Tribune asserts, it must require the least possible amount of foreign trade. This applies as well to exports as imports, for if protection were to be carried out logically by every country, all international commerce would cease. The result of the strict enforcement of such a policy would be that instead of being a great and wealthy city New York would rapidly fall away until it reached the position of a small seaport town.

It will be denied by some high tariffites that their doctrines are inconsistent with the extensive development of foreign trade. What, then, becomes of their claim that they wish to preserve the home market for Americans by the exclusion of foreign goods? They are either trying to delude American workmen with false pretenses of shutting out all foreign competition, or they are sincere enemies of commerce. In either case they are unworthy the confidence of the people, of whom a great majority are heartily in favor of the greatest possible volume of foreign trade.

Republican National Convention.

The Republican convention at Minneapolis in 1892 authorized the national committee of that party to establish a new ratio of representation in future national conventions. The present ratio is two delegates for each member of Congress in both houses and two for each territory. The Democrats have the same representation in national conventions.

The proposed new rule will provide that there shall be one delegate from each congressional district in all the States and two delegates at large for each State. One additional delegate shall be chosen for each 7,000 Republican voters in any district. This would make a convention for the Republicans of about 1,000 delegates. Probably under a similar rule a Democratic national convention would contain a greater number of members.

There is equity in this proposition—too much equity for its acceptance by the aspiring, greedy, trading gang of politicians of the Republican party. It is only fair that the body of the voters in any party shall select its candidates. The men who are to cast the majorities should nominate the man for whom they are to vote. It is the height of injustice for the minority States to nominate a candidate whom the majority States are to elect.

The frauds perpetrated on the Republican national conventions in the past by bodies of delegates without constituencies have been the scandal of the country for at least two decades. A few cunning and tricky political organizers could pack conventions in the Southern States and send eighty or a hundred irresponsible and venal delegates to the convention, whose votes were to be had by the highest bidder offered through the rascally middlemen controlling the "trust." This class of delegates nearly nominated Arthur for President in 1884. They were subsidized for Sherman in 1888, but Alger, "the kind gentleman from Michigan," bought them out from under him and he lost the presidential nomination which he might have secured if his delegates had not abandoned him on receiving a new bid. He had his revenge in keeping Alger out of President Harrison's cabinet.

In most of the States and smaller political bodies the delegates to the local conventions are proportioned on the basis of votes. This gives the strong counties and precincts their proportionate weight, while weak counties and precincts have all the weight to which they are entitled. It often happens that a man of strong character, great popularity, wide influence and skill in political management, representing a minority constituency, produces more important results in shaping political action than is effected by mere unorganized numbers. This is the triumph of brains over inert force, and it serves to equalize any difference which tends unfairly against the few for the benefit of the many.

There are good reasons why the rule which the Republican national committee is to consider should be adopted by both parties. The Democratic national committee cannot determine the question without instructions from the national Democratic convention, which is the fountain of authority.—Chicago Chronicle.

Growth of the Tin Plate Industry.

When the duty on tin plates was reduced by the new tariff law from 2.2 cents to 1.2 cents per pound last summer, the change was vigorously opposed by those who had engaged in the high protective rate of the tariff law of 1890, and also by those who contemplated engaging in the business. Those who fought against the change declared that the lower rate of duty not only would ruin all those already engaged in the industry in this country, but also would prevent any further extension of this branch of manufacture. The new tariff law has been in operation now for a year, and instead of the prophesied destruction of the tin plate industry there has been the largest and most substantial growth in the industry that has ever occurred in the same length of time. The increase in the capacity for producing tin plates during the past twelve months, under a duty of 1.2 cents per pound, has been nearly as great as the growth of the industry during the entire three years in which the rate of 2.2 cents was in force.

Twenty-six new factories in which the plates are both rolled and tinned have been started, and the companies have extended their plants and increased their output. Six new factories for dipping plates have been built or enlarged. The result of this activity has been a great increase in the production of tin and terne plates, which shows that the manufacture of tin plate in the United States has undergone its most marked development during the past twelve months, with a protective duty 45 per cent lower than the rate provided by the tariff act of 1890, and under the lowest prices for tin plate ever known in this country. That the American tin plate industry is able to take care of itself under present conditions of foreign competition is proved by the events of the past year.

Party Lines and Extravagance.

The era of lavish appropriations with no thought as to where the money was to come from began with the billion dollar Congress and has lasted ever since. The party line has not appeared in the spending of the money and it should not in fixing the responsibility for it. As to administrations, while each administration is responsible, a comparison as far as that quoted is furnished by the fact that the first Cleveland administration paid off debt and left a surplus in the treasury. The Harrison administration paid off debt, but wiped out the surplus and laid hands on such trust funds as the national bank redemption funds.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Evils of Political Dictatorship.

Personal dictatorships are incompatible with true Democratic Government. One-man power is absolutism, and when it fastens itself upon a State or a city the substance of political freedom is gone, though the forms may remain. It makes no essential difference to the mass of the people under what party name a personal dictatorship is established over them. The autocrat who cheats them of their American birthright of self-government may decorate his band wagon with the Democratic or Republican colors, but in either case their political liberties are gone and the autocrat does with them as he pleases.—Baltimore Sun.

EDUCATIONAL COLUMN

NOTES ABOUT SCHOOLS AND THEIR MANAGEMENT.

Cramming as an Educational Method—Oldest Living Graduate of Yale College—The Study of Children—First Day Hints to Teachers.

"Cramming."

For want of a better name for an educational method in common use, I call it "Cramming." This is usually applied to packing the mind with facts in order to pass an examination. I would apply it more widely so as to include all reception of formal statements of facts or principles without a clear perception of their meaning and an understanding of their relations.

This method assumes that the chief end of education is knowledge, and so stores the mind with statements and counts the one a scholar who can reproduce them on demand. Judged by this standard, the valedictorians of a decade ago, who have since been busy with other things, are failures; for few of them could on demand pass examination in algebra, chemistry, or calculus. But the chief end of education is not knowledge, but training and power and character. Memory is only one faculty of the mind and needs no more training than every other faculty. Perceiving, investigating, discovering, classifying, combining, reaching conclusions—these should all enter into education, higher and lower, and if they do not in proper proportion, then the method must savor of cramming. The man who is taught to think and keeps at it grows stronger and stronger for any intellectual work with passing time, though he leaves out of his thought the subjects of the school curriculum. We find the memory very receptive and retentive before the other faculties have received much training; but it was evidently intended that the power to think should relieve the memory of much of its burden.

The evidences of the cramming method are sometimes very interesting. I once found a class nearly prepared for college who supposed that there was some inflexible necessity for the decimal system of notation. It had never occurred to them that a system of eights and twelves would be in some respects better. A young man naturally bright, who had completed arithmetic and algebra, could give no reason for the process of multiplying one fraction by another, and was confounded when asked why in dividing one fraction by another the terms of the divisor are inverted, though he could repeat all rules and perform all examples correctly. Of a large class in physics, not one could tell what we mean by fire, and all seemed greatly helped, not by looking for a definition in the dictionary, but by investigating and discussing the subject until they agreed that fire is not a substance, but the phenomena which we call heat and light attending upon combustion. A class in chemistry did not know why a lighted lamp ceased smoking or where the smoke went when the chimney was put on, or that a rusty nail and a rotten apple result from the same cause. A class in economics did not suppose that it could even cost the Government anything to make and issue paper money except the cost for paper and printing; but this was not so strange; for I heard Wendell Phillips say the same thing to an audience of students more than twenty years ago. I have seen students so taught that they did not think it possible to discover anything in Cicero or Virgil which could not be explained according to the statements of Andrews and Stoddard's Latin grammar. They felt, although they never heard it expressed in this absurd form, that the grammar antedated the text.

The crude and half false statements we sometimes hear from platform and pulpit would indicate that many students of ethics, political economy and sociology do little more than accept the statement of principles which they can neither interpret nor apply. Only a few days ago I heard a prominent speaker describing trusts as if they were almighty, and declaring that they ought to be killed. It was a relief to some of his hearers to feel that monopolies have natural and necessary limitations, and that in this country they tend to correct themselves. The attempt to make systems has many times forced men beyond their depth in theology, and it is not strange that there is some floundering in attempting to apply the principles of sociology, which is still a new subject for American students.

Along all lines the real trouble is that many college graduates, so-called educated men, always take their knowledge of any subject by the handle as they would a jug, and the handle is, as nearly as they can remember, the exact form of words in which the knowledge came to them. No man has made such attainment in his knowledge of anything, until he can state it in language different from that in which it came to him.

The effect is to put men who are so educated out of joint with practical life. An article in one of the popular magazines says that Henry Clews will not employ a college-bred man, and that not one of the lieutenants of James Gordon Bennett in his great newspaper enterprise has had college training. The aversion of hard-headed, practical business men to college trained men is due to the fact that educated men are often crammed with facts and scientific statements, the meaning of which they never understand, and so their judgment is weak through lack of exercise, and they are inefficient in real life.

But there are some very encouraging tendencies in educational methods. The adoption of the laboratory method is a real inspiration to a true student, a real test of a teacher's ability and a real victory for true education. The consultation of every available source of authority will tend to abolish cramming as an educational method. Practical education in which the practice of an art is learned in connection with the knowledge of a science, as in chemistry and electrical engineering, has done much to correct the evil of cramming, because the student is subjected to tests of his practical knowledge at every step. The purpose of teacher and student with reference to any subject should be investigation, clear perception of facts and relations, the formation of judgments. There is nothing unduly familiar or irreverent in finding out what anything means, no matter who wrote it. A single teacher who is an investigator will sometimes fix the standard, and his spirit and method will spread to every department of the institution with which he is connected. A student always likes to understand what he studies and to see vistas leading to wider truths beyond.

There are some evident tests of methods of education.

First, do our students gain power to read intelligently and rapidly, discovering and making their own the salient points of a book? A man who cannot think well cannot do this. Abraham Lincoln had this power to a remarkable degree, but he knew how to think. The most of his education was in this direction, although he never saw the inside of a college. James A. Garfield had the same power, doubtless as the result of college training. This power alone is a large intellectual capital in any profession.

Secondly, do our students become clear and strong writers? To do this a man must think clearly and vigorously.

Thirdly, do our students in fair numbers make strong and progresive teachers? No man who cannot think clearly can guide and correct others in their attempts to think.—J. W. Ford.

First Day Hints.

To a new teacher.—

Be in the district a few days before school opens.

Secure, if possible, the record of the last teacher.

Yale's Oldest Graduate.

The oldest living graduate of Yale College is Rev. Samuel Bissell, of Twinsburg, a small village near Akron, Ohio. Rev. Bissell is in his 99th year, but enjoys comparatively good health and will doubtless reach the century mark. Although it is more than three score years since he graduated from that institution of learning, Rev. Bissell is still its loyal friend and delights to hear of the success of Yale students in sports or studies.

REV. SAMUEL BISSELL.

Rev. Bissell was born in Middlefield, Mass., in 1797. He went with his father's family to Ohio in 1806, and attended school at intervals and helped his father to make a home in the forests. In 1816, determining on a better education, he made his way on foot and alone to Yale College. There, with but a few dollars on which to commence his college life, he completed the full course, with no aid save his own head and hands. He graduated with honor in 1823. Soon after returning to his home he took charge of the Congregational Church at Twinsburg, and, except for a few years spent as pastor of other near-by charges, Twinsburg has since been his home. His aged wife is still living.

Study of Children.

The hour has come to call the attention of teachers to the fact that the supreme object of the child's education is the child itself. Few teachers are prepared to take this work up scientifically, but many of them can be made to see that the individual characteristics of each child, physical, intellectual and moral, ought to be more closely studied than they are in most schools. What is a reasonable requirement in the case of one child may be unreasonable in that of another in the same class. The pupil is to be praised or censured according as he puts forth an honest effort to accomplish his task; not for success or failure, but for his self-exertion.—Henry Sabin.

Miss Mary A. Proctor.

Miss Mary A. Proctor, daughter of the late Prof. Richard A. Proctor, is following in the footsteps of her distinguished father by popularizing science, and though a young woman, has already won a high reputation as a writer and lecturer. Miss Proctor presents the latest discoveries in astronomical science in language so simple as to be readily understood by all, and so full of picturesque description that everyone is charmed. She has been giving her lecture on "Giant Sun and His Family" this season before the public schools of New York City, under the auspices of the Board of Education.

High School Seniors Reinstated.

The Harrisburg school board relented and decided to reinstate into its good graces the six seniors of the high school graduating class who acted in a disorderly manner at the class farewell reception. There was a great clamor from parents and friends, and allegations that Principal Landon had not thoroughly inquired into the matter, so that the board thought best to relent and give the young men their diplomas.

A BIT OF STRING.

Vain Quest of a Man Who Stares at the Shoes Young Women Wear.

"Will you not let me tie that for you?"

It was the way he said it—the quiet tone of his voice, the polite manner of lifting his hat, the honest look in his eyes. She could not decline the favor. Indeed, he did not give her time to do so, but with that chivalry that is a combination of boldness and gentleness he leaned down to tie her shoestring.

She had paused on a busy street and set her foot up on the stone block in front of a store door. There was a vexed expression on her pretty face, but when this gallant anticipated her action she laughed right merrily. The shoestring had not only become untied, but was lost. Diving into one of his trousers pockets he produced a bit of white string, with which he deftly laced her low-cut tan, remarking: "There, I guess that will do until you get home."

"No, I shall wear it if you will allow me; you are altogether too good to be forgotten immediately," she said coquettishly; and before he could recover from the flattery, before he could fix her in his mind so he would know her again, she was gone, become indistinguishable in a group that separated and dissolved at the street corner.

And, maidens fair, if you should meet the hero of this story and he should stare—as he certainly would—first at your feet, then at your faces, with a look grown old in longing, do not feel offended. He is a harmless lunatic, and the simple burden of his madness, the melancholy burden of his murmuring as he pursues his fruitless quest is, "A bit of string," and nothing more.—Cincinnati Tribune.

HE STOLE MILK.

Jack Avoided Detection for a Very Long Time.

The milkman who supplied Bloomfield, N. J., families living in the neighborhood of Lawrence and Harlow streets, is happier than he was a week ago. His customers suspected then that he was giving them short measure. Although he put in an extra gill as an evidence of good faith, there was still a deficiency in many of the tin pails that were set out on the front stoops at night to await his coming in the early morning.

The police were asked to find out who was rushing the lacteal growler. They tried to do so, but they failed. A few mornings ago the culprit was discovered. The reader might surmise by the appearance of his mouth and tongue, conspicuous in the picture, that he has a capacity for milk in large quantities.

He is a big Newfoundland dog, and he belongs to Mrs. Moffatt, who lives in Harlow street. Mrs. Moffatt was looking out of the window early in the morning, when she saw Jack hiding behind a clumb of bushes and with a most interesting expression watching the milkman filling the tin pail on the stoop of the Rev. Mr. Winan's house. When the milkman left Jack trotted over to the stoop, picked up the pail with his teeth, carried it a short distance, set it down, took off the lid, and drank nearly all the milk. Then he put on the lid and carried the pail back to the stoop. Mrs. Moffatt told the clergyman's family about it, and soon the neighbors and the milkman all knew about the milk drinker.

A NEW LAWN-MOWER.

The Inventor Claims It Has Points of Advantage Over Old Styles.

The lawn-mower here illustrated was invented by a Pennsylvanian, and the Scientific American thus describes it:

The knives are driven by crank and pitman connection with the ground wheels, the driving mechanicism being located entirely within the outer face of the frame and there being no projections to collect the cut grass. The axle carrying the ground wheels is journaled in depressions of the side or cheek pieces of the frame, the wheels being cupped on their outer frame. The wheels are loosely mounted, and ratchet wheels on the axle adjacent to the hubs are adapted for engagement by a dog on each wheel, the dogs turning the axle when the mower is pushed ahead and slipping over the ratchets when the mower is drawn backward, the cutting mechanism being then inoperative. In each of the side pieces is a horizontal depression or well having near its center an opening.

The shaft of the cutter is journaled in the inner walls of the wells, and on the shaft are spiders which carry the spiral cutting knives, extending from the inner face of one side piece to the inner face of the other side piece, the knives being thus protected from obstacles at the sides of the machine and adapted to cut a swath of nearly its full width.

The grammar class was on the floor. "In the sentence 'I love you,' what is the mood of the verb?" asked the teacher. "Sentimental mood," replied one of the larger girls, who had spent most of the summer at the sea shore.—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

A Thorn on the Bicyclist's Path.

Bicyclists in the region round about St. John's, Mich., have a queer, but substantial grievance. The fields and farms thereabout are bounded and guarded with quickset hedges instead of by fences. At this time of year the farmers trim their hedges, and as a consequence all the roads in the region are strewn thickly with boughs full of briers, sharp slivers of tough wood, and short snippings of hedge joints, which puncture bicycle tires as readily and perhaps more seriously than steel tacks.

Mrs. Collin's Story.

I am thirty-three years old, have been married seventeen years and have four living children. My health has not been good since my first child was born. Twelve months ago I was confined, but my baby only lived a few days. Soon after that I was attacked with irritation of the bladder, choking spells, heart palpitation, fainting spells and great nervousness. In this terrible condition I was confined to my bed for eight months. I thought I was dying many times. My dear little helpless children, in kissing me at night often said: "Please don't die, mamma;" or, "Papa, don't let mamma die to-night." My little boy brought me a Ladies' Birthday Almanac one day, and after reading it I decided to try the Wine of Cardui Treatment. I have taken two bottles of McElree's Wine of Cardui and three small packages of Thedford's Black-Draught, and am better than I have been for ten years. I am visiting my neighbors on foot, doing my work with ease, and eat better than I have for years. God only knows how grateful I am for this wonderful medicine that has worked this great transformation.

MRS SALLIE COLLINS,
McHenry, Ky.

To Be Pitied.

A young married couple lived very happily together. One morning, however, the young woman was very morose at the breakfast table, and behaved in a most extraordinary way. The husband noticed the change in her manner, but on being questioned by him as to the cause of it, she would not give him satisfaction until he finally insisted on being told what the matter was.

"Well," said she at last, "if I dream again that you have kissed another woman I will not speak to you as long as I live."

A Conditional Reward.

Woman—My husband has disappeared, and may be dead. I want to offer a reward for his body.

Chief of Police—Yes, madame. A description will be needed, and this with the reward, will no doubt prove effective. He may be alive, you know, in which case we may soon be able to return him to you.

Woman—I shan't pay a cent of reward unless he is returned dead, just remember that.—New York Weekly.

HOW AN ADVERTISEMENT SAVED A WOMAN'S LIFE.

The Greatest Medical Discovery of the Age.

KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DONALD KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, MASS.,

Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor). He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston. Send postal card for book.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it. Read the label.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime. Sold by all Druggists.

IMPERIAL GRANUM

IT IS ★ THE BEST ★ FOOD FOR NURSING MOTHERS, INFANTS AND CHILDREN

★ JOHN CARLE & SONS, New York. ★

IT is really pitiful to a thoroughly seasoned woman of the world to see how very much in earnest the society novice takes all the pleasant or unpleasant things that are said to her. Such a novice is not the girl who has been brought up with the knowledge that as soon as school days are over she is to take her place at her mother's side and be formally presented to the gay world. No, indeed; that young woman is well versed in society's ways before she has an opportunity to judge them from personal experience, and when her time does come she is quite able to cope with all the varied types of men and women who range themselves before her.

The novice of which we speak is generally a young married woman, who has been having a cramped, uneventful life, until someone discovers that she is pretty and that they would like to do something to make her days pass more pleasantly. Little by little she gets into the swim, but it is a long time before she learns that society ways are largely artificial and that she must not take everything au serieuse.

Many a woman discontented with the narrowness of her own lot has gladly welcomed any change that would make it less monotonous, but many a heart ache has been the accompaniment of this new existence. Men in society say all sorts of little flattering things that they do not mean at all; women are equally insincere, but only through the influence of their training, that has taught them to be diplomatic and graciously well-bred always. Having seen one woman and known of dozens of others who accepted all these speeches as gospel truth, it behooves a kind-hearted sister to raise a warning finger, as domestic trouble will surely follow if the innocent novice has an idea that she has hitherto been unappreciated, and has at last found sympathy and a recognition of her true merit. Much unhappiness has been caused through mistaken confidence in meaningless compliments and the woman is very foolish who attaches any real value to the frothy conversation of the average man of the world.—Philadelphia Times.

Women in Politics.

Wherever opportunities have been given them women have demonstrated their abilities for the intelligent discharge of the duties of public office. During the past fifteen years in Kansas women have repeatedly held the office of superintendent of public instruction in various counties of the State, and now one of them, Miss Grace King, recently carried off the nomination for register of deeds in Dickinson County. At present there are nineteen women in the State who hold the position of county superintendent of public instruction.

MRS. H. C. STEWART.

In Colorado the Legislature contains three women members in the lower branch, while the State superintendent of public instruction is a woman, Mrs. A. J. Peavey. The commissioner of dairy inspection, an officer whom the Governor appoints, is also a woman, Mrs. Anna Clemmer, while the secretary of the Board of Horticulture is a woman, Mrs. Martha A. Shute.

In North Dakota Edna F. Bates fills the office of State superintendent of public instruction and in Wyoming, where women have the full right of suffrage, Miss Estelle Reel is State superintendent of education. Miss Reel is a young lady of the pure American type and one of the new woman—all but the bloomers, which she abhors, though she rides a wheel. "Singularly" Miss Reed has appointed young men to all the positions under her.

Another woman who has met with success in politics is Mrs. Helen C. Stewart, of Greene County, Mo. Her husband was sheriff of that county and she acted as deputy sheriff. When he died she assumed charge of the work and now she has been officially appointed sheriff. She is the first woman to occupy that office in America.

Facial Decoration.

Schemes of facial decoration differ in different climes and places and times. The woman of our land aspiring to make her face beautiful rubs it with a solution of bismuth and prepared chalk and rose water and tints it up to what is established as our standard of beauty. Tibetian women smear their faces with a thick, black paste, composed of grease cutch, the gummy resin of a tree in Persia. The Andamanese women mix up white clay and water, and calcimine not only their bodies, but also their furniture and cooking utensils. The Seminole Indian woman pierces her ears at intervals all the way around the ear until, with the pegs inserted in the holes punctured, it reminds one of a discarded horseshoe, with the lucky nails still sticking in it. The Congo women thrust through the upper lip a copper rivet, and through the under lip a wooden labret, which latter characterizes the married woman. The Marawee women drill holes in their teeth and plug them. Tattooing is in vogue among all classes of Hindoo women, and they have painted their feet red from earliest times. It is gratifying to look into the nature of beauty schemes among semi-barbaric women, as it affords us convincing proof that we are following along in the lines they marked out and advancing towards a semi-civilized period, and, later on, will arrive at civilization.—Chicago Evening Post.

Mrs. Cleveland's Clothes.

One thing which makes Mrs. Cleveland greatly liked is her simplicity. But in nothing does she show her unpretending nature more than in her dress. Her attire in these days is very simple, writes a correspondent from Buzzard's Bay, and consists of a tailor-made gown of very light brown, of an unfigured cheviot, firmly and closely woven. It is cut rather short and loosely fitting, except across the shoulders, and the sleeves are not noticeably large. At the throat is a plain knot, that is frequently utilized by Mrs. Cleveland in her personal adornment, and which is very becoming to her.

The deep line of black brings out the delicate white of the throat and gives a finish which few women who wear simple black at the neck succeed in obtaining. Mrs. Cleveland is said to be well by those who know her actual health.

Mrs. Cleveland shows her real self in her selection of a hat. Gown and gown decoration may be the decree of her dressmaker and her maid, but her hats are of her own selection, and she always indulges a taste for individual "effects" in these. Her first choice for summer wear at Buzzard's Bay for nine years, or since she began coming to these shores, has always been a sailor hat of white, usually Canton, or a fine white or yellow straw braid with a white ribbon band. This year she has well-nigh discarded the favorite sailor. This week, on her evening drives over to the village, she has been wearing a new hat. It is of black, coarse straw, the crown of medium height, wide and rather flat, the rim somewhat wide and slit and bent, in places uptilted and again gently drooping. The under side of the rim is trimmed with Nile green silk and a bit of a feather and silk trimming on the crown's side in the same shade. It is exceedingly becoming.

Bedroom Sets.

The ambitious chatelaine has taken to embroidering bedroom sets. These may consist, if her courage holds out, of a formidable array of pieces, including, if the whole set is desired, bedspread and canopy, a table cover, curtains for every window and usually two portieres. The art linens are the popular materials. A woman who has taken away materials for such a set to be evolved from the leisure of the summer piazza is putting on a cream-white, soft-finished sateen a lovely design of large grape leaves. The leaves are done in shaded greens in flax, which has the double merit of working effectively and of wearing indefinitely. A few straying tendrils connect the leaves. The design was copied from a pair of old English curtains worked over a hundred years ago. Another pretty design is loosely strewn bunches of clover. The all-over designs of these bedroom sets are not to be commended, as at a little distance they too much resemble the printed cloth, an effect much to be regretted by the industrious needle woman who has spent days of labor in their execution.

Cocoanuts as Cosmetics.

Does your complexion need brightening up and cleansing? If so, here is a simple home-made cosmetic, which is harmless and almost immediate in its good effect:

Buy a fresh cocoanut and grate it; squeeze the juice through a piece of white muslin. The milk which comes after the straining is the cosmetic. Wash the face and hands with it thoroughly, rubbing it well into the skin. It will speak for itself after being used. In using any cosmetic or cream upon the face always rub the skin up, not down. This will have a tendency to drive away wrinkles, and if done faithfully will give to the face a fresh and youthful look.

Horse on a Street Car Fender.

Detroit has a street car fender—one fender, not a style of fender—which beats that boasted of by Philadelphia, which the other day picked up a bicyclist and his machine and carried them uninjured for half a block. The Detroit car struck a horse on Warren avenue. The horse was scooped off its feet and fell into the fender and was carried along in it for 200 or 300 feet until the car was stopped. Then the horse got up, stepped off and trotted away uninjured.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

ELK GREAT FIGHTERS.

Handsomest Members of the Deer Family.

The Moose may be the largest member of the deer family, but our Elk, or Wapiti, is certainly the handsomest, and it also stands next to the first in size. Take an 8 year old male Elk in November, when his sides and quarters are plumply rounded, the long black hair on his neck like a grizzly's winter overcoat, his nostrils distended, eyes flashing, neck swelled with vigor, and his fine new, antlers, fairly spoiling for a fight—and then match him if you can! It is then that he goes about with a chip on his shoulder, feeling not only willing, but eager to whip all creation. He is then at his finest. His coat is new and bright, he is the finest deer that ever stepped—and he knows it. If you have any old score to settle with him, better postpone it until February or March, when his antlers fall off and leave him meek and inoffensive.

It it by no means uncommon for captive Elk to commit murder, and to become so dangerous as to require summary execution. Not long ago a keeper in the Philadelphia Zoological Gardens was gored to death by one. Of all the difficult problems that perplex the superintendent of a zoo, the worst is that of keeping the Elk herd so that none of its weaker members shall be murdered. As to their food supply, they are easily kept, for they will eat almost anything that is fit for them; but between October 1 and February 1, I would rather keep a lion or tiger in my back yard than a full grown Elk in good condition.

In appearance the adult male Elk is magnificent. There is nothing about him that is "out of drawing," as the artists say. His legs are small and shapely; his form is beautifully modeled; his head is far more finely modeled than the heads of our smallest deer; his eye is big and brilliant, his hair is luxuriant, and his "color scheme" is pleasing. He is built for strength, speed and beauty combined, and he looks it.

But his antlers! They are his crowning glory. Even when you find a single one, where it has been dropped on a bleak hillside and lies all alone, you instinctively halt to admire it, for you know that it came from a grand animal. But let the king of the Cervidæ himself stand before you, with two big brown trees of solid bone rising from his forehead, thrusting two branches forward, then sweeping backward and upward, branching grandly as they go, until the topmost prongs rise in the air above the wearer's loins, and if you have within you one spark of admiration for grand things in nature, you will surely exclaim with me, "What a magnificent animal!" Put him in a grassy mountain park, surrounded by his wives and children, with a background of pine timber and snowy peaks, and his majesty is undeniable.

No More Experimenting.

Mr. Slimpurse—Are you sure you can be contented with love in a cottage?

Admired One—Yes, so long as the love lasts.

ASSIST NATURE a little now and then in removing offending matter from the stomach and bowels and you thereby avoid a multitude of distressing derangements and diseases, and will have less frequent need of your doctor's service.

Of all known agents for this purpose, Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are the best. Once used, they are always in favor. The Pellets cure biliousness, sick and bilious headache, dizziness, costiveness, or constipation, sour stomach, loss of appetite, coated tongue, indigestion, or dyspepsia, windy belchings, "heart-burn," pain and distress after eating, and kindred derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels.

Follow the directions, and you'll get the best work from Pearline. Not that there's any harm to be feared from it, no matter how you use it or how much you use. But to make your washing and cleaning easiest, to save the most rubbing, the most wear and tear, the most time and money—keep to the directions given on every package of Pearline.

If you'll do that with your flannels, for instance (it's perfectly simple and easy,) they'll keep beautifully soft, and without shrinking. 502

RIPANS TABULES

Mr. Bert M. Moses, the advertisement and business writer of 502 Third street, Brooklyn, relates that he recently had occasion to consult Dr. J. S. Carreau, a well-known physician of 18 West Twenty-first street, New York city, for a stomach trouble which was pronounced a type of dyspepsia. "After consultation," writes Mr. Moses, "the doctor gave me a prescription, and I was somewhat surprised to note that the formula was nearly identical with that of Ripans Tabules, for which I had, on more than one occasion, prepared advertising matter. I had Dr. Carreau's prescription filled, and it proved satisfactory, giving quick relief. A week later, when I had taken all the medicine, I again called on the doctor and mentioned the similarity of his prescription and the proprietary remedy spoken of, showing him both the remedy itself and the formula. The doctor was at first somewhat inclined to criticise what he called patent medicines, but appeared to be surprised when he noted to what extent this own prescription conformed to the formula I showed him. It was practically the same. After a short time devoted to noting the careful manner in which the proprietary medicine was prepared, he wound up by prescribing it for my case. Of course I had to pay him for telling me to do this, but it was worth the cost to have such high professional assurance that the advertised article was, in fact, the scientific formula that it purported to be. I might have taken the proprietary medicine in the beginning and saved the doctor's fee, but I think the confidence I have acquired in the efficacy of the remedy, through the doctor's indorsement of it, is well worth the fee."

Ripans Tabules are sold by druggists, or by mail if the price (50 cents a box) is sent to The Ripans Chemical Company, No. 10 Spruce Street, New York. Sample vial, 10 cents.

Blind Boat-Builder.

There are seven Herreshoff brothers, and three of these have achieved success in life encompassed in a black world of nothingness. Their eyes are sightless. When John Brown Herreshoff, the president and head of the Herreshoff company was a boy, just beginning to look forward to the work and joys of manhood, a veil was drawn gently over his eyes by the unseen hand of Providence, and gradually the visional world faded out of his life. He had whittled out miniature boats of pine from the time his hand was big enough to hold a jackknife, and when he was fifteen had built a boat large and stanch enough to sail in Narragansett Bay. Soon afterward his blindness came But it would have been inconsistent with his determination and force of character to have given up the lifework he had mapped out for himself. He made his sense of touch do much of the duty belonging properly to his useless eyes; his mind acquired new acuteness and concentration, and he went on making boats. There are few more active business men to-day than he. Morning finds him regularly in his office at the shops, attending to his correspondence, which is read to him, and talking over business matters with callers or his brother, Captain 'Nat' Herreshoff, who is superintendent of the establishment. Every day he makes a tour of the shops, guided by an attendant, and devotes several hours to the inspection of the work in progress. His perceptions have grown so keen that little escapes him, and he finds no difficulty in personally putting together intricate machinery. In the afternoon, after the demands of the day have grown less urgent, he steps aboard his yacht and steams away, feeling, though he cannot see, the beauties of the bay.

The Herreshoff family is of German origin. Charles Frederick Herreshoff came from Germany in 1790, and went to Providence, where he was entertained by John Brown. A few months after his arrival he married the daughter of his host. He purchased a large tract of land on Prudence Island, and here it was that James, the father of the present family, was born. Their mother, whom James married in 1833, was Julia Ann Lewis, the daughter of a sea captain.—From "The Builders of Our Cup Defender," in Demorest's Magazine for October.

A Wonderful Story of an Old Lady.

ST. JOSEPH, MICH., May 9, 1894.

Lyon Medicine Co., Indianapolis, Ind.:

I wish to congratulate you in being in possession of such a grand medicine as LYON'S SEVEN WONDERS. I was in very poor health for a long time, could eat no solid food, and scarcely anything else; had no appetite, but a continued distress in my stomach, and was very poor in flesh. Your remedy being recommended by one who had tried them, I got a box of same, and can cheerfully and gladly say, after using them, the distress in my stomach entirely ceased, my appetite increased wonderfully, and I gained in flesh very perceptibly. I am a lady seventy-four years of age, and can say that LYON'S SEVEN WONDERS have given me a new lease on life. I feel grateful toward you and your remedy. It does more than you claim for it, and no words of praise can do it justice.

Gratefully yours,
MRS. CYNTHIA RANSOM.

All Advertising.

There are Many Ways of Helping the Reporter and Benefiting Yourself.

There must be a good many interesting things about your store that people would be glad to read, and that your local paper, particularly if you are a regular advertiser, ought to be willing to print. Now there is some amusing or interesting incident occurring in a store every few days. You tell your it at home and they enjoy it; you tell your friends about it and they think it's very good. Write it up and put it in the paper. Or you're doing something new at your store, making some improvements, fixing the walk in front, relettering your sign; put that among the local items in the paper ann it's just so much advertising. Cultivate the local reporter, the man who knocks about town for items He is probably hungry for items; he has got that column to fill, and he'll look upon you as his friend if you'll help him fill it. If you are not very skillful in composing yourself, give him the facts and let him write up the little story, and ask him at the same time how he likes such and such a cigar, passing him out a good one. And if you have anything behind the soda water counter that's pretty good to drink, give him proof of it. These little attentions touch the susceptible heart of the worthy newspaper man. See if you can't figure in the personal column with more or less frequency, not as a matter of personal gratification, but simply as a matter of pure unadulterated business. If you're elected secretary of the Bucks County Pharmaceutical Society put it in all the papers. It's news for the public and advertising for you.

A Household Treasure.

Dykeman, druggist, Catskill, N. Y., says that Dr. King's New Discovery is undoubtedly the best cough remedy; that he has used it in his family for eight years, and it has never failed to do all that is claimed for it. Why not try a remedy so long tried and tested. Trial bottles free at Robbins & McCord's drug store. Regular size 50c and $1. 3

Miss Benninghoff Dead.

Special to DAILY COURIER.

St. Joe, Ind., Sept. 20, 1895.—Mrs. Amanda Benninghoff died last night at her home three miles southeast of this place. She was the daughter of Nathan Benninghoff an old and respected citizen who died only about a week ago. She was the last of this family, the mother and other children having died some years ago. She leaves her estate to the German Reformed church at Cleveland, Ohio, and thus another family is gone from our midst. They leave many friends and relatives to mourn the loss.

Rev. Koch Goes To Mich.

Rev. Carl C B. Koch of the German M. E church left this morning for his new field of labor at Marine City, Mich. The best wishes of his many friends go with him. He has been pastor of the German M. E church here for three years and all who knew him as well as his own congregation regret very much that he must leave.

Mr. Koch is a young man of rare ability and integrity. He impresses every one he meets with the fact that he is a christian gentleman. He is one of the few people who are able to mingle with the world yet keep themselves unspotted from the world. We feel sure that much good will be accomplished through him in the community to which he is going.

He is succeeded here by Rev. Bank who came from the old country about two months ago. He and his wife come here well recommended and we trust will receive a warm welcome to our town.

Editor Invited.

Invitations have been sent out to four hundred editors of newpapes in Northwestern Ohio, Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana and to all the leading papers of these states, inviting them to spent Monday, September 30, in Toledo. The object is to have the editors spend a day there as the guests of the city, show them its great advantages and its wonderful growth and the many points of interest round about. They will enjoy a carriage drive over the city, will visit all the points of interest and will be taken around the Toledo-Maumee Valley belt and given a view of the finest bit of scenery in Ohio. They will be taken out on the site of old Fort Meigs and will be informed of what has been done towards making of it a national park and it is expected that they will add to the effort to secure from congress the necessary legislation to preserve these historic spots on which so much history was made In the evening the visitors will be properly entertained in Toledo, Probably by the Chamber of Commerce. The invitations assure the editors that they need bring no money with them and that they are expected to come and enjoy themselves.

Trustee's Notice.

I will be in my office for the transaction of township business on Saturday of each week. All who have business with me should bear in mind and call on that day.

W. S. DANCER,
Trustee of Jackson township.

Murder At Dunfee.

Tuesday morning the postmaster at Dunfee, a small station on the Nickel Plate, in the southeast part of Whitley county, was found dead in his bed, murdered by unknown persons. The murderers entered by a ladder, at the window of his sleeping room on the second floor. He had evidently been struck on the head by a heavy club as he rose in bed. Then though probably unconscious his hands and feet were tied firmly. He was brutally beaten and all the money to be found was taken, but the postage stamps were scattered about. No clue of any value as yet, but sheriffs are scouring the country far and near.

Butler Free Street Fair

Was A Grand Success From Beginning To End.

The Butler Free Street Fair was a grand success. There were crowds of people present each of the four days. Thursday was the big day as it always is at all fairs. The crowd was estimated at from five to twenty thousand. Friday the attendance was not nearly so large, and by the time the COURIER representative made the rounds the exhibits were being taken down and of course we could only get a faint idea of its grandeur. Most of the business men had booths erected in front of their place of business and had an exhibition of the products of their store. Then whenever it was possible a 'hot pop corn and warm candy" stand was erected, and in passing down the streets one was reminded of Midway at the World's Fair. Brown, Culbertson & Boland through their agent, M. F. Long & Co. had a number of the Eckhart buggies on exhibition and some of them carried a card "sold". About the best exhibit, and one which took the most work was that of Jeff Boyle, the Real Estate Agent. In front of his place of business he had a farm, and a more complete farm in every department we never saw. The public highway ran diagonally across the north end and coming down the road was a wagon load of Brown, Culbertson & Boland's phosphate. Then on one side of the road was the farm residence and on the other side the barn. Both were complete in every detail. South of the house was the garden in which was cabbage, peppers, etc., growing in fine condition. The maple grove was quite attractive. The corn was cut, or at least a part of it, and the farmer left the balance standing, saying that it would not pay to cut it. What he had cut, the chickens were destroying. This exhibit certainly took months of work on the part of Mr. Boyle, yet he is well paid for his labor for it was the most attractive. Taking everything into consideration the fair was a grand success.

Russian Thistle.

An exchange says: Indiana is threatened with a new disaster which may prove a very serious thing, says the Indianapolis Sentinel. It is reported that the Russian thistle is now found growing in Lake, Porter and Laporte counties. It is supposed to be the product of seeds dropped from grain cars passing through these counties, as eight of the east and west trunk lines to Chicago pass through all of them. It is hardly possible to over-estimate the danger to agriculture from this pest. The amazing rapidity of its spread in the north-west, and the genuine alarm that exists there in regard to it, ought to be sufficient warning to our people. The Sentinel would suggest that the state board of agriculture ought to investigate this matter at once, and impress on the people of these counties where it has appeared the importance of exterminating it at once. The only sure way of getting rid of it is to burn the plants, roots and all. A great deal of trouble may be saved in this case by prompt action.

Death Roll.

The death Roll of the Grand Army of the Republic, as given in the report of the adjutant general of that organization at the encampment at Louisville last week, shows how rapidly the veterans are disappearing. The number of deaths among the Grand Army members during the last ten years and the percentage of deaths is as follows: In 1886, death 3,020, per cent., 0.93; 1887, deaths, 3,406, per cent., 0.95; 1888, deaths, 4,483, per cent, 1.18; 1889, deaths, 4,666, per cent., 1.18; 1890, deaths, 5,476, per cent., 1.33; 1891, deaths, 5,965, per cent., 1.46; 1892, deaths, 6,404, per cent., 1.61; 1893, deaths, 7,002, per cent., 1 78: 1894, deaths, 7,283, per cent.. 1.97; 1895, deaths, 7,368, per cent., 2.06. Here is a constantly increas- death roll. The death rate for 1895 may look large, but it is not considering the fact that the average age of those who were mustered out of the army in 1865 was about twenty-six years, which would make the average age of the veterans now only about fifty six.

Drummond's Lightning

Remedy did great work for H. J. Lewis of Anderson's Mills, S. C. He had Sciatic Rheumatism in the left hip and leg and for six weeks was not able to sit up or walk a step; and suffered untold agonies. After using Drummond's Lightning remedy for rheumatism for two weeks, he wrote that he could walk and that the pain was gone. If you suffer from rheumatism and wish to be cured, send $5 to the Drummond Medicine Co., 48 Maiden Lane, New York, and the two large bottles will be sent to your express address. Agent wanted. 40 41

Proved Valuable.

"Many of the citizens of Rainsville, Indiana are never without a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy in the house." says Jacob Brown, the leading merchant of the place. This Remedy has proven of so much value for colds and croup in children that few mothers who know its worth are willing to be without it. For sale by Robbins & McCord. 40-44

Bad Accident

Thursday's Daily.

Mrs. Samuel Goodwin over in Gas-Addition was badly hurt yesterday. She was getting into the buggy, and stepped on the hub, and slipped and fell to the ground. Her hip was broken, the head of the femur being snapped off. Dr. F. M. Hines was called, and assisted by his brother, Dr. L. A. Hines and Dr. D. J. Swarts, the fracture was fixed up, as well as could be, but it is a serious matter and her recovery will be very slow.

Bug Story.

A dispatch from Wichita, Kansas dated yesterday, Sept. 26, says: "The most remarkable visitation of bugs ever witnessed in Kansas took place in this city between 12 and 1 o'clock this morning. Bugs covered the sidewalks an inch deep and totally obscured the electric street lamps. The typesetting machines in the newspaper offices became clogged by them and had to be stopped frequently and cleaned. There were all kinds of bugs in the invasion, from the great big black beetle that weighs an ounce to ones no larger than a flea. To-day the electric men gathered over 130 gallons of the insects from the street light globes.

The Grim Reaper.

Mrs. Reine Girardot Passes Away.

At ten minutes past nine o'clock Wednesday evening, Sept. 18, 1895, Grandma Girardot passed peacefully away and a useful and busy life was at an end. Mrs. Girardot has been in poor health for several days past and her death was expected almost at any time. The children and relatives had been summoned to her bedside and everything possible was done to make her last moments pleasant.

Her maiden name was Reine Gacouto and she was born on the 15th day of January, 1808, in Vethory, France, Department of Doubs. At the time of her death she was 87 years, 8 months and 3 days of age. Before leaving her native land she was united in marriage to Joseph Girardot, 1828, with whom she lived happily for 52 years. In 1852, the husband came to America, and six months later the family arrived from their home in France. Eleven children had been born to them before leaving their native country and all came to this country.

Of the eleven children, eight survive: Frank Girardot, of Denver, Colo.; Justin Girardot, of Auburn, Ind.; Mrs. A. Beugnot, of Paulding, Ohio; Mrs. Roy and Mrs. Lentenier, of Ft. Wayne; Chas and Julius Girardot, of Jefferson township, and Mrs. J. B. Beugnot, of New Haven.

At the time of her death there were living 65 grandchildren and 49 great grandchildren. All the children were present at the funeral except Frank Girardot, of Denver.

Twenty-eight years ago this summer, Mr. and Mrs Girardot settled in New Haven and lived happily there until May, 19, 1884, when death entered their home and removed the husband and father. Since that time Mrs. Girardot has made her home with her daughter, Mrs. J. B. Beugnot.

The funeral was held from St. John's church, New Haven, last Saturday morning and was very largely attended. The deceased was widely known and universally respected by all throughout this community. After services by the Rev. Father Wiedan, the remains were peacefully laid to rest in the Catholic cemetery, east of town.

Custer's Last Pay.

The sad fate of Gen. Custer was called up again a few days ago, by the following item in a daily paper:

"The tragic death of Gen. Custer and his gallant men at the hands of the Sioux Indians in the massacre of the Little Big Horn was recalled here this week by the forwarding to Mrs. Custer of a check for $1,500 drawn to the order of Gen. George A. Custer in 1876. The check is dated June 25, and signed by B. L. Smith, at that time assistant paymaster of the army. It was June 25, 1876, that the massacre took place. The check is still unpaid, and soiled and tattered though it be, constitutes a valid claim against the government for the amount represented upon its face, which was no doubt intended as part payment of Gen. Custer's salary as an officer of the United States army."

Where the check has been all these years no one knows, least of all Michael Francis, who found it in the street here last February, and who has retained it in his possession until now. When Francis picked up the bit of paper it was almost as legible as when it was drawn, but three heavy creases in it showed that it had been carried in a pocket book until it had been worn through. The parts were joined together by narrow strips of paper pasted on the back, and the edges were somewhat soiled, as though the paper had at one time been dropped in the mud.

No indorsement appears upon the back of the check and the face shows the mark of no cancellation stamp, demonstrating that the check has never been presented for payment. The check was no doubt forwarded to the northwest before the news of the Custer massacre reached Washington. Had it reached those in charge of the dead soldier's effects it would have been sent back at once in order that the one payable to the heirs could have been sent on in its place. It has evidently been under shelter somewhere, and the chances are that it was mislaid last February and swept out into the street, where it was found by Mr. Francis.

Indiana Soldirs' Home

The New Home for disabled Indiana veterans is being pushed to completion and will likely be ready to occupy by New Years Day. It is situated on a fine site up the river, or north from the site of Purdue University at Lafayette. That is, it is on the west side of the river, and north of West Lafayette. The state appropriates $75,000 for the institution and if more room is needed, the law gives any county through its board of commissioners, the power to build a cottage on the grounds. The cottages built by individual counties, are, we suppose, for the use of only the counties that build them.

Young Journalists.

The following item will call to mind the early journalistic career of Frank Davenport, who for some time published a neat little paper called the Amateur. It was printed by him alone, as well as managed and edited and was a bright little paper. We had him regularly on our exchange list, and no doubt have a few copies laid away yet. The article says:

"Decatur claims the distinction of having the youngest journalists in the United States. They are the Snow brothers—Horace, aged nine years, and Carl, aged thirteen. They are sons of Prof. J. F. Snow, county superintendent of schools. They publish the 'Star News' twice a month The boys edit the paper without the assistance of anyone, set all the type, and, in fact, do all the work themselves. The news is mostly 'what they see at school' and is very nicely written. Their paper contains advertisements of some of the leading merchants of Decatur, and they claim a good circulation."

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

DOINGS OF THE DAY.

SUMMARY OF THE NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Eventful Happenings in Every Known Hemisphere—Fires, Accidents, Crimes, Politics, Religion, Commerce and Crops, Sandwiched with Minor Affairs.

A TERRIFIC STORM.

A Gale Sweeps Over Lake Michigan Doing Much Damage.

A special from Sault Ste Marie, Mich., says: The terrific northwest gale which has raged here for the past few days, continues. Reports of vessels ashore and stranded owing to the steady gale driving the water southeastward, intelligence that all kinds of wreckage is coming ashore north, are heard from various points. The captain of the Anchor liner Schuylkill, which arrived from Duluth, reports passing two boats ashore at Kenwana Point. He thought they were the Matoa and Masabia, two big steel steamers belonging to the Minnesota company. The Matoa and Masabia cleared from Two Harbors for Cleveland. Kenwana Point is one of the most dangerous spots on the lakes, and the boats stranded are likely to prove total losses, owing to the heavy northwest gale.

At Shell Drake the barges Carney and Lillie May, of the Nellie Torront tow, are ashore and total losses.

Twenty boats are anchored between here and Iroquois Point, and above the encampment several large steamers are awaiting an abatement of the gale. Near Manitsique wreckage has been coming ashore since Friday. About ten miles east were found pieces of a table and bed, and part of the cabin from a schooner. The wood was painted white. Although nothing could be found with a name upon it, it is now believed that the wreckage is from the schooner which went to pieces near St. Ignace.

The large three-masted steam barge Oscar T. Flint is fast upon the bottom in the middle of the channel at Ludington. Several tugs have been hard at work upon her but thus far all efforts to dislodge her have been furtile.

To be Closed on Sunday.

Altanta (Ga.) special: The queston of Sunday opening was settled by an overwhelming vote at a directors' meeting on the exposition grounds, held recently. There was a very full meeting of the board and Mr. Cabannis, manager of the Atlanta Journal, moved that the grounds be opened and the midway closed on Sundays. Mr. Howard Palmer, ex-director general, moved that the grounds be closed on Sundays and this action be speedily published. Captain J. W. English, chairman of the executive committee, moved as a substitute that the whole matter be laid on he table. This motion was adopted by an overwhelming vote. It is not believed that any further attempt will be made to open the exposition grounds on Sunday.

A Female Aeronaut Crushed to Death.

An accident occurred at Monrovia, Cal., which resulted in the instant death of Nellie W. Hagel, wife of F. G. Hagel, the aeronaut. The couple have been traveling throughout the State, making balloon ascensions and parachute jumps. Mrs. Hagel made an ascent, and when at the height of 1,000 feet she pulled the rope which cut the parachute loose. She shot downward about 100 feet like a flash. The air caught the parachute and it commenced to open, but suddenly it became apparent that she was falling. She came down like a cannon ball. She struck on her back, her head coming in contact with the ground first. Her skull was crushed. Deceased was 33 years of age and a native of Illinois.

Leaped for Their Lives.

Fire destroyed the large frame tenement house owned by J. W. Warrener, at Gallipolis, Ohio. The flames made such rapid progress that the inmates had to jump from the windows in order to escape being burned to death. Mrs. Vergie Graham and babe, Mrs. Ida Vest and child, and George Oskey leaped from a second-story window and were seriously injured. They will all probably recover. Incendiarism was the cause.

Lives Crushed Out.

Six lives were crushed out at a quarry, eight miles from Independence, Mo., by the premature explosion of a blast. The victims are Miles McTiernan, contractor; Con Pruitt, farmer, 25 years old; Daniel Larkin, quarryman; Antonio Carlin, quarryman; Pat. Welsh, quarryman; Tom. Ferguson, boy, 9 years old. The men were crushed under a huge rock and instantly killed. The boy lived a few hours.

Indians Becoming Ugly.

Henessy (O. T.) special: It is reported that the Aarphoe and Cheyenne Indians on their reservations west of here are becoming urgly and are holding war dances. Report from Anadarko are to the effect that the Kiowas are uneasy and getting ready for the war path. Cattlemen in western Oklahoma are believed to be the cause of the trouble, as well as dissatisfaction with the agent, who is very strict.

Stung to Death.

Judge William May, of Floyd County, Kentucky, died from bee stings. He was hiving a swarm of bees when they covered his head, stinging him in a thousand places. His head and face were so swollen that blood poisoning set in, killing him.

Ended His Duck Hunting.

Louis Shingle of Laporte, Ind., was shooting ducks on Pine Lake, and in getting out of the boat his gun was discharged and almost all the left side of his head was shot away, causing instant death.

Base Ball.

The Baltimore base ball club won the National League penant, beating the Cleyelands only a few points.

Smyrna Wiped Out.

A special from Cadiz, Ohio, says: Word has been received here that the entire business portion of Smyrna has been consumed by fire, some twenty buildings being burned. As there are no railroad or telegraph connections the particulars cannot be learned.

Five People Poisoned.

Five members of the family of L. C. Cypherus of Evansville, Ind., were poisoned by eating canned sardines. One is dead and the others are in a precarious condition.

Down the Bank.

A rear passenger coach of a train of five ears on the Altoona, Clearfield and Northern Railroad jumped the track when coming down the Allegheny Mountains from Wopsononock, Pa. There were twenty passengers in the car which rolled over an embankment on its side. Two men were seriously injured internally and about the head, and were taken to the hospital. All of the other passengers were badly bruised.

One Hundred Lives Lost.

Constantinople special: Advices received here from Hodeida, in the Arabian province of Yemen, report that 100 lives have been lost by a landslide which overwhelmed the village of Hudeys.

IRISH INDEPENDENCE.

The Irish National Alliance of the World the Title of the New Organization.

Birth was given by the Irish national convention, in session at Chicago, to an organization which has for its avowed object the liberation of Ireland from England's yoke by a policy of physical force. The ashes of the Fenian brotherhood are rekindled; the National league, with its trust in legislatures and its reliance upon parliaments and enactments is buried from sight, and in its place rises the Irish National Alliance of the World. Incidentally, too, the Irish parliamentary party across the Atlantic is repudiated, and henceforward will be deprived of the abundant revenues that have been contributed from this country for its maintenance. For the next two years at least, New York city will be the seat of operations of the new movement; Wm. Lyman, a wealthy Irish-American of that city, having been selected as first president of the Alliance with authority to appoint a secretary of his own choice. The plan of operations adopted provides for a central council with authority to issue charters for State organizations. Menbership is limited to people of Irish birth or descent and who shall pledge themselves to aid in the liberation of Ireland by any means "consistent with the laws and usages of civilized nations." The plan closely resembles that of the old Fenian brotherhood.

COUNTERFEIT COIN

Made in a Penitentiary and Circulated by a Foreman.

Jeffersonville (Ind.) special: By the aid of Warden Hert, of the prison south, Secret Service Detective Louis Summers arrested Captain Henry Patton, foreman of the Patton Manufacturing company, on the charge of circulating counterfeit money, which has for years been made in the prison by convicts. Captain Patton confessed his guilt and was taken to New Albany to be given a preliminary hearing before United States Commissioner Harrison, when he will be taken to Indianapolis. The money was manufactured by Convict William Alsop, who is serving a ten year term for grand larceny. This is his fifth term in the prison south.

The money consisted of denominations of dollars, halves, quarters and nickels. Thirty dollars of the counterfeit money was found in Patton's stable. The money was made in plaster paris moulds in what is known as the flask shop. All of the materials used in the manufacture were found by Deputy Warden Mayer. Detective Summers states that the counterfeiting has been going on for two or three years and that he had things almost to a climax when the late administration in prison affairs checked his work. Captain Patton is a brother of Col. A. G. Patton, of Columbus, Ohio.

THE PULSE OF TRADE.

There is an Improved Demand for Money, and Cotton is Higher, but Conditions are Not so Favorable in Other Lines.

Bradstreets' reports on the business of the country says:

Striking features of the week are increased demand for money East and West, the maintenance of the widespread and active demand for iron and steel, and the further upward movement of the price of raw cotton, together with advances in quotations for wheat, flour, and wool. Sudden changes in the weather affecting a wide expanse of territory have made general trade irregular, but reports from those sections unfavorably affected are in part offset by the stimulation of demand for certain articles in other parts of the country. The improved demand for funds continues a feature of the money market at Boston, New York, Chicago, St. Louis, and at minor centers. Inquiry among bankers at cities referred to reveals a better demand from all classes of mercantile borrowers.

General business in the south has shown improvement at Memphis, Nashville, Atlanta, and Birmingham; demand for funds there is improving and all that appears needed is a freer movement of cotton.

SIDE-SWIPED

Was a Baltimore and Ohio Passenger Train.

Grafton (W. Va.) special: Quite a serious accident occurred at Tullenton, a Baltimore and Ohio station sixteen miles east of this place. Passenger train No. 1, west, and the first section of No. 4, east, were to meet at this point. The station is at the east end of a big tunnel through which there is but one track. Trains are required to slow up at either end and await a signal before passing onto the single track. Train No. 1 approached the station while the first section of No. 4 was at the platform taking on passengers. The engineer claims to have mistook the signal, and, without stopping his train, to use a railroad term, "sideswiped" No. 4, overturning two passenger coaches and striking the sleeping car in front. The steamcocks of the collided engine were knocked off and a number of the passengers were injured, some severely and others only slightly.

SIX ARE DEAD.

Another Mine Accident and Great Loss of Life.

Leadville (Colo.) special: Sixty-five pounds of giant powder exploded in the Belgian mine in Adelaide park, five miles from this city. Ten miners were at work in the drifts at the time and it is believed that a miner carrying the powder from one drift to another let it fall and the explosion caused a cave-in, resulting in the instant death of six and the fatal injury of two more. Help was sent from the city when the report of the explosion reached here, to hasten the work of rescue of the wounded and dead. The only miner who can tell how the explosion occurred was brought to the city so badly injured that he cannot talk. He is now at the hospital and will die.

The six bodies were brought to the morgue and were identified as follows: Clark McGinnis, John Hammil, James H. Gray, Ed. Kuhne, Cris Phillips, and John Baggs.

Ran for His Life.

A riot was nearly caused at Toledo, by the killing of 19-months-old Eva Weenstein by an electric street car on Canton avenue. There have been numerous killings on that crowded thoroughfare, which is largely peopled by Hebrews and negroes. The little one ran to its death from the curbstone with so much swiftness that the motorman was unable to avert the accident. Nevertheless, an infuriated mob assembled as if by magic, and Motorman Lecktider was forced to literally run for his life. A patrol wagon load of policemen dashed up in time to prevent the crowd from wreaking its vengeance on the conductor of the car.

Slain in Church.

Advices from Antioch state that Ottoman officials there have succeeded in exciting Mussulmans with a report of an impending massacre by Armenians. As a result of this, Mussulmans, accompanied by police, raided an Armenian Church and searched the building for arms. The Armenians resisted, and in the conflict which ensued, ten of them were killed.

A reign of terror prevails at Kemakh and Erzengen owing to oppressions by the Turks. Many Armenians have been arrested.

Bold Burglars.

The other evening two masked men entered the general store in Springfield, Kan., and drawing revolvers, commanded all the occupants to line up along the wall and hold up their hands. The proprietor and six other men hastened to comply with the request, and were speedily relieved of their valuables. O. C. Chapin, a bridge contractor, entered the store at this moment to seek shelter from the rain, and he also was given a place in the line and relieved of a gold watch and $80. The bandits then backed out of the store, mounted their horses and escaped.

Will They Do It?

United States Minister Denby cabled the State Department from Peking as follows: "Yamen have telegraphed authorities of Chili, Shansi, and Shensi to appoint an officer to escort commission. Edict will issue in a few days punishing officials, and degrading Viceroy. Will telegraph it."

This message refers to the independent American commission, which has been formed to investigate the Chen Tu missionary riots. The edict to which reference is made is supposed to be about to issue as the result of the French investigation of the Cheng Tu affair, and the Viceroy concerned is probably Liu. It is expected that our commission, headed by United States Consul Reade, will be on the road from Tien Tsin to Cheng Tu in a few days.

Justly Punished.

Joseph Hewett, aged 55 years, was sentenced to ten years in the penitentiary by a jury in the Randolph Circuit Court at Muncie, Ind. Hewett's family resided in Parker. They were a wife, two daughters and two sons. Last spring he left his family, and one night in March, when all were sleeping, the house was blown to pieces by dynamite. Hewett was one of the first persons seen after the explosion, was arrested and has since been in jail. His wife was an invalid for several weeks after the accident, and the eldest daughter has not yet recovered from the injuries. The sons and other daughter were also injured.

Frightfully Burned

Charles Barker a young man, was probably fatally burned at Delphos, Ohio. Upon meeting a lady friend he hastily dropped his pipe into his pocket. The fire ignited his coat, and a strong wind which was blowning soon fanned it into a blaze. In his excitement he ran screaming down the street, and before assistance could be rendered his clothes were almost burned off. His condition is critical.

Burned to Death.

At Ottawa, Ohio, Mrs. Fogle of Kalida, was sitting in front of a stove, holding a sick baby. She fell asleep, and awakened to find her night dress afire. She screamed, and when her husband reached her, her scant clothing was afire from head to foot. She lived only a short time. The baby is also seriously injured.

Cyclone in Ohio.

A cyclone swept through Crown City, Ohio, completely destroying the barn of D. J. Jenkins. A number of tobacco men and carpenters were in the barn when it fell with a crash. The injured are: John Nance, severe scalp wound; D. Park, shoulder bruised; William Goothby, internal injuries.

Circus Tent Demolished.

A terrific wind, hail and rain storm passed over Burlington, Iowa, recently. Barnum & Baily's circus was giving a performance and dismissed the audience. The main tent, animal tent, and boarding tent were blown to pieces and completely wrecked. No one was injured.

The Bannock Indians.

The commissioner of Indian affairs in his annual report says that the Bannock Indians are still sullen and demand that the whites who fired on them shall be punished. The government seems to concede the justice of the demand but red tape ties its hands.

Peppermint Marshes Afire.

Incendiaries set fire to the large peppermint marshes east of Niles, Mich., and the flames have destroyed fences, haystacks, and outbuildings. The loss will amount to thousands of dollars, as many tons of peppermint were destroyed.

His Kidney Broken.

Frank Doudna, a prominent Shawnee, Ohio, business man, who fell from a porch the other night, died in the hospital at Zanesville, and an examination revealed that one of his kidneys had been broken squarely in two.

Tried to Kill Marquis Ito.

Yokohama special: An attempt was made on the life of Marquis Ito, Prime Minister and President of the Council of Japan. The would-be assassin, who is a member of the anti-foreign league, was arrested.

Roby Overruled.

The Indiana Supreme Court overruled the petition for a rehearing in the Roby race track case. The court adheres to the original decision by Justice Howard that racing as carried on at Roby is unlawful.

The Gracie Burned.

Petoskey (Mich.) special: The Gracie Barker, a small passenger steamer plying on Little Traverse Bay, burned to the water's edge. Loss, $5,000; no insurance.

Might Find Out Their Mistake.

The Pall Mall Gazette affects to consider the Irish movement now on foot by conventions in Chicago, as only another Clan na Gael affair.

To Prevent Prize Fighting.

The Governor of Texas has called a special meeting of the legislature to take action on prize fighting.

TAMMANY IN CONTROL

RULES THE NEW YORK DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION.

State Democracy Men Leave the Hall, and Senator Hill and His Friends Have It All Their Own Way—The Platform and Ticket.

Bow to the Tiger.

There was an exciting scene in the New York Democratic State convention at Syracuse when the delegates of the State Democracy rose in a body and left the hall. This action, according to a press dispatch, was caused by the adoption of the report of the Committee on Credentials. The anti-Tammany Democrats of New York City considered a fifth of a loaf worse than no bread at all. The proposition to give one-fifth of a vote to each of their delegates, giving four-fifths to Tammany, was rejected by them, though indorsed by the convention. A final struggle was made by the Cleveland men in a motion to allow them one-third representation, or 35 votes to 70 for Tammany. This was voted down and they left the hall, taking their one-fifth representation with them. Senator Hill voted with Tammany for the report and against the motion, an early morning conference having resulted in a patching up of his differences with the tiger.

D. B. HILL.

The State Democracy might have accepted the one-fifth representation if it had not been coupled with the hard conditions of a recognition of Tammany Hall as the regular party organization, entitled to recognition in all future conventions. The one-fifth representation was to be accepted not as a right but as a sop to harmony, and the State Democracy promptly decided to reject it and enter a vigorous protest. Charles S. Fairshild, of New York, said when he left the convention: "The Associated Press can announce that we will have a ticket of our own on all local issues."

The resolution adopted by the Committee on Credentials read as follows:

"Tammany Hall is entitled to recognition in all future conventions as regular, and its delegates are to be placed upon the preliminary and other rolls thereof, and, in the appointment of inspectors of elections, the use of the party emblem and in every other way in which the question of party organization may arise, said Tammany Hall organization shall be recognized and seated as the regular organization of the party in New York County, but in the interest of harmony at this time the committee recommends, subject to the aforesaid conditions, that the sitting delegates, as well as the delegates known as the State Democracy, be admitted to the convention with one-fifth of a vote to each State Democracy delegate and four-fifths of a vote to each Tammany Hall delegate."

The resolution was adopted by a vote of 32 to 17. Senator Hill voted yea and William B. Kirk, of Onondaga nay. A motion to give the State Democracy one-third of a vote each was lost by a vote of 22 to 27, the nays including Hill and Kirk. The rank and file of the State Democracy were at first inclined to accept the half loaf, but when Mr. Fairchild arrived he vigorously protested against surrendering any rights.

R. P. FLOWER.

The Grace-Fairchild people left the hall, and as they filed out there was a repetition of the scene in the Democratic convention of 1894 at Saratoga. They were alternately cheered and hissed. When the tumult had subsided the report of the Committee on Permanent Organization was read, and the chairman appointed John Boyd Thatcher and James N. Sheppard to escort ex-Gov. Flower to the chair as permanent chairman of the convention.

The platform adopted declares for home rule in cities, economy in public expense, an orderly Sunday without blue laws, home rule in excise, equal taxation, honest elections, good roads, opposition to trusts, Federal taxation for revenue only, "sound money," and a vigorous enforcement of the Monroe doctrine. The administration of President Cleveland is indorsed and that of Gov. Morton denounced. The following ticket was nominated without opposition:

Judge Court of Appeals....Judge Teller
Secretary of State.....Horatio C. King
Comptroller.....John B. Judson
Attorney General.....Norton Chase
Treasurer.....D. C. Dow
State Engineer.....Russell Stuart

IN AID OF COMMERCE.

Navigation Topics Carefully Considered at the Cleveland Conference.

The International Deep Water Association, which met at Cleveland, proved a large success in the number of attendants. The real test of its practical importance may not come for a long time yet. It is certainly encouraging to have this evidence of interest. The relative importance of water-ways has greatly decreased, it is true, since the days of De Witt Clinton and the Erie Canal, but from a positive point of view their importance has greatly increased.

At the opening of the session a partial report of the Committee on Credentials was submitted, indicating the presence of 330 delegates from fifteen States and Provinces. President Howland said that he had received a communication from Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Premier of Canada, designating an eminent engineer, Mr. Munro, to represent the Canadian Government at the convention. Mr. Howland then invited Lieut. George P. Blow, who came to the convention as a representative of the United States Government, and Mr. Munro to take seats on the platform. He said the action of the two Governments in sending representatives to the convention did not in any way commit them to the policy of the convention.

After adopting a rule limiting speeches to ten minutes, discussion was declared in order, and Mr. Richard R. Dobell, of Quebec, and Mr. A. L. Crocker, president of the Minneapolis Board of Trade, gave abstracts of the papers which they had prepared on "Export Lumber and Timber Trade." Mr. Dobell in closing cordially invited the convention to meet next year in Quebec. Alexander H. Smith, secretary of the Executive Canal Committee of New York, read a paper upon the subject of "An Improved Erie Canal Offered to Lake Commerce as a Substitute for a Ship Canal." Mr. Smith said that the people of New York were intensely interested in cheap transportation and the commerce of the great lakes. He detailed at length the proposed plans for improving the Erie Canal and expressed the belief that when the work of deepening that waterway had been completed the canal would easily accommodate the lake traffic to the sea. Prof. Emory R. Johnson, of the University of Pennsylvania read a paper on the "Effect of Deep Water Between the Great Lakes and the Sea Upon Railway Traffic and Profits."

CLEVELAND'S DEADLINE.

Which No Person Can Pass Without the President's Consent.

When President Cleveland gets to Gray Gables, his country place on Buzzard's Bay, he feels quite safe from annoying visitors. The place is so situated naturally that it is impossible for anyone to get to the house without the President's consent. Should the visitor attempt an entrance to the domain by water he would find at the floating dock, where alone it is possible to land, a man on guard who would tell him that "Mr. Cleveland is engaged."

Much the same performance is gone through with by those who approach on land. They have to traverse half a mile of private road before they reach the lodge. There is no other road leading to Gray Gables, and any one on foot who attempted to cross the marsh near the estate would have a sorry time of it.

At the lodge visitors are met by officers of the secret service. If they are personal friends of the President or are expected, they are allowed to go on. If they are there simply out of curiosity or with the hope of seeing Mr. Cleveland, they are allowed to go to "the deadline" as it is called. Beyond that may no man pass without Mr. Cleveland's direct permission.

MAP OF MR. CLEVELAND'S GROUNDS.

This "deadline" is established just west of the stables. It was placed there so that vehicles could have an opportunity to turn around in the open space in front of the carriage shed. The driveway is too narrow to turn in any other place. From this outpost messages and cards are taken to the house, while visitors wait with a hope that is almost sure to be blasted.

The occasion for the establishment of "the deadline" was not so much to keep at a distance importunate office-seekers as to put a stop to the great annoyance which over-curious people subject the President's family to. Until the "deadline" edict went forth, wagon loads of people from all around would drive into the President's grounds, pull up directly in front of the north piazza, the favorite gathering place of the family, and stare at the people who happened to be sitting there in a way that was, to say the least, embarrassing, pointing out each individual and commenting audibly.

After a year of that sort of thing every day, with no holiday from the ordeal of inspection, even on Sunday, Mr. Cleveland established "the deadline." He said he was not only willing, but felt much complimented to have his fellow citizens make trips to see his home and his grounds, but he seriously objected to having his family and himself put on exhibition like so many freaks in a museum. He thought he was entitled to a little of the domestic privacy which is accorded without question to his 60,000,000 fellow citizens.

CONVENTION OF IRISHMEN.

A Militia Organization for Irish-Americans Is Advocated.

The great national convention of Irish societies was opened in the Young Men's Christian Association Hall in Chicago with a large representation of Irishmen from all parts of the country. Nearly 1,500 delegates were in attendance. The convention lasted three days. One general object was the formation of a united open organization for the furtherance of the Irish cause. Those who issued the call for the convention claim that it is not contemplated that physical force shall be used or advised in the attainment of the independence of the Irish people as a nation, "unless such means be deemed absolutely necessary and the object in view be probable of attainment."

Little time was lost in preliminaries and the election of permanent officers was put through at a rapid pace and with uninterupted harmony. The report of the Committee on Permanent Organization did not meet with the slightest opposition, the following officers being unanimously elected: J. F. Finerty, Chairman; J. P. Sutton, Secretary; J. F. Keating, T. H. McGravey and J. O. Strain, Assistant Secretaries; Vice Presidents, J. M. Kennedy, Montana; C. D. O'Brien, St. Paul; C. F. Driscoll, New Haven; P. J. Judge, Holyoke; Cornelius Harding, Pittsburg.

Considerable enthusiasm was created by a motion to add O'Donovan Rossa to the list of vice presidents, but Mr. Rossa declined. Any doubts as to the earnestness of the "new movement" towards freedom for Ireland, were set at rest when Chairman John F. Fineray, in an address to the convention, declared for an Irish-American standing army which shall be ready to do battle for Ireland whenever opportunity may present itself. The boldness of the plan as outlined by the ardent speaker created a sensation.

The Comic Side of The News

FREE WOOL POPULAR

HIGHEST AUTHORITY ARGUES AGAINST DUTIES.

Ohio Republican Orators Unconsciously Play Into the Hands of Democrats—Judge Babb's Concise Refutation of High-Taxers' Claims.

Lesson of England.

The Dry Goods Economist, the leading organ of the dry goods trade, has an article in its issue of Sept. 7 entitled "Profitable Wool Growing—Why the American Farmer Should Need No Protection on the Product of His Flock." It produces from the United States Government report "Wool and the Manufactures of Wool, 1894," the following diagram showing the comparative production of wools in the different countries of the earth:

Australia.
Russia.
Argentine Republic.
United States.
United Kingdom.
All other countries.

The Economist reasons as follows:

"Most people will admit that the doctrine of free raw materials is, theoretically at least, right and generally justified by circumstances and conditions. Generally speaking, the only application of the theory to which exception is taken is in the matter of free wool. In spite of the general benefit conferred by the abolition of the duty on wool it is still claimed in some quarters that the American wool grower is entitled to protection from foreign competition.

"Yet why he should be thus favored it is difficult to see. Certainly he has had plenty of time and a fair chance to show what he can do in the way of producing wool profitably, and if he has not succeeded it seems hard on the textile manufacturers that they should be debarred from free entrance into the world's markets when they wish to purchase wools of other classes than those produced in this country.

"It would certainly seem that the domestic wool grower has not yet made out a good case for himself, since in spite of the enormous difference in area this country's production of wool is not so very far ahead of that of Great Britain. Small as the latter country is in size, in the production of wool she stands fifth among the countries of the world."

It says that the surprising fact that England, with high-priced and highly taxed lands, can compete freely with Australia, the Argentine and the sheep raising sections of the United States, with their cheap grazing lands and other natural advantages, is partly accounted for by the enterprise of English wool growers. Without peculiar fitness of soil or climate excellent results have been obtained by careful breeding and by confining each breed of sheep to the sctions to which it is best adapted. The Lincolns, the Leicesters, the Cotswolds, the Southdowns are well-known varieties of sheep sought after by sheep breeders in all parts of the world. Continuing the Economist says:

"The lesson is obvious. If the English farmer, handicapped as he is, can make a success of sheep raising and wool growing, the American farmer, with cheap land and other advantages, ought to be able to compete at least equally well with the other wool-growing countries. It would seem that the American woolen manufacturer would better recall the old adage that 'charity begins at home,' and look out for his own interests, leaving the American farmer to study out the secret of successful and profitable wool growing."

When such a representative journal as the Dry Goods Economist takes this position it is evident that free wool has become popular with manufacturers and dealers and that they will in future not assist McKinley or the Ohio political wool growers' association in putting wool back on the dutiable list. Free wool has made friends and in doing so has weakened the support of protection.

The arch of protection is unstable without the keystone of free wool. Can the Republicans replace this keystone?

The Campaign in Iowa.

In Iowa, as in Ohio, the Democrats propose to force the fighting on State issues. Fully three-fifths of Judge Babb's speech at Cedar Rapids, opening the campaign, was devoted to such issues. Yet, as in Ohio, there is no disposition to evade national issues or avoid the defense of Democratic national policy as expressed in the new tariff law.

Regarding the tariff, Judge Babb restated very clearly the difference between a Republican tariff for protection and a Democratic tariff for revenue. He made it as clear as day that there is a very wide difference between a tariff purposely intended to enable favored classes to raise the prices of their products and thus to increase their gains out of the earnings of those not so favored and a tariff intended only to bring revenue into the public treasury for the necessary purposes of the Government. Judge Babb clearly exposed the injustice of a tariff of the former kind, and especially emphasized the injuries inflicted by it upon its victims, especially farmers, whose industries are such that no law can increase the prices of their products.

But Judge Babb was especially interesting when he passed from the discussion of the general principles underlying tariff laws and spoke of the effect of the law of Aug. 28, 1894. He recalls the Republican predictions that this measure, "like a cyclone, was to sweep out of existence all our manufactories" and spread dire disaster and ruin everywhere, and then proceeds to state the facts.

He first shows from the record that the new tariff, so far from reducing the revenue, as was predicted, has increased it. He shows that while the customs revenue for the last eleven months of the McKinley tariff was only $112,641,883 it has been $145,752,320 during the expired eleven months under the new tariff. An increase of $33,000,000 in eleven months under the extremely unfavorable conditions which prevailed when the law first went into effect is not a bad showing.

Then he proceeds to direct attention to the well-known fact, the fact which all the organs of McKinleyism are forced to admit in their news columns if not editorially, that our manufacturing industries have not been swept from the face of the earth. On the contrary, business has been steadily reviving, the wheels of industry have been resuming their revolutions, more men are employed than under the McKinley law and their wages have been increased. There is nothing in this for Democrats to be ashamed of, except that they were not courageous enough to go further than they did and give the country a more liberal and, therefore, a more beneficent tariff law.

The Ohio Candidate and Issue.

The Republicans of Ohio make no secret of the fact that McKinley is their candidate for President, logical or illogical as the case may be. McKinley's platform is, therefore, a matter of some public interest.

In the first place, he does not seem to look for any tariff legislation for the next two years. After that he predicts there will be some legislation along his lines. "No man can tell what the schedules and rates may be, for these must depend upon conditions existing at the time. But this is certain, that whatever the great principle of protection to American interests and labor indicates as essential to good wages, expanding production and general prosperity these will be the rates that are bound to prevail. Schedules may be altered and rates changed to meet existing conditions, but the principle of protection cannot be changed. It is unalterable."

Translated into good, plain English, this means that whatever crowd offers to contribute the most fat to the tank containing the lubricant for the Republican machine will get the kind of schedule and the kind of rates it wants.

The real infants among the industries will get the marble heart, because they are too lean to contribute to the campaign tank. It was so in 1890; it will be so if the people give the Republican party, with McKinley at the head of it, an opportunity to make another application of "the great principle of protection."

"Reciprocity, too, will not be overlooked," says McKinley. "A policy will not be abandoned * * * that takes the products of other countries which we do not produce on condition that they freely admit our products and manufactures into their markets on terms of mutual advantage and profit." Undoubtedly this policy will be restored if the Republicans are given a chance to restore it, for it is a part of protectionism.

"The great principle" underlying it is that the American people are a lot of dunces who don't know for themselves when a trade is profitable and when it is not, who cannot be trusted to buy and sell as they please across national lines and who need a lot of guardians in Washington to tell them what they may buy and how much they may trade.

The whole "principle" is a flagrant insult to the intelligence of a people who boast that they have no superiors in the world in a trade.

It is to be hoped by Democrats that the Republicans will nominate the Ohio Napoleon next year on this "great principle."

Whom the Coal Duty Protects.

Mr. J. Leiter, of Washington, D. C., is quoted by a protectionist paper as saying that while coal in the ground in West Virginia is worth 25 cents per ton, in Nova Scotia it is worth nothing, and that therefore the Virginia coal needs protection against the cheaper Nova Scotia product. Mr. Leiter would find it difficult to show why coal in one part of the earth is naturally worth more than coal of the same quality in another part. It certainly did not cost more to produce, as it was all made before man appeared on the planet. The only explanation which can be given of the difference is that the protective tariff enables the men who own coal lands in West Virginia to charge the mining companies 25 cents for the privilege of working, while in Nova Scotia the land belongs to the people who let men work for a smaller payment, but not for nothing, as Mr. Leiter says.

Logic of Republican Contention.

The Republican press have at length, after much delay, come to recognize the fact that the times are prosperous. But they all have an excuse for it. It is all due, they say, to anticipation of Republican victory in 1896. The cause always used to come before the effect, but our Republican logicians find no difficulty in an effect that comes a long while before the cause. According to this theory, if the Democrats should win next year, as they are likely to do, we shall be treated to a spectacle of an effect without any cause whatever.

From Prostration to Prosperity.

The McKinley law found the country prosperous and left it prostrate. The present law found the country prostrate and helped it to its feet. To say that full prosperity returned at once would be to talk nonsense, for business when so grievously wounded cannot recover in a day. But it is not too much to say that business has been improving steadily ever since, except so far as the Republican legislation on the currency has tended to retard it.

They Care for Place, Not Principle.

The Ohio Republicans are running a Foraker candidate on Sherman-McKinley issues. This looks like harmony, but it is nothing of the sort. The Foraker gang are willing to let the Sherman-McKinley crowd do the talking on the stump so long as they have a show for every office in sight themselves. The Foraker gang don't let issues bother them. Like Artemus Ward's showman, they haven't got a principle in them.

Necessary Changes Made.

The Hartford Times (Dem.) notices Mr. Sherman's statement that "the McKinley law, with such changes as time may make necessary, will accomplish the purpose of tariff legislation," and says: "Somebody should tell the distinguished Senator that necessary changes have already been made in the McKinley law. They are working very satisfactorily."

McKinleyism Receiving Punctures.

McKinleyism is continually receiving punctures in its tire in the almost daily reports of wages advancing and the general resumption of factories throughout the country.—Toledo Bee.

Lord Bayneham looked anxiously in his wife's face. It was very pale and thin, now that the bright blushes had faded—more beautiful than ever, though so changed.

"We must take care of you, my darling," he said; "a few weeks of entire happiness will bring the roses back again. Hilda, am I dreaming? Shall I really return to Bayneham, and take with me my wife and child?"

It was an evening of unclouded happiness.

"I shall not return to Grosvenor Square without my treasures," said Lord Bayneham, resolutely.

"Had you not better prepare Lady Bayneham and Miss Earle for the surprise?" suggested Mrs. Massey.

"No," replied Lord Bayneham; "I dare not trust Hilda from my sight again. They must return with me. It can be easily managed; there are no servants in the London house who know anything of the sorrow we have suffered, or its cause. Those with us will think that, as I have been absent the greater part of the day, I have been to fetch their lady home."

"It is so sudden," said Mrs. Massey; "our house will have lost its sunshine."

"Think how long mine has been in darkness," replied Lord Bayneham. "I must take Hilda and Lionel with me. I could not leave them, and my mother must share my happiness. My poor mother—her hair is whitened with sorrow—and Barbara Earle have never ceased to grieve."

Then Hilda drew near her husband, and whispered something about her fear and dread at seeing the countess again.

"Hilda," said Lord Bayneham, "my mother blamed herself most bitterly for not having loved you more. She knows all your story, and, believe me, who never spoke falsely to you, she loves you the better for it."

The farewell was not taken without many tears. In the midst of her happiness, Lady Hilda sorrowed at leaving the friends who had been so kind to her. Every one in the house was grieved at losing the beautiful, gentle lady and her child; but Lionel was too happy with his new papa to care for anything else.

Lord Bayneham and his fairy young wife, with the little child, drove home in the calm of the sweet spring evening. Never to them had the stars shone so brightly; never had the soft breeze told a sweeter story; never was spring evening so holy, so happy as this.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

Lady Bayneham and Miss Earl sat alone in the drawing-room in Grosvenor Square. The clock had already chimed ten, and Lord Bayneham had said he should not be late.

"If you are tired, aunt," said Miss Earl, "I will wait for Claude—he will not be long."

"I prefer waiting," said Lady Bayneham. "My boy's face was brighter when he left home than I have seen it for many years. I am waiting, hoping to see that bright look again."

It was not long before the roll of a carriage was heard, and the loud knock that resounded through the house assured the countess of her son's return. She rose from her seat to greet him. His face as he entered the room, struck her with amazement.

"What is it, Claude?" she asked. "Why do you look so? Have you good news?"

"I have brought friends home with me, mother," he said; "and I want you to welcome them."

"That I will," said Lady Bayneham; "who are they?"

"A lady and a little boy," he replied; and his mother noticed how his voice faltered over the words.

"A lady and a little boy!" she echoed, in amazement. "Who are they?"

A beautiful child now came into the room.

"See," said Lord Bayneham, "this is my youngest guest."

"What a lovely boy!" cried the countess, raising him in her arms. "He is like one of Murillo's angels."

"Kiss him, mother," said Lord Bayneham; "kiss him, and welcome him home."

Lady Bayneham's face wore a startled look.

"Home!" she repeated; "what do you mean, Claude? Have you adopted him? Who is he?"

"Draw near to me, mother; and you, Barbara, faithful friend, listen while I tell you who he is. The boy with a cherub's face is my son, Lionel Earle Bayneham, Viscount Hulsmeer, and his mother is waiting for your welcome. Shall I bid her enter?"

Lady Bayneham could give no answer in words, but the caresses she lavished upon the child were answer enough. At last the wish of her heart was fulfilled; she held her son's child, the heir of Bayneham, in her arms. The grand old race was not doomed to extinction after all. She found words, however, when a beautiful woman with golden hair and shy, blushing face entered the room, and going up to her, said: "Can you pardon me, mother, for all the trouble I have caused you?"

For the first time in her life Lady Bayneham clasped her son's wife in her arms.

"It is I who should ask pardon from you," she said. "You shall be to me, for the future, as my dearest and best-loved daughter. Never let another secret stand between us."

"Am I quite forgotten?" said Barbara Earle, as she clasped Hilda's hands warmly in her own.

"But," said Lady Bayneham, "I do not quite understand; is this lovely boy your son, Hilda?"

"He is mine," replied the proud, fair mother.

Lionel had made himself quite at home with Barbara, and Lady Hilda knelt down to kiss him as he sat upon her knee. Lord Bayneham thought he had never gazed upon such a group.

Then came eager and hurried explanations. Lord Bayneham told eloquently the story of Captain Massey's generous and noble conduct, and Barbara Earle's eyes grew dim with tears. This man, who in the darkest hour of Lady Hilda's life had come to her rescue, was the one who had hopelessly loved her long years ago.

Long after midnight they sat, unwilling to end that happy meeting, and the golden-haired child slept in his father's arms, for Lord Bayneham could not endure to part with him.

They agreed that every explanation should be made then, and Lady Hilda related the history of her parents. Lord Bayneham told of Stephen Hurst's death, and then the whole subject was to be banished forever. In Lady Bayneham's heart the last remnant of pride had died out. She forgot her prejudices, and felt nothing but proud happiness when she gazed upon her son's beautiful wife and his noble little heir.

* * * * * * *

Three days afterward the May sun shone upon a beautiful scene enacted at Bayneham. The lord of the Castle, with his wife and son, was returning home, it was said, from a foreign tour. Triumphal arches were everywhere erected. "Welcome to Bayneham!" "Welcome Home!" met the eye at every turn; flags and banners waved among the trees; and through the sweet, fragrant air, came the distant chiming of the joy-bells. The sky was blue, the flowers were all blooming, birds singing, the sun shining—there was no fairer scene on earth than that. Crowds of expectant tenants and servants assembled; and when the carriages came at length into sight a cheer arose from all, that made the very welkin ring.

"There is my lord—that is my lady—and see the viscount!" was heard on all sides.

Lord Bayneham's face wore a reverent, almost awe-struck expression.

"How shall we best deserve all this happiness, Hilda?" he said. "I feel unworthy of it. Heaven help me to do my best!"

In the second carriage Lady Bayneham sat with Barbara Earle and Bertie Carlyon. There were cheers for her, for Barbara was loved by those who served her.

It was a pleasant sight, when the carriages drove away, to see the young earl and his beautiful wife standing under the broad Gothic porch of their old home. People afterward said that Lady Hilda's face was bright as a sunbeam. Lord Bayneham stood, holding her hand in his, while he, in a few graceful words, thanked the crowd around him for their hearty welcome. There was a cheer for the gallant earl, and one for his fair wife. Then Lord Bayneham, raising the child in his arms, called for another cheer for his son, the heir of Bayneham.

* * * * * * *

Not one word could Bertie contrive to speak that evening to Miss Earle. The Castle was full of guests—there was no chance; but when the brilliant evening ended, he contrived to whisper, as he bade her good-night, "Barbara, has my penance ended?"

Miss Earle smiled, but made no reply. She was, however, down early the next morning, and for all ornament wore a string of costly pearls, to which was fastened a small golden apple. Bertie's face was a study when he saw it, and then Lord Bayneham interfered.

"The marriage," he said, "shall be delayed no longer."

Before the June roses had ceased to bloom, Barbara Earle became Bertie Carlyon's wife.

Bertie Carlyon's name was known all over England. He became one of the leading statesmen of the day; and when men congratulated him on his success, he would turn with grateful eyes to the noble woman by his side, and thank her for it.

Lady Bayneham recovered her health and spirits, and her own mother could not have been more tender to Hilda than was the proud countess.

The last news discussed at Bayneham was the marriage of Captain Massey. He met Miss Deverney, and to his mother's intense delight, at once fell in love with her. They are very happy, and never omit once every year, to pay a visit to Bayneham.

* * * * * * *

One beautiful morning in June, Lord Bayneham asked his wife to accompany him on a little stroll. Lionel ran before them, and a sweet, fair-faced girl, whom her mother called Magdalen, walked by her side.

"Where are we going?" asked Lady Hilda.

"Patience," replied her husband, "you will soon see."

They went through the park, where the wind whispered among the tall trees, and birds sung sweetly in their shady depths, and into the high road, past the Firs cottage, and into the little church-yard, where Lady Hilda had once stood with despair in her heart.

Lord Bayneham took his wife's hand, and led her to what was once a nameless grave.

"There stood a costly monument of white marble, with this inscription:

"SACRED
"To the Memory of Magdalen Hurst.
"Through many tribulations she has gone to rest."

"Hilda," said Lord Bayneham, "my mother erected this. I brought you here by her wish. Tell me now, have you one cloud in the sky?"

"Not one," she replied, raising her beautiful face to the clear morning sky. "Heaven is good to me. I will try to deserve it."

The sun that shone upon the quiet grave and the waving trees, upon the true, noble husband and the fair, blooming children, was not more bright than the future that lay before Lady Hutton's ward.

(The end.)

How to Improve Your Writing.

"I have made a discovery of value to the schoolmaster," said the fat man, and he exhibited with pride his right hand with the ring finger tied close up to the palm in a string bridle which was passed around the thumb and tied around the wrist.

"You see, it came about in this way. The end of the finger was sore and I wanted to keep it away from the desk while I was writing. It was after I tied it up that I made my discovery. Ordinarily when I write I have an awkward habit of forming the letters by moving my whole hand and forearm. Since I have tied that finger up and do not have it to slide the hand along upon I find that I am obliged to write with a movement of the first two fingers and the thumb in the proper manner. It is a great and valuable discovery and ought to be put to use in the schools."—New York Sun.

His Collection Incomplete.

It has come to such a fad nowadays for young men with a fondness for bric-a-brac to confiscate small articles of glass and china from the table when dining privately at hotels that the managers figure on it when contracting for large dinners. One of these young men, at a large dinner in a Boston hostelry the other night, had cleverly tucked away three wine glasses, a small spoon and a coffee cup. When he was just slipping the saucer under his coat, the big black waiter who was collecting dishes came up opposite him with a pile of them about two feet high, and rolling his face into a genuine Georgia grin, he asked: "Say, boss, doan' yuh wanter take dese along, too?"

LIFE OF FRANKLIN.

WAS ONE OF THIS COUNTRY'S GREATEST MEN.

A Most Interesting Character—He Excelled in More Points than Any Other American and Earned Fame in Whatever Direction He Turned.

Man Among Men.

It was 105 years ago that Benjamin Franklin died, in some respects the greatest man this country has produced. He was certainly a most interesting one. His life touches so many points of interest, he was so prominent in many fields that history easily accords him a lofty rank. He was at once a philosopher, statesman, diplomat, scientist, inventor and wit and as a writer of English second to scarcely any. The story of such a life cannot help but be interesting as illustrative of how much an earnest man can make of himself when to that end he bends every energy of his mind.

Franklin's parents had gone to Boston some time before his birth and settled there with a large family of children. Here the subject of this sketch was born in January, 1706. He showed in boyhood a great precocity and eagerly read whatever books he could lay his hands on. His father wanted to send him to Harvard and fit him for the ministry, but felt that this he could not afford in his straitened circumstances and so took him in to his own chandler's shop to teach him the trade. But Franklin disliked the work, and so was apprenticed to his brother, who had a printing office. In 1821 this brother began publishing the New England Courant, the third paper published in Boston, and Franklin contributed various articles to it. One of these on political matters gave so much offense to the authorities that the young author was threatened with imprisonment. He thought it was a good time for him to get out of Boston, and accordingly he made his way to Philadelphia.

His journey to that city was attended with every sort of inconvenience, but he finally reached there one Sunday morning with just a dollar in his pocket. However, he soon found employment and friends, among them a Mr. Reed, with whose daughter, Deborah, he proceeded at once to fall in love.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN.

Another friend was Sir William Keath, and this gentleman felt so great an affection for the boy that he offered to set him up in business. He advised Franklin to go over to England and buy a printing press, promising to pay his expenses and give him letters to some powerful people there. Franklin sailed; but when he arrived in England he found Keith had neither forwarded money as he had promised, or letters, and so he was left absolutely penniless and friendless in a strange land. But Franklin was the last one to be dismayed by such conditions and boldly set to work, both to make friends and find work. In both he was successful and passed eighteen months in London, during which he saw much and learned a good deal, so that, when he returned to Philadelphia in 1726, he was vastly improved from the youth who had left there so short a time before. Franklin now married Deborah Reed, established a printing business of his own, began the publication of the Pennsylvania Gazette, and set himself to make a worthy position in life.

That energy which was so marked a characteristic of Franklin's nature soon impelled him to take an active part in the political life of his time. He became postmaster of Philadelphia, and so successfully did he conduct the office that it soon became the center of the postal system of the colonies. He proposed to a Congress assembled in Albany the only feasible plan for continental government and he procured the repeal of the hated stamp act. Franklin's patriotism was often questioned, for though he desired America to be freed from British oppression he was far from wishing to plunge the country into war if it could possibly be avoided When, however, a conflict became inevitable, Franklin at once embraced the cause of independence with heart and soul. He was chosen a member of Congress in 1775, and was one of those who drew up the Declaration of Independence which he afterward signed. Later on he was a delegate to that assembly which formed the constitution of the United States.

FRANKLIN'S BIRTHPLACE, MILK STREET, BOSTON.

As a diplomat Franklin ranks deservedly high. The Declaration of Independence made foreign aid for this country absolutely necessary and especially the aid of France, England's great enemy No man in America was so well fitted as Franklin to undertake a mission to that country. He had a working knowledge of French and Latin—a thing possessed by but few Americans at that time—and moreover he had a practical common sense and a grasp of affairs unequaled by any other man. His work in France was most brilliant. He managed to secure financial aid for completing the war and setting the government on its feet, and finally secured the treaty of 1783, one of the greatest triumphs of modern diplomacy, whereby both France and England were made friends of America.

From his early youth Franklin was interested in scientific studies, and the fruit of these was seen in 1742 when he invented a stove which was a marvelous improvement on the methods then employed for heating rooms. Ten years later he showed, by means of a kite, that lightning is a discharge of electricity, and for this the Royal Society awarded him a medal. Franklin began to publish an almanac in 1732, which he continued for some years under the title of Poor Richard's Almanac. It was filled full of short and pithy business maxims which, if not of great moral value, were singularly shrewd. He also left a charming autobiography which tells the story of his life until 1757.

Franklin was buried at Philadelphia near his wife. Their graves are marked by marble slabs. He left behind him the following epitaph, which is often quoted, and has become famous: "The Body of Benjamin Franklin, Printer, like the cover of an old book, its contents torn out and stripped of its lettering and gilding, lies here food for worms; but the work shall not be lost, for it will, as he believes, appear once more in a new and more elegant edition, revised, and corrected by the author."

ALL SHOULD WORK.

What Theodore Roosevelt Says of the Duties of Young Men.

When asked what he would say to the young men of New York if he had power to speak to them commandingly, Theodore Roosevelt, the courageous president of the Board of Police Commissioners, replied: "I'd order them to work. I'd try to develop and work out an ideal of mine—the theory of the duty of the leisure class to the community. I have tried to do it by example, and it is what I have preached; first and foremost, to be American, heart and soul, and to go in with any person, heedless of anything but that person's qualifications. For myself, I'd work as quick beside Pat Dugan as with the last descendant of a patroon; it literally makes no difference to me so long as the work is good and the man is in earnest. One other thing, I'd like to teach the young man of wealth that he who has not got wealth owes his first duty to his family, but he who has means owes his first duty to the state. It is ignoble to try to heap money on money. I would preach the doctrine of work to all, and to the men of wealth the doctrine of unremunerative work."

"Why," asked Dismal Dawson, leaning over the fence, "why do you keep on diggin' when the boss ain't around?" "Because I really like the job," said the new farm hand. "Got a real likin' fer work?" "Sure." "You'd orter take treatment."—Indianapolis Journal.

PANTS DON'T MAKE MEN.

AN IRRESISTIBLE WOMAN.

Miss Laura Canby Is 19 Years Old and She's a Drummer.

San Francisco has one commercial traveler who has a just claim to "Sam'l of Posen's" statement that "the drummer is the innocentest person on the road, Rebecca!" The name of the drummer is Miss Laura Canby. She is only 19 years old, and a success. In fact, she has been a success for two years past, the length of time she has been following her unusual calling.

"I was only 17 when I began," said Miss Canby, "but age counts nothing in this business." Miss Laura Canby apparently has an old head on her young shoulders.

She is not the least bit like one's notion of the female drummer, and she does not bear the faintest likeness to the Advanced Sisters. She thinks drumming is the very best profession in the world for women, and says that the large houses are coming more and more to employ them. Women can be more independent in that profession than any other, and have a better opportunity to study people and gain experience of the world.

A BABY CAMEL.

The Main Attraction at the Philadelphia Zoo.

A young colt with two humps on its back, a neck like a giraffe, and feet like pin cushions. That's what the baby camel at the Philadelphia zoo looks like. The women among the visitors call it "too cute for anything," and the men say: "That's the blamedest looking thing I ever saw." The little lady, for this is a girl camel, may not be endowed with beauty as beauty in the camel race goes, but she certainly is a very interesting and very amusing thing to look at.

THE NEW ZOO BABY.

She made her debut in this queer world but a short time ago, much to the joy of her parents, who have resided at the zoo ever since the establishment of that interesting garden. The new arrival is the third child of this pair of camels. One of the elder children occupies a cage in the elephant house, and the other lies under the sod somewhere in the garden.

CONJUGAL FELICITY ASSURED.

A Night Gown that Makes Cold Feet Warm as Toast.

At last an American genius has come forward with a remedy for what is believed to be a frequent cause of domestic quarrels—cold feet. At least the inventor of this new style of night dress with pockets in the lower part, has so much confidence in his discovery that he has asked and received the protection of the United States government by patent right. An illustration of the new garment is here shown. If the arrangement does not meet with the full expectations of its inventor in warming the pedal extremities of cold-blooded individuals, it certainly should prove of some value in pocketing these low temperatured members and preventing them from bringing a chill to some unsuspecting bed fellow.

A Forest of Microbes.

Cheese, the supposed-to-be-edible milk curd of commerce, is the best soil in the world for microbes and bacteria, and on its surface flourish millions upon millions of infinitesimal parasitic plant growth. A microscopic examination of a single gram of fresh cheese, such as is usually sold at the grocer's, proves that it contained not less than 90,000 separate and distinct specimens of bacteria. After seven days this same section of cheese was examined and found to contain 80,000 separate and individual bacteria. Prof. De Kahn says that a cheese properly sliced and exposed will within a week be implanted with a bacterial growth containing more separate specimens than there are trees upon the whole of the earth's surface.

A Large Patient.

Probably one of the largest patients ever admitted to Bellevue hospital applied to Register Gleeson for treatment on Sunday morning. He was Harry L. Currey, 30 years old, a fireman on the tugboat Glen Island. Currey is 6 feet 7 inches high, and, according to Mr. Gleeson, would find difficulty in getting a pair of ready-made sleeves or gloves in the city that would be large enough for him. Another peculiarity about the big fireman is that he has six toes on each foot, the little toe being divided into two distinct parts.—Philadelphia Ledger.

CHRONIC MALARIA.

A Very Prevalent Disease Following the Hot Summer of 1895.

The continuance of hot and dry weather is sure to produce the prevalence of chronic malaria. The past summer has been exactly suitable for the production of a great deal of malaria. Even in localities where malaria has been previously unknown many cases of malaria are developed. This form of malaria is distinguished from the old fashioned fever and ague by the insidiousness of its attack and the difficulty with which it is cured. It does not come on quickly like chills and fever. The symptoms pester and provoke sometimes for several weeks before the patient is made sick enough to take medicine.

Slight, chilly sensations, cold, sweaty spells, frontal headache, biliousness, furred tongue, bad taste in the mouth, sticky mucous in the throat, constipation, languor, etc.

A medical treatise on chronic malaria will be sent free by The Pe-ru-na Drug Manufacturing Company of Columbus, Ohio. This book is a complete guide to the prevention and cure of malaria in its various forms. Pe-ru-na has long since been recognized as the only infallible cure for the chronic form of malaria. While quinine has become the standard remedy for acute malaria, commonly called fever and ague, many people have found by bitter experience that it will not cure the chronic form. Pe-ru-na cures these cases promptly and permanently.

Mr. Mott In Europe

The Michigan City Dispatch, has this note on the recent experience of J. Grenville Mott in Europe. Mr. Mott is a brother of Mrs. Hodge and was in early life an Auburn boy. The article says:

The trip of Mr. J. G. Mott and his son, Russell Mott, through England and Scotland was one of continuous pleasure. They met with not a single accident or condition to mar their pleasure and came back greatly refreshed, Arriving in England they spent two or three weeks in London, whence they went to Paris for one week. Returning to London Mr. Mott bought him a bicycle. Russell had expressed his wheel from this country and the two started out awheel on a tour of the eastern counties of England, traveling a zigzag course for 500 miles, touching the seaboard at various places and ending their trip at York. The highways were elegant, the weather usually between 70 and 75 degrees and generally fine, and the country and landscape were beautiful.

At York they shipped their bicycles home and made a trip to Scotland. After an enjoyable trip through Scotland they started home on the steamer Etruria. They had rough weather for about three days, so rough in fact that some of the lifeboats were smashed, but otherwise the trip was without incident.

Mr. Mott finds that times are picking up in England, The main complaint is among the agricultural classes. They generally agree that American competition is against them, but even among this class he found some who thought that they were doing fairly well. Mr. Mott found a silver sentiment in England just about like that in this country. Wherever there was a crowd of men one would find some silverites, but the parties of England stand the same as they do in this country, that is, for the gold standard.

His 50th

The friends and neighbors gave Simon Rohm a sudden surprise on Monday, when he and his son Michael returned from a business trip to Auburn. He found his residence full of people all ready to help him celebrate his 50th birthday, which had just arrived. Of course a good supper completed the exercises, but just before that happened, Shelly Hines stood up and made a neat little speech, at the close of which he, on behalf of the friends, gave Mr. Rohm a number of nice presents.

Among those present were: Herman Bangs, Mr. Seward and wife, Mr. Wilson and wife, Jacob Binger and wife, John Treesh and wife, John Miser and wife, David DeLong and wife, R. H. Sherlock and wife, Martin Wetzel and wife, Wm. Bowman and wife, Levi Hewett and wife, C. C. Buss and wife, Clarence Reynolds and wife, S. H. Hine and wife, Geo Myers and wife, L. W. Treesh and wife, Michael Rohm and wife, Wilson Rohm and wife, Mary Ann Kagey, Franklin Kagey, Sarah Lawhead, Mrs C. H. Bangs, Mrs. Chas. Bundy, Jane Delong and family, Joseph Raub, Mrs. Guthrie, Miss Deetz, Edna Reynolds, Myrtle Guthrie, Wm. Guthrie, Clarence and Zoe DeLong, Emery and Ada Bowman, Ratio Hine, I. O. Sebert, Lloyd and Ola Treesh, Fred Calkin and others whose names we failed to get, about 70 in all.

The Dominion.

A TRIP TO NIAGARA FALLS AND INTO THE DOMINION OF CANADA, PROVINCE OF ONTARIO.

Travel is pleasant and instructive. The railroads supply cheap and facile means of visiting distant and interesting localities otherwise inaccessible and multitudes tak advantage of these opportunities. The writer, his wife, Reuben Sawvel and wife availing themselves of excursion rates on the Nickel Plate took a morning train on the Lake Shore for Fort Wayne as the initial of a visit to Toronto, Province of Ontario, Canada, with stop over privilege at the Falls of Niagara. A ride on the electric belt line, a chat with Samuel Lauferty, clothier, and in the sixties a well known business man of Auburn, a visit with the Allen county treasurer who has a new complex system of receipting for taxes which he desires to introduce in other counties, a good dinner at Barous' restaurant, and we were ready for our journey eastward. Promptly on time, the long train drawn by a powerful engine, moved from the depot of the New York, Chicago and St. Louis railroad and with abundant room, the passengers adjusted themselves for comfort and enjoyment of a panorama of varied and interesting scenery. Passing over the nearly dry channels of the Maumee and reverse flowing branch, the St. Mary, there was seen the site of old Fort Wayne marked by two field pieces in battery, a place soon to become an object of curious regard by the throngs visiting the city to celebrate the Centenial of its erection by the command of Gen. Anthony Wayne. Reaching the state line, we entered a broad, level country, the domain of corn culture at its best. The fields near and far, small and extended are almost continous; the crop is excellent. Farmers were at work cutting; some were drilling in wheat between the widely separate long straight rows of shocks and already many fields were fairly grown with the young crop. Villages seen are small, ancient looking and most had for the main feature, a stave factory with its manufacture piled high under long sheds curing and awaiting shipment. Few people were seen save in one town where a crowd thronged the little main street and a number of teams were hitched near by. A solitary excursionist who came aboard said that Coxey was to speak on "Non-interest bonds and good roads," a not unimportant topic. Near Arcadia, there came in view in field and road, many red painted, immense oil tanks and derricks of oil wells, old and new, some deserted, others pumping oil yet others being drilled. Several stand in line at but few yards interval close along the track and many may be seen in the distance with here and there far isolated "wild cat" wells, more or less successful. A score of tanks are grouped near the village and upwards of fifty derricks can be counted from the car window. At Fostoria, stands a flouring mill having capacity of 1000 bushels grinding a day and enormous iron tanks, four in number, store the grain in readiness for milling. An all-night ride brings the excursion to Buffalo in gray of morning and although it is the Sabbath, a group of an hundred or more laborers each with dinner bucket, is seen all making their way hurriedly toward the docks to begin a hard day's labor. Transferred to the track of the New York central, the train moved on to Niagara Falls, a city of 18,000 inhabitants and, in a locality justly farfamed for its wonderful natural scenery, a stage of our journey ends. Emerging from the depot, we were instantly beset by hackmen who persistently importuned us to engage their services to convey us to a hotel or by the hour to point of interest, and when we had found quarters at the Fall Hotel, a quiet and homelike place but two blocks from Prospect Park, one fellow would take no refusal and drove his conveyance the entire distance down to the park keeping pace near us and urging use of his hack. There was no lack of places of entertainment. The city seems devoted to the purpose. It seems as though nearly every building was in use as a restaurant museum of curiosities or hotel from the humblest to a grand scale, among the largest being the Cataract House and the Tower House, from the latter rises tower 300 feet high, the top reached by spiral stairway and an elevator and commanding an extensive view of Niagara River from Grand Island to Lake Ontario.

Old Folks' Meeting

At Concord Saturday evening of this week, Oct 5, and Sunday, Oct 6, at 9 a. m. and at 1:30 p. m. There will be old time class meetings, prayer meetings, and singing and addresses by old settlers like R. G. Coburn, Robert Culbertson, etc. We had not time to give a full program but we know it will be an enjoyable meeting.

Hartman-Barns.

Married at the residence of the bride's parents in Auburn, Sept. 26, 1895, Mr. Walter C. Hartman and Miss Nellie L. Barns. The officiating minister was Rev. F. C. Colvin of the Presbyterian church of which both contracting parties are members. The young couple had a wide acquaintance in social and church circles, and the guests present numbered about 100 including a number from other localities. The ceremony was at 8 30 in the evening and was very impressive. As the minute designated arrived, the wedding march was played by Miss Lulu Rempis of Waterloo, the drapery to the entrance of the room was held apart by Miss Annie Ilger and Miss Helen Ralston, and Mr. Colvin took his place before the alter, a lovely bank of natural vines and wild wood ferns. He was followed by the groom and his best man, Mr. Ed Robbins, and then came the bride leaning on the arm of her cousin, Miss Pearl Kelley. Both were dressed in exquisite taste and looked lovely as they stood in the presence of the assembled company, as the solemn ceremony proceeded. The bride's dress was of ivory duchess satin, made plain but in exquisite taste. The only ornament was a beautiful wreath brooch of enameled gold set with pearls, the gift of her uncle J. R. Lamson and wife of Washington, D. C. The bridesmaid was arrayed in a lovely pink silk crepon, and carried as did also the bride, a bunch of lovely roses. Then followed congratulations and good wishes. At the proper time, a lunch in four courses was served with ease and grace by Miss Anna Ilger and Miss Helen Ralston. The decorations throughout the house were green and white vines and flowers, more noticeably in the dining room, were green ferns and white carnations, and together with these at the altar, were the handiwork of Miss Anna Ilger and Miss Edna Davis assisted by Mrs. Mabel Hodge.

At eleven o'clock, the young couple, amid an abundance of good wishes, started on their trip east, They were driven to Waterloo, from which place they went to Toledo, then to Cleveland, and from the latter city they visit at Kent, Ohio, as the guest of their mutual friend, Dr. George Kennedy, who is located at that place. About Tuesday they return to Auburn, and after Oct. 15 will be "at home" at their residence corner of Jackson and Tenth Sts.

The young couple were the recipients of a very large number of gifts from their friends and relatives both here and elsewhere. These were not only useful and beautiful but very valuable. In their present absence the DAILY feels delegated to say their hearts are full to overflowing with love and gratitude for these many tokens of friendship and esteem. The intrinsic value great as it is, is small compared with the friendship of the dear ones whose gifts they are. It is not possible for us to mention all, and we feel sure all the friends will pardon us for the omission under the circumstances.

Among the guests from abroad were: From Angola, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. John Leasure, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Scott; from Waterloo were: Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Lockhart, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Leas, Mr and Mrs. J. S. Jackman, Mr. and Mrs. John F. Shuman Gen. L. J. Blair and daughter Rose, Miss Lulu Rempis, Mrs. Juliette Dickinson and Mrs. Ed Ettinger; from Butler were: Miss Flora Jones and Mr. Ora Knisely; from Albion were: Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Martin, and Mr. and Mrs. Eliza Shaffer. In addition to these were J. R. Lamson of Washington, D. C., Mrs. J. F. McNear of Columbia City, Mrs. R. W. Wright, Phoenixville, Pa., Miss Anna Ilger of Mt. Vernon, Ohio, Miss Mary Long of San Diego, Calif., Mrs. Dr. Siver of Ft. Wayne

Dr. Brown's Advice About Catarrh.

Severe colds in the head followed by attacks of catarrh are apt to be common during the early fall months of the year Constant changes in atmosphere, brisk winds and wet feet are followed by symptoms that indicate a prevalence of this disease, Great care should be taken; often these attacks result in pneumonia. I have always felt that an "ounce of prevention was worth a pound of cure" in medicine, and that it was wise to heed these warnings. Don't take cold, but if you do, on the first symptoms, obtain from your nearest druggist a jar of Pretzinger's Catarrh Balm and apply it freely to the nostrils several times each day especially before retiring at night, This invaluable preparation I have prescribed for a number of years and have invariably found it most efficacious. The camphors which it carries in large quantities are specially healing for the inflamed and diseased organs of the head, In my general practice I have never known a case of catarrh, no matter of how long standing, that this preparation would not cure,

Is It Fate?

Did you ever stop and think how our lives are affected by some seemingly trifling circumstances? It is amusing to think what might have occurred but for some more or less trifling circumstance If the nose of Cleopatra had been shorter the whole face of the earth would have been different. It is said that a glass of wine too much changed the course of French history; many persons who have carelessly picked up a scrap of literature on Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer have been cured of what they considered an incurable disease by its use C. S. Chambers, Atlanta, Ill, was a sufferer from nervous prostration. A friend, who had knowledge of Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer, gave him a small sample. Its use stirred up new hope in his mind; he used two full sized bottles and was cured—fate directed this wonderful medicine to his notice. Your fate may be urging your attention to the same remedy, if you are troubled with nervous prostration, spasms, fits, sleeplessness, mental depression, exhausted vitality, despondency, sexual and general debility. Waterloo Press: Speaking of potatoes, Rev. F. L. Erlougher, while visiting Mr. Benj. Moffet, a parishonier down in Jackson township, last week, went out to the "patch" and dug a few hills just for luck. The potatoes were in muck soil and the digging was easy. In one hill by actual count there were fifty-seven potatoes and thirty eight were of a size suitable for cooking. This is no "fish" story either.

An illustration of how space is annihilated by the telegraph was afforded a few days ago by two telegraph clerks sitting opposite each other in a Chicago office. One of them was sending a message to New Orleans; the other was receiving a message from the same city. The sender wanted to borrow a plug of tobacco from his colleague, but it would have been a breach of the rules to ask for it. He thereupon wired to New Orleans and asked the receiver there to tell his partner to hand him a "chew." In less than a minute the plug came over the glass partition which separated the two operators. The message had traveled considerably over 1,000 miles, although only a yard separated one operator from another.

This is the fall of the year. The day of the blossom is over and the clematis twines its tendrils, the lace flower nods white in the meadow and the bee wings his last spoils home; the aster and the golden rod stand guard at the wayside and the banners of sumac are standards in the ranks to whom nature has sounded the call of retreat; there are odors and perfumes from orchards and vine, and the sunflower stands tall in the sunshine; the hours are ripe in fulfillment of the promises made in the spring and with grapes in the cluster and corn in the shock both barrels and barns have their fill—and the trolley wheel, too, has taken a drop on the midnight horn. Not let the cold wave snap the gems from the crown of summer.

The Edon Independent, Geo. Weeks' paper has this item: H. S. McIntosh, of the Independent, gave a banquet at Hotel Corey last Wednesday evening to some of his Edon friends. "Yourself and lady" invitations were issued to eight gentlemen The occasion was a birthday anniversary and partook somewhat of the nature of a surprise, as was intended—that is, a surprise to the guests—all but one, a fair lady who played the leading role in this part of it, with H. S. as main support. We are not permitted to publicly elucidate the "surprise" feature, but will say that it was well planned and successfully executed. The evening was occupied in the usual social enjoyments of such an event, among which were interspersed musical and elocutionary diversions. The banquet was a credit to the hotel in which it was prepared and served.

THE KING SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

Reader, did you ever take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR, the "KING OF LIVER MEDICINES?" Everybody needs take a liver remedy. It is a sluggish or diseased liver that impairs digestion and causes constipation, when the waste that should be carried off remains in the body and poisons the whole system. That dull, heavy feeling is due to a torpid liver. Biliousness, Headache, Malaria and Indigestion are all liver diseases. Keep the liver active by an occasional dose of Simmons Liver Regulator and you'll get rid of these troubles, and give tone to the whole system. For a laxative Simmons Liver Regulator is BETTER THAN PILLS. It does not gripe, nor weaken, but greatly refreshes and strengthens.

Post-nasal hypertrophy is what ails a man when he is snoring. It is not necessary, however, to send for the doctor. Send for the coroner.

"Flags for the school houses" is a good cry, but what Chicago, Boston and some other cities urgently need just now is school houses for the flags.

The Boston Journal objects to placing the title "Hon." before the names of all public men. The objection is well based. Many public men are far from honorable.

The people of the United States are in favor of independence for Cuba, not only because it is right in a general way, but also because Spain is notoriously unfit to govern anything.

The Missouri River is steadily drying up. Since 1878 its volume has fallen off 20 per cent. The Big Muddy probably is incompatible with an advanced civilization. It will die out with the Digger Indians.

Japan is going to spend $25,000,000 of her war indemnity for war ships. After which pride in the possession of so fine a navy will act as a considerable incentive to going out to win—or lose—another indemnity.

The Sultan is glad to hear that Mr. Gladstone is out of politics, but he would feel far more comfortable of the grand old man would stop talking. Between an earthquake and a speech by Gladstone the choice of Constantinople would be the former.

Marine construction is gradually creeping up to the Great Eastern standard of size, which was 24,000 tons. A German line has just ordered a ship of 20,000 tons capacity to be used chiefly for freight, though she will have accommodations for 200 cabin and 1,500 steerage passengers.

The French may not have any word in their language for home, but Americans should keep quiet about it in view of the fact that more than half the French live and die in the place of their birth. The American who lives long and dies in his native village is an oddity.

Authority conferred upon postmasters to exclude from the mails "publications which they consider obscene and obnoxious" is certainly a very dangerous extension of the power of petty officials. A publication might be classed as obnoxious to a postmaster and be ruined by his so regarding it, though wholly proper and decent in character. Press censorship through the medium of the postmasters is un-American and intolerable.

If Turkey persists in her refusal to grant the reforms in Armenia which the civilized world demands she will be dismembered. This is what Premier Salisbury tells the Turkish Minister in England. There is a ring in this warning which recalls the days when Palmerston was at the head of British affairs. Dismemberment will have to come sooner or later, and it would have come long ago if there were any chance for a division of the Sultan's assets satisfactory to all the nations wanting a share. Dismemberment is the only thing which will teach Turkey anything. The only good Turk is the dead Turk.

The rise in the tide of immigration once more calls attention to the evils that the country is suffering and likely to suffer from the unrestricted influx of people from Europe and Asia. The figures of recent immigration are above those for the corresponding months of 1894, and the arrivals of aliens are now nearly 10,000 a month above those of the same period of last year. The figures for the last fiscal year, when immigration reached its lowest point, show 276,136 arrivals against 311,605 for the preceding year. But the last three months of the fiscal year just ended show 122,959 arrivals against 92,888 for the corresponding period of the preceding year. It is evident that Congress should deal with the subject promptly on its meeting. In the present state of the labor market of the United States, even the addition of a quarter of a million a year to the working population is a misfortune, and the probabilities are that the influx will continue to swell until it reaches the 600,000 or 700,000 that were annually brought to this country a few years ago.

It is true that America now holds a yachting cup which she has not earned, and in that degree the prize is made valueless and barren of glory. The discredit lies in this fact, however, and not in any intentional unfairness on the part of the American yachtsmen. The latter may not have acted diplomatically, but they have certainly violated none of the rigid rules of the sport. It could have been wished that they had sacrificed technicalities to the effort to get a fair and adequate test of the yachts, but tried by the rules of yachting they come out quite as well as their British opponents, who threw up the third race without a trial, thus compelling his rival to accept the cup as a scornfully presented gift. The whole affair is unfortunate, but if the British observers of the episode are going to take the ground that Dunraven was deliberately cozened out of the prize it is necessary to remind them, first, that his lordship was honestly and decisively beaten in the first race; second, that his opponents were more than willing to give him another trial in the second contest; and, third, that in the last race he declined, in something like a petulant mood, to contest with the American boat, although both had even chances. America cannot be proud of a cup won in any way than through fair contest. But she certainly did not seek or want to retain it in any other way.

What seems to be the crowning triumph of bureaucratic idiocy has just been achieved in Colorado, where some troops were ordered to make a three days' forced march and by way of experiment were forced to sustain themselves on some indigestible compounds which a war department genius has invented as a "compressed food." The soldiers tried their best to get away with the experimental rations, but after one day of compressed soup and coffee tablets were seized with violent pains and could not proceed. The medical officer who is charged with the duty of measuring and weighing the victims of this experiment to see how it works telegraphed to headquarters for food and assistance. In reply he received the notification that the experiment was to be thoroughly tried and the men would have to remain on the march—and the compressed diet—two days longer, no matter what happened. An ordinarily humane man would hardly think of treating his dog to the war department's "compressed food" if the dog showed suffering after the first doses. Apparently the master mind which conceived the Colorado experiment is not embarrassed by considerations of this sort, however. The master mind was bent upon a scientific research into caked food tablets, and when a well-ordered, red-tape-bound, slothful, bureaucratic intellect is "set" upon a given purpose nothing less than a dynamite explosion can disturb it. To the claims of common sense and reason it is as dead as a pickled herring. It is not even likely that the officialism which begot this idiotic experiment will repent its work until the job of experimenting on soldiers' digestive capacities has been carried out to the bitter end. It is at least to be hoped, however, that the war department at Washington will hear of this experiment and trounce something like horse sense into its singular Denver dependency.

In the killing of the deserter Coffey at Fort Sheridan the United States army has its first practical test of the new Krag-Jorgensen rifle. The effectiveness of the terrible arm will scarcely be questioned. At fifty yards the nickel-plated conical bullet passed through the head of the victim, through a live tree eight inches in diameter, and, thirty yards beyond, buried itself three feet into the hillside. The dead man's skull was shattered until only the scalp preserved its shape. The Krag-Jorgensen rifle was designed in the paradoxical spirit of humanity toward man. This unavoidable but successful test at Fort Sheridan suggests that if the weapon is to be accepted because of its clean-cut destructiveness, there may be, in the future, a new distance-line established at which armies shall engage in action. The horrible shattering effect of the bullet in Coffey's brain was due to the close range at which he received it. It is only beyond 400 or 500 yards that the steel-capped bullet adjusts itself to the effects of rifling sufficiently to cut a clean wound. Manifestly, then, two armies engaged with the Krag-Jorgensen gun at less range than this are, by force of inference, guilty of barbarism. At greater range the chances of war are, perhaps, greatly in favor of human targets escaping scot free. Aside from speculative results, this new weapon in the hands of men in garrisons contiguous to civilization is not reassuring. Target-range practice, chance firing by guards, as in the case of Coffey, and the chances of accidental discharge of these terrible weapons give no one absolute immunity for many miles around a Government post. Even in the mountains of Colorado protests have been made against target practice which, with this new arm, is endangering the lives of miners in the hill country. It may come to be questioned if the Government is justified, especially in settled communities, in using such a weapon in arming garrison guards.

New Eyebrows.

We learn from French sources that a London perfumer has found a new way of fixing up eyelashes and eyebrows. Instead of painting them in the usual vulgar old style, he puts the genuine article there, and professional and amateur beauties of the great city are flocking to him to be made just too lovely for anything. The operation is said to be extremely delicate, though by no means painful. He takes a hair from the head of the beauty, or, if she does not like precisely the color of her own hair, he takes one of any other color that she likes, threads an extremely fine needle with the hair, runs it along inside the skin of the eyelid, sewing sailmaker's fashion, but leaving the loops sufficiently long to enable him to cut them afterward, so that they will form a range of beautiful fringe and look perfectly natural. For eyebrows he does the same thing, but the eyebrow operation is, of course, less delicate.

Arched eyebrows, bushy eyebrows, straight eyebrows, crooked eyebrows, all sorts of eyebrows, in any color or shade or form, this wonderful perfumer makes for the ladies of London, and it is said that his success is something astonishing.—New York Sun.

Church Courtship.

A young gentleman at church conceived a most sudden and violent passion for a young lady in the next pew, and felt desirous of entering into courtship on the spot; but the place not suiting a formal declaration, the exigency suggested the following plan: He politely handed his fair neighbor a Bible open, with a pin stuck in the following text:

Second Epistle of St. John, verse five: "And now I beseech thee, lady, not as though I wrote a new commandment unto thee, but that which we had from the beginning, that we love one another." She returned it with the following:

Second chapter of Ruth, tenth verse: "Then she fell on her face and bowed herself to the ground, and said unto him, Why have I found grace in thine eyes, that thou shouldst take notice of me, seeing I am a stranger?" He returning the book, pointing to the twelfth verse of the Third Epistle of John:

"Having many things to write unto you, I should write with paper and ink; but I trust to come unto you and speak face to face."

From the above interview the marriage took place the coming week.—Scottish American.

A kind husband—"Wifey, dear, I have just bought you two bottles of extra old Barolo for your birthday." "But you know very well I never drink wine." "Well, then, I'll drink it myself to your good health!"—Il Motto per Ridere.

CLEVELAND AT HOME.

HOW THE PRESIDENT LIVES AT GRAY GABLES.

The Summer Sun Tans His Skin and the Whispering Winds Smooth the Lines of Care from His Face—Household of the Nation's Chief Executive.

One Week with Grover.

A week passed with President Cleveland at Gray Gables is an event which comes not often into the life of the average man. I do not know which prospect remains most vividly in memory after such an experience—the sight of the relief and happiness of the ruler of over 60,000,000 people divested of business cares that at Washington place him under almost constant microscopical inspection, or the beauties and pleasures of the rare ideal solitude amid which the President and his family spend a vacation time that is quaint, restful and thoroughly enjoyable.

SECRET SERVICE GUARD.

When Mr. Cleveland purchased Gray Gables—a lovely, many-windowed home far out on a point that juts into the pulsing, shifting, mysterious waters of Buzzard's Bay—he evidently had in view the desire to thoroughly isolate himself when the opportunities came to temporarily drop the stately garb of his great office. It is as hard a spot to reach, in a measure, as if it were situated in the heart of darkest Africa, for it requires the patience of Job and the philosophy of Carlyle to get to it by rail. Every twenty miles on the way to Buzzard's Bay you have to change trains, and Buzzard's Bay is but the threshold to Gray Gables. If you go by an ocean route, there is still an eight miles drive to Monument Beach, unless you take a semi-occasional train. The railroad company has built a tiny pagoda-like station at the entrance to the land that surrounds the President's summer home, and has placed upon a sign the words, "Gray Gables," painted in strong white.

Around the station there is almost complete solitude, the spot being covered with dense trees, and a tangle of heavy underbrush. A road of ocean shells and sand winds like a big snake up to the 260 acres which surround Gray Gables. This land runs out into a little cape, which is bluff-like in its formation, and at its summit are two six-foot towers, on top of which are massive bowlders, marking the entrance to fifteen cleared acres. For a hundred feet beyond these, the underbrush has been cleared. The Cleveland famly call this spot "The Grove," and it is provided with board seats, and has many quiet little nooks, where Mrs. Cleveland and her three children, Ruth, Esther and Marion, spend their leisure, in close proximity to a small park supplied with deer. Beyond is a pretty Queen Anne structure, two stories in height. This is "The Lodge," and really marks the habitable portion of Gray Gables. It has greenish inner blinds and lace curtains, is plainly fitted up with white wicker work furniture, and is used exclusively as a sleeping place for the servants. Beyond it lie the stables, and then, at the extreme end of the turf-covered land, which rolls in miniature hills and valleys, stands the house of Gray Gables itself—the summer home of Cleveland, the private citizen.

HIS FAVORITE JERSEY COW.

It derives its new name from its numberless little gables, peaks and dormer windows. Vines shadow its fifteen rooms, the salt-freighted winds have changed the paint to a mellow moth color. There is a wide veranda all around the house, and from the heavy plate-glass windows can be seen in all directions the bright waters of the Very. The President loves flowers, and directly in front of the house is a neat but not ostentatious floral display—geraniums, marigolds, ferns, mountain daisies, pansies, bachelors' buttons, four-o'clocks, and a big slump of sunflowers. The main doorway is reached by a wide flight of steps, from which a path leads to a wooden dock terminating in a floating platform, directly at the ocean's edge. One hundred feet out, moored to stakes, is Mr. Cleveland's steam launch and the sailing boat which he uses in his fishing trips.

THE CLEVELAND FAMILY BUTCHER.

RECEIVING HIS MAIL AT THE VILLAGE POSTOFFICE.

The retinue of servants is a comparatively limited one. There are two nurses for the children, a butler, a laundress, two maids, a coachman, a steward, two men engaged about the grounds, and the caretaker. Bud Wright, who is a genuine down-East Yankee, with a keen sense of humor that has helped to give publicity to Cleveland's one and only joke. This has a twang of local color, but will bear repeating. It seems that near Gray Gables, on the Old Colony Railroad, is a tiny little village called Wareham. It is pronounced Ware'am by everybody in Massachusetts. Just as a train was once rattling up to the station an ancient spinster of Cape Cod was examining the contents of a package which an extremely pretty young Boston girl had left accidentally in the seat beside the spinster when she left the train at Onset Beach.

The contents of the package happened to be the latest thing in blooomers. Just as the spinster was examining the bloomers, with a face of horror, the train stopped at the station.

"Ware'em!" shouted a brakeman.

"Shan't do it," yelled the spinster, who had supposed the brakeman had addressed the remark to her.

When Bud Wright told this story to Mr. Cleveland it was greeted with great laughter, and since then the President has worked it off on the various members of the cabinet, who have visited him during his vacation.

MR. CLEVELAND AS PILOT IN HIS NEW LAUNCH.

So far as the President is concerned, life at Gray Gables may be summed up in a word—fish. He is "fish crazy," for, as the earth revolves around the sun, so everything at Gray Gables revolves around Mr. Cleveland's fishing trips, morning, noon and night. He even fishes in his sleep, his familiars say! He awakes at about six o'clock in the morning, shaves himself, gets a lonely breakfast, and then puts off for his cat-boat. The President loses much of that gravity that marks his public life, once afloat, and is a bright companion in a jolly good fellowship. The Ruth has a half-deck and a tiny little cabin, and while Cleveland steers, his constant companion, Wright, manages the sail. Mr. Cleveland is looking thinner, but more healthy than he has for years. He wears a careless fishing garb, outing shirt and all, and a hat stained yellow by the sea water, kinked up behind, crushed up before, and thoroughly disreputable—such a hat as a bank robber might adopt. He has a fine collection of rods, and dotes on bluefish, always taking a lunch aboard of sandwiches, pickles, cake and water. He is an angler of the most persistent class, remaining out way into the afternoon at times, a flag hoisted on a high staff at the house telling when he is afloat. The cat-boat goes eight miles to find the President's favorite fishing spot. Broiled fish is a popular dish at Gray Gables.

When he is not fishing, the President enjoys a drive to a trout stream seven miles distant, or one to the postoffice, behind his team of three-year-old beauties. Mrs. Cleveland accompanies him in his trip after the voluminous mail bag, always ready for him, as does she and the children meet him at the dock on his return from a fishing excursion. On such occasions she wears a plain, neat skirt of covert cloth, and a silk waist. When they return the children are taken to feed the buck and roe, or allowed to hunt for blackberries, or showing off their knowledge of German, in which Ruth is quite an expert. They look over the cows and the vegetable garden, or hail the only arrival that breaks the monotony—the advent of the meat wagon from a neighboring town.

The President likes to be treated as a private citizen, and used to make occasional calls in the vicinity with Mrs. Cleveland, who followed up golf as an amusement last year. This vacation, however, they are more retired. Mr. Cleveland does his own writing nights, although Secretary Thurber is within an hour's call. Secret service guards see that no one enters the grounds, unless through an appointment by telephone. It is said that a prominent Minister Plenipotentiary and a Georgia Senator of large repute were both turned down for venturing to intrude at Gray Gables unannounced. They did not even get a ride on the handsome $1,500 steam launch in which Mrs. Cleveland and the children take occasional trips around the bay.

It is a pretty domestic picture that is presented at Gray Gables when night falls. Mrs. Perrine, Mrs. Cleveland's mother, is the only stranger to the direct family circle, and they all gather in the main drawing-room, prettily fitted with blue, and with white wicker furniture, a big oak table and an old-fashioned fire place. The rugs are plain, the walls have a few neat etchings, but there are books, newspapers, magazines, and the children put in a happy gloaming and chatter and play until 9 o'clock. On Sundays a general rest is ordered, the children only going to church with their nurses. Except that the place is under the general surveillance of a curious and interested public and guarded by careful, trustworthy detectives, it might be the summer nest of any private citizen, ordinary, unostentatious, arranged only for restful and harmonious comfort.

MET BY MRS. CLEVELAND AFTER A FISHING TRIP.

An Immense Shark.

Antone Joseph, an old whaling mate now stationed as cook of the Cornfield lightship, Essex, Conn., hooked the boss shark of the season on Wednesday of last week. The monster measured from nose to tip of tail 14 feet 7 inches, and weighed about 500 pounds. When Mr. Joseph noticed the shark under the lightship quarter, he immediately got out the share fishing tackle and baited the hook with a round of Uncle Sam's mess pork, which Mr. Shark very quickly made a meal of and was towed alongside of the ship. The gaffs were hooked on to him and he was hoisted on board. The sirloin steaks being removed, he was cast back into the sea for the Niantic parties to take pictures of or some imaginative reporter to write up as a sea serpent.

Tin from the Malay Peninsula.

More than half the world's supply of tin is mined in the Straits Settlement, at the top of the Malay Peninsula. The output in 1891 was 36,061 tons out of a total of 57,551 tons; 12,106 tons came from the Dutch East Indies chiefly from the Island of Banks, leaving only 8,384 tons for the rest of the world.

Minor State Items.

The next State turnfest will be held at South Bend in July.

Goshen is to be enlarged by the annexation of West Goshen.

Wm. Jackson, aged Muncie citizen, was stricken with paralysis.

The postoffice at Silver Grove, Floyd county, has been discontinued.

W. T. Pearcy, near Jeffersonville, died of heart disease, while milking a cow.

Charlestown has had a house to house census taken and has 1,016 inhabitants.

Hamilton township, Sullivan county, voted to build 25 miles of gravel roads.

Millie Daily was struck by a passenger train at Wilkinson, and fatally injured.

Frances, the daughter of Dick Goodwin of New Castle, was injured in a runaway.

The Bedford fair had to be postponed on account of the prevalence of diphtheria there.

Leading Anderson citizens are trying to secure the famous Culver locomotive works.

A second national bank has been organized at Crown Point, with $60,000 capital.

"White caps" burned a toll house near Connersvile because they were opposed to its business.

Arrangements are being made for the relocation of the American starch factory at Columbus.

At Kokomo, where diphtheria is raging, the antitoxine remedy is being resorted to by the physicians.

The enrollment of students at Earlham College has reached 193. The seniors number forty-three.

Anderson officers are still searching for the men who tried to kidnap the Bolton children the other day.

Brazil home talent has organized a dramatic company. Their first play will be "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

The silverware found in a corn field near Elwood has been identified as that stolen from a Noblesville jewelry store.

Chas. W. Martin, mail clerk on the T. H. & W., jumped from his car, fearing a wreck, and was fatally injured.

The eight window glass factories of Elwood, Orestes, Alexandria, and Frankton have all resumed operation with full force.

A 2-year-old child of Mr. and Mrs. Simeon Reese, who reside near Brooklyn, Ind., was drowned in a large jar of water.

In trying to climb on the cars at Jonesboro, Randall Chimitkin fell under the wheels and lost both legs. He was only 11 years old.

Guy Stotter, an 11-year-old boy, was fatally injured at Frankfort recently. He climbed an apple tree and fell out, alighting on his head.

T. J. Yount, a Wabash veteran, has gone insane. He imagines that Department-Commander Shively is trying to deprive him of his pension.

C. C. McMorris of Hall, Morgan county, lost his residence by fire. The family barely escaped in the night with their clothing. Insurance, $400.

South Bend board of education has introduced the teaching of Swedish into the public schools. A night school twice a week is held for that purpose.

A $40,000 fire occurred at Logansport. It began in R. F. Kerstring's drug store and spread to John Dewenter's furnishing store and B. Schnadig's dry goods house.

Hiram Dowles, a farmer living near Orestes, found a couple of mill sacks full of silverware hidden in a corn shock in his cornfield. Where it came from or who put it there is a mystery.

The strike at the plate-glass works at Kokomo has ended disastrously for the men. The company put men in the place of the strikers and the plant is in operation again at the old wages.

The water from a flowing well at the works of the National Tin Plate Company, at Anderson, kills all desire for strong drink. It has taken nearly 200 customers away from the saloons already.

The last school census at Elwood shows a school population of 2,800. Four schoolhouses are crowded, and another ten-thousand-dollar building is to be erected this fall. Thirty-two teachers are employed.

The rumored closing of all the tin-plate factories in the country for an indefinate time as soon as the supply of billets on hand is exhausted is untrue so far as the American tin plate plant at Elwood is concerned.

The second annual reunion of the twenty-fourth Regiment, Indiana Volunteers, will be held at Orleans on Oct. 8, 9 and 10. An invitation is extended to all old soldiers and especially members of the Twenty-fourth.

W. Johnson, aged 26, of Winchester, sent his wife and baby home from Muncie, on a passenger train. He was to follow on a freight to save fare. In mounting the train he fell under the wheels and lost both legs.

Dollie Belknap, aged 13, who poisoned her foster parents, Fleming Narver and wife, at Seymour, had her trial recently. She pleaded not guilty. Jury returned a verdict of manslaughter and sentenced her to the Reform School until she is 21.

The people of Posey township, Clay County, are excited over an oil find made there. When the firm of B. Roberts & Bro. was sinking a well on the Jeff James farm, a mile and a half southwest of Staunton, the men were suddenly driven out of the well by a flow of oil which gushed up from the bottom and filled it to a depth of twelve feet. The oil was struck at a depth of thirty-five feet. Property has already risen to ten times its value. The find was made about a mile from where Terre Haute people two years ago made an unsuccessful attempt to find oil.

Braham Shideler, commissioner of Cass County, was badly injured by a bull. The animal was dehorned and the injuries may not prove fatal. Shideler's collar bone and shoulder blade on the right side were broken, and internal injuries resulted. Shideler is 65 years old.

Wilson and Dunsmore, the men who were engaged in a prize-fight near Mount Olive Church, in Brown County, have escaped from the jail in Nashville, where they were taken a few days ago from Frankfort, after their arrest. The Sheriff put them to scrubbing the floors, and, while he was not looking, they threw down the mops and escaped.

The farm residence of J. L. Summers, near Kokomo, was destroyed by fire. The family had a narrow escape. Mrs. Summers and her infant child had just reached the door when the building collapsed. Mice gnawing matches in a bureau drawer started the fire. Loss, $1,000.

Returning home from Farmland the buggies of Hag Bragg, postmaster at Bragg's postoffice, and Taylor Green, a young farmer, collided north of town, causing both horses to run away. Misses Jessie Friar and Dove Mills, who were with the young men, were both thrown out and sustained severe injuries. Both are in a dangerous condition, but will recover. The buggies were demolished and the young men received slight injuries.

THEY CHARM SNAKES.

Skill Shown by the Men of the East—How Serpents Are Captured.

The dislike and even horror people feel for snakes is almost universal and perhaps to that reason is due the fascination which stories of the snake charmers have for most of us. India and Ceylon especially, just as they are the places where snakes abound, so are they also the lands in which the professional charmer flourishes most widely. The snakes most employed by these men are the cobra and the tic polonga — indeed the natives say these two are the only snakes which can be charmed. Both of them are deadly serpents, though the cobra is much the better tempered of the two and will only strike when provoked; the tic polonga, on the other hand, is most frequently the aggressor. The snake charmer, as a traveler says, generally goes about in company with a juggler. They appear before the house, and after receiving permission to give a performance, bring forth their snakes, usually three, which they carry in baskets. The charmer assumes a peculiar posture, squatting upon the heel of one foot, the other knee doubled up and projecting in front. He sways from side to side keeping time with the monotonous music made by his companion with pipes.

A HINDOO SNAKE CHARMER.

After the playing has lasted a few moments the charmer uncovers his baskets and takes out the cobras. At first they seem scarcely to notice the sound of the pipe, but presently they raise themselves a couple of feet from the ground, the rest of the body forming a kind of pedestal, and sway to and fro with the music. This they keep up as long as the spectators want to see it and the music continues.

A BAYADERE SNAKE CHARMER.

After the performance the charmer will show that the snake has fangs and can kill if a chicken or rabbit be provided. When first captured the fangs are generally removed, but as they grow out in a very short time, the charmers do not often trouble to remove them again. The men are not at all afraid of them as they rely on their music with great confidence to gain control over the reptiles.

Every charmer carries with him a snake stone which he believes is sovereign in case of bites. At least it adds immeasurably to the men's confidence. How the snakes are charmed is inexplicable; even the men themselves do not pretend to give any explanation, but attribute their power solely to the music. Women snake charmers are also met with in India, who go about the streets and willingly give performances for a small sum. Their success is quite often as great as that of the men charmers.

WHIP-SNAKE SWALLOWING A CHAMELEON.

It may be interesting to know how snakes are originally captured by the charmers. The man finds a hole where a snake has its home and then, sitting before it, begins to play on the pipes. Soon the snake appears, upon which the man, grasping a long stick he is armed with, dashes forward, throws it across the reptile, and, standing on it with his foot, seizes the animal's tail with both ands. Then, suddenly releasing the stick, he slips one hand quickly up to the head of the snake which he grasps securely below the jaws by the thin part of its neck. It is now powerless, but its frothing and hissing show all it would do were it able.

ONE METHOD OF CAPTURING SNAKES.

Tuberculosis in Cattle.

The State veterinary department of Iowa has decided that tuberculosis in cattle is not hereditary.

That surly sign: "Keep off the grass!"
From sight of man will shortly pass;
Soon shall we see, as oft before,
Its rude successor: "Shut the door!"

Health

Built on the solid foundation of pure, healthy blood is real and lasting. As long as you have rich red blood you will have no sickness. When you allow your blood to become thin, depleted, robbed of the little red corpuscles which indicate its quality, you will become tired, worn out, lose your appetite and strength, and disease will soon have you in its grasp.

Purify, vitalize and enrich your blood, and keep it pure by taking

Some Products Which Shrink.

Sugar, butter, oleomargarine and tobacco all shrink in weight. It is said that the damp brown sugar will lose twenty-five pounds in a barrel through drying out, but the more expensive refined sugars do not lose much.

Butter shrinks about the weight of a large old-fashioned copper cent in every pound within a short time after it is churned. Some farmers, in order to be safe and prevent their butter being seized as light weight, still keep the big copper cents and put one on the scales with the regular pound weight when weighing out the pound cakes.

A certain well-known tobacco firm, in the keenness of competition, guaranteed full quarter-pound lots of the article, and to allow for the shrinkage added an extra fraction of an ounce to each quarter pound sent out. For this the government called them to answer in court, as they only paid tax on the quarter pound. The government won its case and the firm had to pay for all the extra amount as it left the factory, and not as it weighed when dry.—Philadelphia Call.

The Rise of Nickel.

Nickel is a modern metal. It was not in use nor known of till 1715. It has now largely taken the place of silver in plated ware, and as an alloy with steel it is superior to any other metal, for it is not only non-corrodible itself, but it transfers the same quality to steel; even when combined as low as 5 per cent. it prevents oxidation.

A MOTHER'S DUTY

TOWARDS HER DAUGHTERS.

Suggestions Which Bear Repeating, as Their Importance is Immeasurable.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

Only a few years ago even the medical profession scouted the idea that young girls could suffer from the misery of uterus troubles.

That form of disease, it was claimed, came only to married women.

When Lydia E. Pinkham first sent out the news of her great discovery, there was no lack of harsh speech from those whose practice and opinions she set at defiance.

But when young girls by the hundreds were absolutely cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, then the tongues of the traducers were stilled, and faith was allowed to live in the hearts of the people.

Young girls are subject to this trouble. It robs them of the buoyancy of youth. It makes all effort distasteful.

It causes retention and suppression of menses, leucorrhœa, severe headache, waxy complexion, depression, weakness, loss of appetite and interest.

Certainly mothers ought to know that these are all symptoms of the one cause of nearly all the suffering that comes to women; and to save their daughters ought to begin treatment at once.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the surest and most natural remedy for women ever compounded. It will accomplish its work with certainty.

NOTES ON EDUCATION.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO PUPIL AND TEACHER.

Five English Women Study Our Women's Schools—The Real Value of Teaching—Visitors and Visiting—Machinery One of the Best Educators

American and Foreign Schools.

Five women teachers were sent from England to this country to study and report upon secondary schools for girls and institutions for the training of women. Their reports have been published by Macmillan and are well worth careful reading. The authors, says the Philadelphia Ledger, were chosen as representatives of the best training of expert teachers in England and were therefore fully alive to the differences of the advantages and disadvantages of the American schools and those of that country. Each took a special subject and made a report on it, and together they enable us to see just how our schools look in the eyes of English teachers. Some of the matters described are, of course, familiar enough here—for instance, that we have no national school system, such as exists abroad, but that education is a matter left altogether to the States, though there is a certain amount of uniformity in our schools, less, perhaps, than that enforced by central authority in Great Britain, France, Germany and Switzerland. One of these watchful observers lays stress on the systematic cultivation of the spirit of nationality fostered by national holidays and on the admirable order and discipline that result from the freedom of behavior in school hours. Co-education is said to give girls more dignity, quiet and self-possession, and to boys a wholesome restraint in their manners. The splendid provision made for our public schools in buildings and equipment of course calls forth praise from these watchful observers. The private schools in this country are reported to educate about one-twelfth the school population, and to be as good as any in the world. In our primary schools history of the United States is taught much better than English history in schools of the same grade abroad. American schools make more use of oral work, blackboards, maps, pictures, models; scientific collections are necessities in America, luxuries in England. School libraries, laboratories, studios, gymnasiums are found here and not abroad. The American pupils have more self-reliance and a greater love of knowledge for its own sake than for the prizes which are made such an important part of all English school work. One of the ladies who made this inspection thinks that not sufficient attention is given here to the development of the individual talents of a particular boy or girl, and that although ample provision is made for indoor gymnastics in girls' schools there is almost complete neglect of outdoor games and recreations.

The training of teachers naturally receives much attention in these useful little reports, especially so because England and America have both made great advances in the past few years, yet each country has gone to work in its own way, ignoring and neglecting hitherto any comparison with the methods of the other.

The simple, matter of fact, expert way in which these five English women have studied our schools is of itself the best proof that they have found them well worth praise.

Machinery as an Educator.

In looking at a complex piece of machinery, such as the great triple-expansion engines of a high speed modern ocean racer, the first feeling of the uninstructed layman is apt to be that of confused awe. The huge mechanism appears to him as a leviathan, a great brute force, trained by man and under his control, but yet ready to strike down ruthlessly anyone who shall get in its way. Education is about the last function that one feels ready to attribute to it. Yet in the Engineering Magazine, Alexander E. Outerbridge, Jr., tells us that a machine is a great educator, and he ranks its work in this line as of a very high grade.

His ideas, which are worthy of careful attention, are given in the following extracts which the Literary Digest quotes from his article.

"An impression prevails in the minds of many intelligent people, more especially, perhaps, among those who are not directly engaged in mechanical pursuits, that the tendency of modern methods of manufacture in the substitution of maciinery for hand labor is detrimental to the intellectual development of the wage earner, in that it makes him an automaton, like the machine which he tends; that the workman in a great factory loses his individuality; that the handicraftsman of a former generation has disappeared; and that his successor is a mere marionette, to whom the gift of brains is a superfluity.

"It is the object of this paper to present briefly a different and, in some respects, a novel view of the educational influence that machinery exerts upon the mental and moral development of the workingman, and to show that the introduction of new inventions, so far from being an oppression to the wage earner, is, in fact, his greatest boon. These conclusions, which are the result of daily observation for a number of years in a large industrial works, are at a variance with the opinions of those theorists and economic writers who maintain that mechanical ocupation is necessarily narrowing to the intellect.

"I am satisfied that an insensate machine, in the material combinations of which, however, the skilled designer has embodied his own mental faculties, so that it is constrained to do his will when power is applied, performing accurately the most complex operations, exerts a stimulating influence upon the care-tender, even though he may be an illiterate man or a boy entirely unconscious of this influence. If you give a boy of average capacity the simplest routine work to do in connection with a machine—it may be merely to feed it with raw material—he will at first, perhaps, perform his task in a perfunctory manner, taking little interest in the work and having no comprehension of the mechanism of the machine. Little by little, however, the constant repetition of mechanical movements, producing always one uniform result, impresses itself upon his latent powers of observation and comprehension, the underlying principles and heretofore hidden motive of the seemingly inexplicable combination of wheels and gears is revealed, and simple order is evolved out of complexity; a new interest is developed and the boy becomes an intelligent operator. The educational influence of mechanical occupation upon the workingman is strikingly illustrated in another manner. You will find in all large industrial establishments employes who exhibit as much skill in their special work as that of well known original scientific investigators; they are daily performing operations as delicate in their way as the work of the microscopist, and with a degree of accuracy amazing to the novice. Take, for example, the simplest operation of calipering a tube or measuring a rod, and you will find mechanics dealing quantitatively with minute fractions of an inch which ordinary people totally disregard."

That all this close relationship between machine and operator has its educational value no one can doubt. But Mr. Outerbridge goes farther, and pursues his subject into a realm that harsh critics might be tempted to call that of fancy. A machine, he says, is in a certain sense the representative of the human mind that conceived it. He states this as follows:

"I believe that every novel machine possesses something of the personality of its creator. I believe, furthermore, that is is possible to trace through the machine, back to the inventor, a positive and continuing influence of his mind upon the mind of the operator.

"I believe that the special mental development of the present generation of American engineers and mechanics may also be traced through historical relics to the subtle quality of mind with which famous American inventors have endowed their creations. These forces have been silently working to mould the minds of men in characteristic grooves, so that is is impossible to mistake a purely American machine for a foreign production as it is to mistake a Chinaman for an Indian. This characterization may be even more sharply defined. It is not an unusual observation among mechanical experts to-day that machines produced by one establishment may often be distinguished from similar machines of another make (without the aid of any name plate) through a peculiar 'something' which the Frenchman expresses with a shrug and 'Je ne sais quoi.'"

Commit This to Memoey.

The value of your teaching is not the information you have put into the mind, but the interest you have awakened. If the heart is trained, the rest grows out of it. Interest the heart, the feelings, the emotions, for they are fundamental facts. The mind is evolved out of heartiness. People do not have mind worth thinking of unless they have capacity for sensitiveness. The characters of great men prove this. Whether in picture or in prose, we are always coming up against the fact that it is enthusiasm that governs the world. We have not realized the educational possibility of it. Of all things in the world love is the most educable, the most plastic; it can entwine itself about the lowest and most indecent things in the world and spend its energies there, or climb the heavenly ladder, as Plato said, and identify itself with all that is most worthy, most precious and most lovely.—Dr. G. Stanley Hall.

College Graduates.

If college graduates are put directly into teaching without special duty or training, they will teach as they have been taught. The methods of college professors are not in all cases the best, and if they were, high school pupils are not to be taught or disciplined as college students are. High school teaching and discipline can be that of neither the grammar school nor the college, but is sui generis. To recognize this and the special difference is vital to success. This recognition comes only from much experience, at great loss and partial failure, or by happy intuition not usually to be expected, or by definite instruction and directed practice. Success in teaching depends upon conformity to principles, and these principles are not a part of the mental equipment of every educated person.—From Report Committee of Fifteen.

Visitors and Visiting.

Visit to learn rather than to criticise.

Don't make the day for visiting schools a holiday.

You can learn something from the poorest school you ever saw.

Don't try to do a season's shopping on the same day you take for visiting.

Don't visit schools Friday for your own convenience; any day of the week is better than Friday.

If you have a friend with you, don't talk or whisper to her; it annoys and disturbs both teacher and pupils.

Take notes; you may remember the points you observe for a time, but if you write them you have them to keep.

Don't visit on the last few days of a term, for then examinations are generally in progress, and you see only written work.

Don't visit the day after a holiday; it takes one day to recover from a holiday; usually both teachers and scholars are tired after it.

Don't sit in front of blackboard work that children are copying, and don't wait for the teacher to ask you to move. Perhaps she is too busy to notice what the trouble is, but you know, or ought to, by the children's stretching out of their seats to see.

Don't ask a teacher to change her program for you; only superintendents should have that privilege. If a teacher should ask you what you would like to see or hear, then it is perfectly right for you to express you preference, but don't initiate the change yourself.

Don't talk to the teacher while she is giving a lesson, or at any time during the session. That time isn't yours or hers; if you wish to ask questions, make a note of them, and ask after school or when she is at leisure. But if she is going home to dinner, be careful not to detain her too long.

Don't visit too many schools in one day. Stay in one room long enough to pay the teacher for getting you a chair, and for causing her the interruption. Some superintendents pretend to say that they can judge a school and teacher the minute they enter a room. But there are a good many minutes in each day when I should not care to have my school judged.

DEBTS OF ROYAL FOLKS.

Tradesmen Never Dun Imperial Customers.

There are many persons who will envy the privilege which royalty enjoys of never being dunned for tradesmen's bills. The great Parisian dressmakers in particular make a point of never sending in any account to their royal and imperial customers unless specially requested to do so. At the same time, all sorts of clever artifices and devices are adopted to remind customers of this exalted rank—without appearing to do so—that money is due and payments desirable.

Very different from the Princess of Wales is the dowager Queen of Portugal, who is perennially hard up in spite of the large allowances she receives from the Portuguese and Italian civil lists. Her tradesmen at Paris, whence she gets all her clothes, have to wait years for their money, which they get only when some of those Portuguese loans happen to be floated, or when the Queen is able to get her brother, King Humbert of Italy, to come to her rescue and fill her depleted purse.

The members of the Russian court are very exact and unquestioning in their payments, and so, too, is Queen Marguerite of Italy, her punctiliousness in this respect being due to her husband, King Humbert, who, still suffering from the disastrous effects of the insane extravagance of his father, Victor Emmanuel, is careful to run as few bills as possible, and, so far as he can, to pay as he goes.

There is a popular impression abroad that the Prince of Wales is frequently dunned by tradesmen, but this is not the case. I don't suppose he ever received a tailor's bill in his life, and his pressing needs for money which drive him into such extraordinary and promiscuous friendships and associations, are attributable to loans coming due and to gambling and racing debts. Perhaps the most unpunctual and least satisfactory of royal personages with whom to run a bill is the present Emperor of Germany, a reigning sovereign who comes about as near being dunned like an ordinary mortal as any one could find, the tradesmen who are unable to get their money taking out their annoyance in disagreeable remarks that bring them dangerously near indictment for the crime of lese majeste.

WITHOUT FOOD OR SLEEP.

THE TORTUROUS TRIAL OF MISS CALLIE HUMMEL.

Doctors Said She Had Chronic Trouble of the Stomach, and Could Not Be Cured—She Has Now Recovered Her Good Health and Spirits, and the Neighbors Say It's a Miracle.

From the New Era, Greensburg, Ind.

The editor of the New Era had heard that Miss Callie Hummel, of Sunman, Ripley County, Indiana, had been cured of a severe case of chronic stomach trouble and dyspepsia. As the story sounded almost improbable, we determined to learn the truth of the matter, and went to Sunman the other day for that purpose. We called on Miss Hummel and found her to be a beautiful and charming young lady still in her teens and quite intelligent. The glow of perfect health appeared on her ruddy cheeks, and she was not the least disinclined to relate her marvelous experience:

"I had stomach trouble and dyspepsia nearly all my life," she said, in her pleasant way, "and the older I got the worse it grew on me and the more severe it became. I could eat scarcely anything and sleep was a rarity with me, my trouble was so painful. After doctoring with my physician here for several years, he failed to do me any good beyond the reach of medical aid, I went to Cincinnati, where I was treated by the ablest physicians without the least success. Discouraged and distressed, I returned home and began trying the many different medicines which I saw advertised, but not one did me the least noticeable good. My troubles steadily grew worse, and, in almost unbearable misery, I became sadly despondent and grew pale and thin as a skeleton for want of sleep and food, but neither could I enjoy. My mother saw an article about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and their marvelous cures, and they were a Godsend to me. I had lost all faith in medicine and had given up all hope of recovery, grim death staring me in the face. She wouldn't let me rest, however, till I had tried a box of the Pink Pills. With the first box I began to feel better, my appetite was partially restored and I could sleep. Within a short time I had taken some seven or eight boxes and I was, as you see me to-day, in perfect health, and able to sleep soundly enough, with an appetite that I can eat almost anything without reluctance. I feel that I owe everything to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and do not hesitate to recommend them through your paper to suffering humanity. I earnestly recommend them for building up the blood, for they proved a great wonder for that in my case."

Such was the wonderful story as told by Miss Hummel herself.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are now given to the public as an unfailing blood builder and nerve restorer, curing all forms of weakness arising from a watery condition of the blood or shattered nerves. The pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price (50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50—they are never sold in bulk or by the 100), by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Fish That Cannot Swim.

More than one species of fish is met with which cannot swim, the most singular of which, perhaps, is the maltha, a Brazilian fish whose organs of locomotion only enable it to crawl or walk or hop after the manner of a toad, to which animal this fish to some extent bears a resemblance, and it is provided with a long, upturned snout.

The anterior (pectoral) fins of the maltha, which are quite small, are not capable of acting on the water, but can only move backward and forward, having truly the form of thin paws. Both these and the ventral and anal fins are very different from the similar fins in other fishes, and could not serve for swimming at all.

Other examples of non-swimming fishes include the sea horse, another most peculiarly shaped inhabitant of the sea, which resembles the knight in a set of chessmen; and the starfish, of which there are many specimens, which mostly walk and crawl on the shore or rocks, both being unable to swim.

World Famed Dogs.

As regards the St. Bernard breed of dogs it has become extinct, and although the canines now employed are noble and sagacious animals, and are looked upon as descendants of the breed coming from the Pyrenees, they are at the most nothing more than Newfoundlands crossed with the original stock. Barry, the most celebrated of them all, who is said to have rescued ever seventy persons, has been dead for many years. With his death passed away the last of the thoroughbreds. Nevertheless the monks possess two sets of valuable dogs, the young of which are eagerly sought, bringing fabulous prices in the European markets. They are erroneously known as the rough and smooth coated St. Bernards.

The prevailing color of the smooth coated dogs is white, while that of the rough coated breed is yellow. No particular pains have been taken to keep the two breeds distinct, there has been considerable in and cross breeding, with the result that there is a third type which cannot be designated as belonging to either the smooth or rough coated class. This last stock is perhaps the best—being fully as large as the other two varieties—having as good a scent, and a coat of hair sufficiently thick to keep the animals warm without encumbering them upon the search.

To make the statement that there is no mountain route in Europe that has been used as much as the Great St. Bernard, that myriads have crossed the same, and that thousands have perished along the wayside, will not appear extravagant when it is recalled that the pass has a history going back more than 3000 years.

An Immense Trout Hatchery.

Dr. F. J. Bethel, a well known dentist of Bakersfield, is at the Baldwin. He spoke yesterday of his recent trip to Seattle.

"While in Seattle," said Dr. Bethel, "I learned of an immense trout hatchery to be established at Orillin, on Sprink Brook, about four miles north of Kent, and thirteen miles from Seattle, on the Northern Pacific. Sprink Brook is a branch of Black River, and at the place chosen for the enterprise it is the purpose of the company operating it to construct dams, where there are the most springs, on the brook bottom. This insures a constant supply of fresh water, and several miles of artificial lakes will thus be secured. When the trout have attained a certain age they will be transferred to the lake next below, and so on to the end, when they will be fit for the market. Fifty acres of land will be covered by these lakes. It is also the purpose of the management to allow fishing in the lowest lake and charge fishermen for what they catch. The hatchery is to be known as the Sprink Brook Trout Farm, and will be the largest in the United tates.

Keep Your Weather Eye Open.

Fraud loves a shining mark. Occasionally spurious imitations spring up of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the great American family remedy for chills and fever, dyspepsia, constipation, billiousness, nervousness, neuralgia, rheumatism and kidney disorder. These imitations are usually fiery local bitters full of high wines. Look out for the firm signature on the genuine label and vignette of St. George and the Dragon.

Bad Cargo.

The captains of ships which carry bricks have to be very careful. An ordinary brick is capable of absorbing a pint of water. So with a cargo of brick in the hold serious leakage may quite well go on undetected, for the water that enters is sucked up as fast as it gets in. If this should be the case, the consequence are bound to be most serious.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

Mr. Tom E. He had a continual heavy feeling in his stomach, so that he had to lie in bed to ease his pain. This indigestion caused chronic diarrhœa and sleeplessness. He had to be very careful as to his diet, and could only eat as simple a food as potatoes sparingly. He took four boxes of LYON'S SEVEN WONDERS, and now he can eat anything. His digestion is perfect; he can sleep well, and he gives it as his opinion that the medicine does everything that is claimed for it. He heartily recommends it to all persons suffering from indigestion or any stomach disorder.

Obituary

James W. McClellan was born Oct. 24, 1863, and departed this life Sept, 24, 1895, aged 31 years, 11 months. He was joined in marriage to Miss Clara Walborn, of Auburn, Aug 8, 1888. After their marriage they moved on to Mr. Walbor's farm, 3 miles west of Auburn, where they lived until his death. He was baptized, and joined the Lutheran church at Auburn Jan. 24, 1886, of which he was a regular member until his death. He was a faithful church goer, and was ever interested in the welfare of the church. One year ago last April he joined the Knights of the Maccabees of Auburn Tent No, 51, of which he has ever been a faithful member; he was an esteemed and cherished friend among the Maccabees, and he shall ever live green in our memories. He held a policy of $1,000 in the order of K. O. T. M. to be paid to his wife, at the time of his death; he loved his family and that love actuated him to make ample provisions for their comfort when he was no more. This is the duty of every man. During his illness all was done that kind friends could do; we went with him to the river's edge, and there we were compelled to say good by. Mr. McClellan leaves a wife, one child, a mother, three sisters and three brothers, besides a host of friends to mourn his untimely death He was a kind husband and father and a good neighbor and citizen. We believe our brother died a christian. Among the last things he said was "I am ready to go. All is well.'

Card Of Thanks.

To the friends and neighbors who gave me such abundant sympathy and assistance in my bereavement and consequent trials, I wish to give the fullest measure of thanks from a grateful heart. They will ever be remembered.

MRS. CLARA MCCLELLAN.

Resolution Of Respect

Whereas, by the sudden and unexpected death of our Sentinel James W. McClellan of Auburn Tent No 51, K. O T. M. has suffered a great and irreparable loss.

RESOLVED:—That as an officer of the tent he faithfully and efficiently performed his work, displaying administrative qualities of a high order as an officer and commanding our respect and confidence by his loyalty and faithfulness.

RESOLVED:—That he had endeared himself to us all by his genial open hearted and social disposition; that he was ever the kind and generous friend, the wise counselor and devoted brother: And that in his death each member of our tent mourns a personal friend.

RESOLVED:—That it is not alone the recollection of his quality as a Maccabee that we shall cherish with affectionate regard, but as an upright man he had entrenched himself in the heart of this community, and the fond remembrance in which he is held by all will form the silver lining to the dark cloud which hangs over us.

RESOLVED:—That recognizing the depth of sorrow in which his family are plunged we extend them our heartfelt sympathy, commending them to the Supreme Ruler on high, who maketh all things work together for good to those who love him,

Com. { J. D. Brosy, John C. Clark, A. R. Wilson.

Stops Inflammation.

There is no medicine so often needed in every home and so admirably adapted to the purposes for which it is intended, as Chamberlain's Pain Balm. Hardly a week passes but some member of the family has need of it, A toothache or headache may be cured by it. A touch of rheumatism or neuralgia quieted. The severe pain of a burn or scald promptly relieved and the sore healed in much less time than when medicine has to be sent for. A sprain may be promptly treated before inflammaton sets in, which insures a cure in about one-third of the time otherwise required. Cuts and bruises should receive immediate treatment before the parts become swollen, which can only be done when Pain Balm is kept at hand. A sore throat may be cured before it becomes serious. A troublesome corn may be removed by applying it twice a day for a week or two. A lame back may be cured and several days of valuable time saved or pain in the side or chest relieved without paying a doctor bill. Procure a 50 cent bottle at once and you will never regret it. L. L. C'S. TRIP.

Dr. Vesta M. Swarts is very friendly to her club, the L. L. C., but her duties as a physician often prevent her meeting at the regular sessions. So Saturday, she had a pleasure trip for them, and provided conveyances to take all thirty of them to Waterloo and give them an elegant supper at the Locke Hotel. They went via the Morning Star road, and on reaching the south edge of Waterloo, went east to the Lutz school house, then north to the fair ground, then west to U iontown, and then to the hotel. This was to give them a good ride, for they were made comfortable in spite of the disagreeable weather, for good sp rits supplied the lack of good weather. There were eight Waterloo ladies also invited, Mrs. Juliette Dickinson, Mrs. E. P. Dickinson, Mrs. Edward Ettinger, Mrs. J. C. Day, Mrs. B. B. Long, Mrs. J. A. Boozer and Mrs. F. W. Willis. Soon after their arrival, supper was announced, when Mrs. Swarts escorted the president of the club, Miss McTighe, and the retiring president, Mrs. A. J. Ralston to the dining room, the club following. The dining room and tables were decorated in exquisite taste, with smilax, roses, and other flowers, all artistically arranged. It was, with the snowy linen, a vision of beauty, such as a company of ladies would enjoy. The supper was elegant and in every way tempting, and was served in four courses. All stood during a brief prayer, by Mrs. Barns, of Auburn, and this was followed by the Lord's prayer in concert, and then all were seated. At the close of the first course, Mrs. Rose, as toastmistress, called the first exercise. "The Ladies," which was responded to by Mrs. Ashley, in an able and well prepared speech. After the second course, came the toast, "Our Friends," responded to by Mrs. F. W. Willis, in a very apt and witty manner. At the close of the third course, was the toast, "The New woman," the response being by Mrs. Eliza Schaab in a very original and charming talk. When the fourth course, closing the banquet, was done, Mrs. T. C. Ford's toast was given. It showed excellent thought and great originality and was well given. This ended the literary part of the evening's entertainment and was followed by a social hour, and then the ride home. All speak highly of the trip and are full of compliments for mine host, Ab. Kelley and his admirable wife, who provided such an elegant supper. They also compliment the waiters, among whom they discovered Mr. Kelley's charming daughter, Blanche. All did their parts with an ease and grace that could not well be excelled The general verdict of the ladies, is, that the Locke Hotel has lost none of its excellent features by the change of proprietors, But that Mr. and Mrs. Kelley will ably maintain the excellent reputation it has so long enjoyed.

To Wheat-Growers.

The Jackson (Mich.) Patriot gives some statistics which may be interesting to the growers of wheat in this country: "Fifteen years ago one-fourth of the world's wheat came from the United States. Now only one-sixth is grown in this country. Fifteen years ago about all the wheat grown in the world was grown in the north temperate zone. During the last six months, nearly one-fourth of the British imports of wheat were from Argentine and Australia. Fifteen years ago two-thirds of the English foreign wheat came from the United States, but during the last six months only a little more than one-third was from this country.

The Wilde Family.

This talented family gave one of the finest musical entertainments Saturday evening that has ever been given in Auburn. The children, five in number, were led by W. B. Wilde, the father, who is a violinist as is also Nina, one of the girls. Arthur plays the Violincello and Nealie, the other boy, plays a cornet, while the elder girl, Grace, is the pianoist. All are accomplished players. Little Ralph, six years old, assists in the orchestra by playing the triangle, but makes a full hand, in singing little solos. But the one who wins the most applause is the little girl, Nina, who, besides being a wonderful adept with the violin, has a no less wonderful ability as a vocalist. In fact, she is a born singer, and we see no reason why, with judicious training, she would not some day be famous. Her voice has an astonishing compass for one so young and is, besides, rich and powerful. She sang several operatic airs of a difficult character, and acquitted herself so as to obtain the heartiest applause. She was called back for both violin and vocal pieces, and must have felt highly flattered by her reception. Little Ralph was also encored when he sang "Girl Wanted," and gave an extra verse in which he stated that President Cleveland's door showed the sign "Boy Wanted." It raised a storm of laughter and applause. The others also were encored. Altogether, it was, as we heard several remark, one of the very best things ever given to an Auburn audience, and one said "Those who are not here to-night don't know what a splendid thing they have missed." All admit it was wonderful as an exhibition of what these young people can do. The house was not large, the church not being over half full.

The entertainment gave such good satisfaction that a return date has been made. They will appear again on Tuesday night, Oct. 8th. New features will be added to the program and in fact an entire different program will be rendered. Miss Nina will sing the Patti Waltz Song, as sang by Mme Patti on her last tour in this country. The general admission will be 25 cents, reserved seats 35 cents.

Auburn Has A Poet

An Auburn man's father-in-law and mother in-law have been away on a visit for a few weeks and as he had not heard from them he wrote the following postal card yesterday.

AUBURN, Sunday A. M, Sept. 30

The temperature has changed.

We've had a big frost.

The flies and mosquitos have mostly got lost.

Your chickens are all gone.

And a duck in the pot,

But what else is for dinner, don't know what we've got.

The peaches all canned—Tomatoes all up.

The chow-chow is made and the jell's in the cup.

We are thinking of making some cider for fun,

But don't think it pays by the time it's all done.

If you ain't coming home, send a lock of your hair.

So that we don't forget you and you can stay there.

They Will Visit.

MURRAY-CHEYNEY.

Wednesday's Daily.

This morning as the reporter was attending to some business matters in the clerk's office two gentlemen came in and one bought a marriage license. It proved to be Rev. Klotz, of Waterloo, and Charles D. Murray, of Decatur. The wedding occurred at 11:30 to-day at the bride's home in Waterloo and Mr. Murray and Miss Neva Cheyney, were the contracting parties. Rev. Klotz officiating. Mrs. Murray is one of the re spected ladies of Waterloo. Mr. Murray is in the saloon business at Decatur. He runs the bar in Dell Lock's hotel. The COURIER extends congratulations.

The Bell Telpehone

The other day we had an article about telephones and since then, we learn from Mr. Davenport, who is in charge of the Long Distance and other telephone interests here, which is the Bell system, and he informs us that arrangements can be made with the Bell people, so that telephones can be had at $20 a year for business houses, but there will be an additional expense of $12 a year, to pay for the service at the central office which will have to be maintained. The expense is still very high at this rate, but Mr. Davenport thinks we may get a system yet, on some basis like this.

Eagle Mills Improvements

I. O. Bachtel at the Eagle Roller Mills is making some improvements at his mill. Among them he is erecting a new pair of scales. These are being put up along the east side of the mill and when the farmers bring in their wheat they drive on the scales and have wagon and all weighed. Then when the grain is entied, the wagon and sacks are weighed again and thus, they get pay for every pound of wheat they bring to the mill. The scales being outside, a good deal of custom work will also be done. Mr. Bachtel thinks he will make enough out of the scales in a couple of years to pay for them. The engine room at the mills has also undergone some repairs. A new wall has been put along the east side making the room about five feet longer. When these improvements are completed the Eagle Mills will be among the best in this country. We are glad to note however, the success of this mill and its products.

Helpless.

Claude Updike found Pinned to the Ground.

Tuesday Eli Snyder who buys stock for Jim Sheffer, was driving along a road about two miles west of Leo, that was scarcely ever traveled. As he was passing a strip of wood he discovered that Claude Updike was pinned to the ground by a tree falling on him. Mr. Snyder having no use of an arm at all of course thought he could do but little for the man, but he went to the fence near by nd got a rail and managed to get him loose. Mr. Updike had gone to the woods to cut a hickory but and the wind was quite strong and the tree was about to fall in a different direction than he intended it should. Mr. Updike got on the opposite side and began to push and in some way his foot slipped and the tree fell on him, lying across both limbs close to his body. Had not Mr. Snyder happened by the man would have died, as it is very seldom any one travels that road.

Heart Disease Cured

By Dr. Miles' Heart Cure.

Fainting, Weak or Hungry Spells, Irregular or Intermittent Pulse, Fluttering or Palpitation, Choking Sensation, Shortness of Breath, Swelling of Feet and Ankles, are symptoms of a diseased or Weak Heart.

MRS. N. C. MILLER.

Of Fort Wayne, Ind., writes on Nov. 29, 1894: "I was afflicted for forty years with heart trouble and suffered untold agony. I had weak, hungry spells, and my heart would palpitate so hard, the pain would be so acute and torturing, that I became so weak and nervous I could not sleep. I was treated by several physicians without relief and gave up ever being well again. About two years ago I commenced using Dr. Miles' Remedies. One bottle of the Heart Cure stopped all heart troubles and the Restorative Nervine did the rest, and now I sleep soundly and attend to my household and social duties without any trouble.

Fair Ground Burned

Kendallville Fair In Flames. Buildings And Horses Destroyed.

Thursday's Daily.

At Kendallville fair this afternoon, a disastrous fire started in the row of stables along the west side of the grounds and could not be got under control till the whole line was in ashes. It is supposed it was set on fire, as a lady claims she saw two men start the blaze, but she could not give the alarm in time. They were, however, both arrested and are held for examination. As soon as possible, word was sent down town, but it was some time before the fire department reached the scene, and even then they could get no water, as for some reason it had not been turned on for that part of town. There were eight horses lost and one man came near perishing while trying to save the horses. At one time it seemed impossible to save the large floral hall, and the tents near by.

Friday's Daily.

We yesterday gave a brief account of the disastrous fire at the Kendallville fair. The Auburn DAILY COURIER was the first paper in the country to publish it. It appears that sometime that forenoon, three men had been put out of the grounds for climbing over the fence to get in. It is likely they were also drunk and they swore vengeance About noon as the crowd was beginning to eat their dinners one of the COURIER force noticed a small sheet of smoke rising up from the stables west of the grounds. Before attention was fully called to it, the flames burst out and the alarm was given. People were excited and ran to and fro and but little could be done or was done. The owners of horses, some of whom were at dinner when the alarm was given, worked hard, risked their lives to save their animals but so rapidly did the fire spread that but little could be done. It started about the middle of the line of horse stalls and ran north to the cattle stalls, where it was stopped, and also ran south to the end of that line. The wind was from the east and fire soon caught in the near by dwellings on the outside of the fair ground There, one house and one barn were destroyed, but the fire in the others was got under control. The greatest loss was in the stables. The buildings themselves were not so very valuable, but there was a long row of them. Yet the greatest loss was in the horses burned, many of them being quite valuable. It is said that Mr. Sherwood who lives northwest of Waterloo lost a fine span of horses on which he had just been awarded a premium. Emory Johnson, Phin Childs of Fairfield and H. M. Showalter of Franklin were joint owners of an imported Clydesdale stallion that cost them $1,200. It was among the lost. Scott Galloway, who resides near Wolf Lake, lost three fine horses, on a Norman Stallion worth $1,500, and a span of mares for which he had been offered $350. It is also claimed that Anderson Galloway, whose home is at Cromwell lost a span of driving horses worth $600. All the horses burned were valuable animals. The COURIER man claims he counted nine bodies; Mr. Sawyel says eight. There was some insurance on both, buildings and stock, but it will cover only a small part of the loss, which foots up about $10,000. As to the cause of the fire. It appears that a lady living in one of the dwellings outside the grounds saw several boys or young men outside the fence, acting in a suspicious way. She thinks they had kindled a fire in the long grass, and when she looked again the fire burst out of the stables. Another account claims the boys or men fired the stables with matches. She gave the alarm as soon as she could but it was too late, Five of the young men were arrested that afternoon and will be held for trial. Several men were burned more or less, or suffocated by smoke, while trying to save the horses. One man remained unconscious for some time.

Stabbing Affray

Monday's Daily.

Wolf Lake, southwest of Albion was the scene of a stabbing affray this morning, by which a man will likely lose his life. The particulars we get from Joe Link who came from there a short time after the stabbing was done A man named Lyons had rented a half of the Wolf Lake flouring mill, and occupied a dwelling near by owned by a man named Hoover, who had agreed, that if Lyon could not have the house all winter he would notify him on Oct. 1st. This he failed to do, but on Friday, the 4th, pretended to sell the house to his son-in-law, Moore. But then, Lyon refused to vacate, as he had supposed he could have it all winter, and it was too late now to get another. This morning Hoover and Moore, went to the house, saying they would have a racket with Lyon. A quarrel ensued, and Lyon ordered them out of the house. Moore refused to go, and Lyon knocked him down. Then Moore drew a knife from his pocket and slashed Lyons across and into the bowels, then across the face and the breast. All wounds were bad, but it is feared the stabs in the bowels will prove fatal. As our informant left half an hour after the affray, we cannot say whether Lyons is alive or not.

Cuban Independence

There is a paper at Robbins & McCord's which is being extensively signed asking congress at its coming session, to recognize Cuba as a belligerent power. If congress take this action before the present Cuban uprising is crushed out, the chances are, it will result in giving the Cuban revolutionists such an advantage over the Spaniards, that they may succeed in establishing an independent government. This also might result in eventually uniting the Island to the United States. Whether either of these results will be of advantage to us just now no one can foresee. But the spirit of American people is always in sympathy with those struggling to free themselves from their oppessors, and if any encouragement were given, our people would soon overwhelm Cuba with men and means enough to end the struggle in a few weeks. We owe nothing to Spain. They showed us no good will when we were in trouble, but substantially assisted the south. The day will come, if not now, some later day when Cuba will be sufficiently improved in its social and other conditions to fit it to become a member of the "Great Republic." In Grant's administration, we might have obtained Cuba, but for a quarrel between him and republican leaders. Grant was right, and more far-seeing than his party. But that chance is past. We shall wait our time. In the meantime let congeess take hold of this matter when it meets.

Good Scheme.

Indiana lawmakers have for some time been talking up a law to compel the prisoners in the county jails over the state, to do labor enough to pay for their board, but so far no such law has been enacted, as far as we know. Now, however, it seems that an effort is to be made. A late number of the Kendallville Standard has this clipping from the Michigan City News:

"Senators Hoffer, Duncan and Ellison, the committee named by Lieutenant Governor Nye to devise a better way of employing the convict labor of the state will visit the Minnesota penitentiary with a view of adopting the plan in operation there of working prisoners sentenced for two years or less, on the public highways. The committee will meet at the northern prison about Nov. 1st, when a report will be prepared."

Old People.

Old people who require medicine to regulate the bowels and kidneys will find the true remedy in Electric Bitters. This medicine does not stimulate and contains no whiskey nor other intoxicant but acts as a tonic and alterative. It acts mild on the stomach and bowels, adding strength and giving tone to the organs, thereby aiding Nature in the performance of the functions. Electric Bitters is an excellent appetizer and aids digestion. Old People find it just exactly what they need. Price fifty cents per bottle at Robbins & McCord's Drug Store. 5

Drummond's Lightning

Remedy did great work for H. J. Lewis of Anderson's Mills, S. C. He had Sciatic Rheumatism in the left hip and leg and for six weeks was not able to sit up or walk a step; and suffered untold agonies. After using Drummond's Lightning remedy for rheumatism for two weeks, he wrote that he could walk and that the pain was gone. If you suffer from rheumatism and wish to be cured, send $5 to the Drummond Medicine Co., 48 Maiden Lane, New York, and the two large bottles will be sent to your express address. At Toledo

Ft. Meigs And Other Old Battle Fields Visited By The Tri-State Editors.

The business men of Toledo, more particularly the Chamber of Commerce, have for some years interested themselves in an effort to have government set aside as public parks, the several battlefields in the vicinity of that city. In this they have been ably backed up by the patriotic people of the place, and patriotic sentiment of the entire Maumee Valley, as well as all to whom the matter has been presented. On Monday was held the annual meeting of the Maumee Valley Historical Association, and a number of newspaper men and others who were supposed to be interested were invited to attend. The editor of this paper, with his wife were among the fortunate number. The meeting was held in the Boody House in Toledo and after some informal business had been gone over, all the party were given a sight-seeing ride to all parts of the city, by means of the extensive system of electric railway lines. After a bountiful dinner, the party was taken in charge by the people of the Maumee Valley Belt Line, and taken across to the south side of the river. then ten miles along that side on through Perrysburg, and to the foot of the "Rapids." Here we stopped and walked about fifty rods to reach the side of old "Fort Meige," which endured a memorable siege in the war of 1812. August 16, 1812 Gen Hull had surrendered Detroit and the territory of Michigan to the British. Early in 1813 Gen. Harrison, then in command of all forces in this section, gathered a good sized army from Ft. Wayne, Defiance, Recovery, etc and moved down the Maumee.

Gen. Winchester, with a detachment of troops was sent in advance to defend Frenchtown, now Monroe, on the River Raisin, then quite a village. He was at first successful, but Feb. 22 was defeated and a part of his men massacred. When Harrison reached the foot of the "Rapids" he built a fort composed of earthworks, stockades and blockhouses. It was this work that we visited Monday. On the opposite side of the river stood the then little village of Maumee, which soon after became the county seat of Lucas county. In 1835 the county seat was changed to Toledo which then hada few houses. The fort was but partly done, when the British under Gen. Proctor came up on the opposite side and with him a large body of Indians under Tecumseh. May 1. Proctor having erected a battery diagonally across from the fort, and just below the village of Maumee, opened fire on Harrison. But he was too late to do much with cannon, as Harrison had quietly raised a high and strong shelter of earth about 600 feet long, running east and west through the center of his fort. He moved the tents and men behind this, and they were safe. About this time, Gen. Green Clay of Kentucky, came down the river with a strong reenforcement. Harrison stopped him a few miles above, ordered him to take the greater part of his force and land on the other side and capture the Brittish batteries. This was done by Col. Dudley, who unfortunately did not spike the guns as he had been ordered, but he and his men turned their attention to some Indians and while absent chasing them, the British returned in force, recaptured the guns and finally got the most of Dudley's men. These prisoners were, most of them, massacred by Indians.

In the meantime, the rest of Gen. Clay's men had landed above the fort, and after a good deal of trouble and some loss, they got through the Indian forces and into the fort. The siege lasted nine days, and then the British and Indians retired. But there were many killed on both sides of the river. All were buried on the side where the fort is.

Some officers were buried inside the fort and the rude stone slabs still show above the sod. But for some reason, no care has ever been taken to preserve the graves of these early heroes. A large number lie buried near the west end of the enclosure, while across the public road to the south in a plowed field, in ground lately tilled in crops, a hundred or two of the Pennsylvania Militia are buried and neglected. North, across a deep ravine, and on a high point of bank lie the brave men who perished by bullet and tomahawk in Dudley's disastrous fight on the other side of the river. Canada thistles very appropriately, one might think, flourish in rank growth all over this lonely spot. It is to rescue these graves from neglect that the association has been asking congress to appropriate enough to buy a few acres of land—as much as will take in the fort and all the graves within and without, and make the land, as is done with southern battlefields, a park. They will also ask that similar care will be taken of the land at the outskirts of Maumee, diagonally across from the fort, where Dudley captured the battery, and where he was a few hours afterwards defeated. And two miles below this last named point on another prominent shoulder of the bluff is the old British fort, "Miami" into which the prisoners from Dudley's column were huddled and slaughtered, and it is also the intention to have this point of four or five acres cared for. And finally on this same side of the river, and about four miles above Maumee City, is the field of Wayne's great victory of August 20 1894, called the "Battle of Fallen Timber." This is also to be cared for, as it was very important. It broke the power of the Indians in all this great territory. The siege of Ft. Meigs, May 1813, was equally important, as it stopped the further invasion of our soil by the British and their Indian Allies. These battle fields, though small, should be cared for and the dead that lie in neglected and desecrated graves should be remembered and honored, for in all that goes to make the hero and the patriot they were the peers of the noblest and best. We hope to see congress take early and decided steps along the line asked for by the Maumee Valley society. In a future chapter, we hope to give our readers, some idea of the peculiar construction of this once formidable and important military post.

Head Hurt.

In fact two heads hurt, and it takes a good deal to make a dent in a lawyer's head. Last night, Attorney C. M. Brown and wife were enjoying a peaceful slumber, and he was dreaming of managing some famous case with big fee attachment, when from some unknown cause, the big head piece that a mistaken civilization has insisted on placing atop of the head board, got loose and fell, and great was the fall thereof. At least Mr. and Mrs. Brown realized that the fall was great. It struck the lady over the left eye, and cut a big gash, severing an artery from which the blood spurted in an alarming manner. Mr. Brown was also hit on the head, but not so seriously. He managed to locate the severed artery on Mrs. Brown's temple, and she held the spot fast, while he ran for a doctor. He soon returned with Dr. F. M. Hines, who dressed their hurts, and left them in a safe condition. One never knows how slight a cause may do serious harm. It goes to prove that some of our modern styles of furniture, while they look nice, are no where near as safe as the old-fashioned bedsteads that our fathers and grandfathers made by driving wooden pegs into the sides of their log houses. Still we don't know as friend Brown and his wife contemplate going back to that style.

Fire Bugs Arrested.

The Kendallville Daily Sun of Friday says:

"The lady who witnessed the setting fire to the stables at the fair grounds Thursday, furnished the officers with the names of some of the guilty parties and they were immediately put under arrest by Marshal Berhalter and his assistants. They soon had five in the coils, Chancy Baker, Romeo Root, Jacob Weisler and Michael Hornet of this city, all young men about 20 years of age, and Henry Ramsberger, a married man with one child, living four and one half miles southwest of this city, where he was arrested early last evening by Marshal Berhalter and Deputy Gœring.

Several of the suspects were put in the sweat box, and Chancy Baker made a confession of the terrible affair. He is reported as saying that Ramsberger set fire to the straw in the stables, and that the whole party made no attempt to put out the fast spreading flames and when the matter became serious all fled in different directions to avoid the trouble. After the fire was at its worst, two of the party rushed in with the crowd to fight the flames, while two more circled around the grounds and paid their way at the general gate, presumably to attempt to destroy any suspicion of them

Mr. N. B. Newnam, president of the association, swore out a warrant against the five young chaps, charging them with arson. They were given a hearing this morning before Mayor James Graves. Chancy Baker and Michael Hornet waived examination, Jacob Weisler pleaded not guilty, and Romeo Root and Henry Ramsberger pleaded guilty. After the examination of several witnesses, the mayor bound them all over to court, Ramsberger in the sum of $2000 and the other four in the sum of $500 each. On account of the circuit court convening next week, they all refused to give bond and this morning were taken to Albion and placed in jail to await the action of the court.

Two Lives Saved.

Mrs. Phœbe Thomas, of Junction City, Ill., was told by her doctors she had consumption and that there was no hope for her, but two bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery completely cured her, and she says it saved her life. Mr Thomas Eggers, 139 Florida St., San. Francisco, suffered from a dreadful cold, approaching consumption. He tried without result, everything else, then bought one bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery and in two weeks was cured. He is naturally thankful. It is such results, of which these are samples, that prove the wonderful efficacy of this medecine in coughs and colds. Free trial bottles at Robbins & McCord's drugstore. for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria," and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

Death in the Mine.

A special from Wilkesbarre, Pa., says: Shortly after 5 oclock Tuesday afternoon a terrific explosion of gas occurred in the Dorrence mine, operated by the Lehigh Valley Coal Company, situated in the northwestern part of the city. It is not yet known how many men were in the mine. The officials are very reticent and it is almost impossible to get any information from the levels of the earth where the resuers are at work.

At 8 o'clock five men, all badly burned, were brought to the surface. Two are so badly hurt that they cannot live. Shortly afterward two more men, very badly burned, were brought to the surface and taken to the hospital.

At 2 o'clock a. m., all the bodies had been recovered. The fatalities will number seven or eight.

Railroad Horror.

A collision occurred between freight and passenger trains, twelve miles from Brussels, and it is learned that the disaster was a great deal more serious than the first report indicated. It is now ascertained that eighteen persons were killed and at least 100 injured. The list of fatally injured is also likely to be increased, as at least twenty-five of the injured are dangerously hurt. The engine of the freight train struck the passenger cars, two of which were crowded with men and women. These cars were telescoped and a third was thrown on top of them.

Joy Kills Him.

The joy of receiving his quarterly pension of $8 per month was more than Horace A. Butler could stand. He was a member of the Seventh Ohio Volunteers and lived at 1817 Ann street Pittsburgh. He went to the Government Building to get his money. He said he had waited for it so long that he wanted to be on hand early. As he was waiting for the elevator to carry him to the Pension Agent's office he set up a glad shout and fell dead. For years he had suffered of heart disease and dropsy.

Train Robbery.

The north bound 'Frisco passenger train was robbed at Caston, I. T., fifty miles south of Fort Smith, Ark. Six men did the work. They cut the express car loose from the train and ran it up the track. They failed to open the through safe and only got eighty-five cents from the local safe. The passengers were not molested. The train was permitted to pull out after the bandits failed to open the big safe. It is thought to have been the work of the Christian brothers' gang.

Ran the Gauntlet of Bold Highwaymen.

A band of robbers attempted to rob the Grand Rapids and Indiana northbound train two miles north of Kalamazoo, Mich. The engineer opened the trottle and did not heed the signal to stop, rushed through a fusilade of bullets. The headlight was shot off and the cab riddled with bullets. The train stopped at Plainwell and sent information back to Kalamazoo, and officers are scouring the country.

Dynamite Lets Go.

A Leadville, Col., special says: There was a giant powder explosion at the head of Stray Horse gulch. Two cabins there were owned by three miners, Fraiar, Lowney, and Burt. It is feared that Burt was in one of the huts. If so he was blown to pieces, as the cabin and surroundings were blown to bits. There was twenty-five pounds of giant powder in the cabins. How it exploded is a mystery.

He Shot and Killed.

Jacob Keller, an ex-saloon keeper and keeper and well known citizen of Ripley, Ohio, shot and instantly killed Grant Love colored. Keller was under the influence of liquor at the time and imagined that Love was carring a knife with which the latter intended to cut him. Keller is married and belongs to a good family.

Died in Succession.

Miss Maggie Sweeney died suddenly at her home in Cedarville, Ohio. There seems to be a fatality pursuing the family. Her mother was found dead about a year ago, and a sister died as suddenly about a week afterward. Nellie, still another sister, died only seven weeks ago, after an illness of only ten days.

An Electric Car Held Up in Chicago.

Five armed and masked road agents held up an electric car in the outskirts of Chicago between 8 and 9 o'clock Tuesday night, and went through the passengers in regular train robber fashion. One passenger was shot and the robbers escaped without leaving a clue of any kind as to their identity.

Veterans Dying Fast.

The announcement is made by Surgeon A. D. Kimball, of the National Soldiers' Home, of Marion, Ind., that there are at present 218 of the 1,200 inmates in the hospital, and that the number is constantly increasing, while the death rate is averaging nearly one a day.

Little Girl Kidnaped.

A 6-year-old adopted daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Simmons of Napoleon, Ohio, was kidnaped while on her way to school, by a well-dressed lady, who drove away with the child in a carriage. The girl is said to be an heiress to property in Cleveland.

Docks Destroyed.

At Green Bay, Wis., fire destroyed the docks of the Murphy Lumber Company, together with millions of feet of logs and lumber and a number of buildings. The loss is $100,000. The fire was caused by a spark from a tug.

To Free Ireland.

The national officers and Executive Committee of the Irish National Alliance have issued an appeal to all friends of the independence of Ireland to contribute money to carry out the purpose of the organization.

A Child Nearly Burned to Death By Indian Imitators.

Since Buffalo Bill showed at East Liverpool, Ohio, a month ago, half the juvenile population have turned savages. The other night, in an alley of Third street, five companions captured the 6-year-old son of Andrew Vandine and tied him to the stake. They fired toy pistols at him, and finally piled shavings about his feet and lighted the fire in true Western style. Neighbors rescued the boy, but not until his clothes had taken fire and he was badly burned.

Harry Wright Dead.

Harry Wright, the veteran base-ball manager, died at Atlantic City, N. J., after a short illness.

DEEDS OF FIENDS.

Turks Ravish Armenian Women and Kill Them.

Constantinople special: A deputation composed of forty leading Armenians called at the British embassy here to see the British Ambassador, Sir Philip Currie. They were informed that Sir Philip was absent; but they said they had come to see him, and would wait there until he appeared.

The Armenian church at Constantinople and the other churches situated in different parts of the Turkish capital are still crowded with refugees. There are nearly five hundred Armenians in the Patirachate Church alone. The scenes in the churches are heartrending in the extreme. Many women and children are bewailing the loss of their husbands and fathers. The Armenians declare that the Turkish men committed the most terrible excesses in the Karaghiomkuk quarter of Constantinople during the night of Monday last, the date when the rioting first broke out. A woman, named Aghavni, who was eight months enceinte, was ripped open, it is claimed, and the child within her was exposed to the jeering mob. It is added that the same woman's daughter, only fourteen year old, was ravished. It is still impossible to give the exact number of killed or wounded. All the accounts concur in saying that the Turkish police countenanced the atrocitities. According to the Armenians, about 200 persons have been killed during the rioting.

NOT GENERAL.

While the Business of the Country is Improved Prosperity is Not Complete.

R. G. Dun & Co., in their weekly review of trade, says: Commercial failures in the third quarter of 1895 were 2,792, with liabilities of $32,167,179, averaging $11,521 per firm, against $10,028 last year, about 15 per cent. more. The rate of commercial mortality, 2.34 failures in a quarter for every 1,000 firms in business, is lower than last year.

Under the appropriate headings are given details of the movements of different products with their causes, the most important being the unprecedented crop of corn and oats, a larger crop of wheat than false representations led the world to expect, an enormous demand for manufactured goods to replenish depleted stocks when prices began to rise, and a decrease in the yield of cotton. Reports at the end of the quarter are highly cheering in facts recorded, and reflect a hopeful spirit. Beyond question the first quarter has shown astonishing improvement in some branches, and retail distribution has generally been good, though not commensurate with speculative wholesale purchases as prices were rising. Hence there is a marked decrease in buying, which some branches of industry begin to feel.

THE FIGHT OFF.

The Texas Legislature Makes Prize Fighting a Felony.

Corbett and Fitzsimmons must find another place than Texas in which to pull off their fight for the proposed championship of the world. The Legislature, Wednesday, by a vote that was practically unanimous in the Senate and only a little less in the House, passed the bill prohibiting prize fighting, and thus accomplished the purpose for which the Governor assembled them in special session. The vote by which the bill was carried furnishes the strongest proof of the sentiment of the State with reference to prize fighting. The only rallying point of the minority was opposition to the emergency clause which carried the bill into immediate effect. Certain of the members honestly regarded this as an injustice to such of the citizens of Dallas as had spent large sums in anticipation of the fight and opposed it for that reason alone. Their arguments were not effective, however, and the vote in the house on the final passage of the bill showed five votes in opposition with 107 in its favor.

In the senate the bill was carried with only one negative vote in the twenty-seven that were cast.

BIG BLAZE IN OHIO.

The Village of Cambridge Visited by Fatal Flames.

Fire which originated in the livery barn of J. W. Davis, at Cambridge, Ohio, caused a loss of $200,000 before it was got under control. The arrival of assistance from Zanesville, Newark and Barnesville prevented the destruction of the entire town. The fire was confined to the business blocks on Wheeling avenue, between Sixth and Seventh streets. A man named Frank Law, employed at Davis' livery barn, was found buried in the burning ruins. His body was literally roasted. He was 25 years of age and single. The principal losses are: Lyndon hotel building, $25,000; Joseph D. Taylor block, $18,000; Memorial hall, $10,000; Carlisle & Crimes, $18,000; G. Schairer, $4,500; J. W. Davis, building and stock, $40,000; H. C. Hornbrook, $2,000; Gillespie & McCulloch, $3,000; Mrs. F. J. Forsythe, $3,000. The other losses range from $2,000 downward. The general offices of the Cleveland & Marietta railroad burned out, but most of the records were saved. The amount of insurance covering losses cannot be ascertained, but it is estimated at less than one-half.

CONFESSED

And Neal Smith Was Riddled By the Mob's Bullets.

A special from Chattanooga, Tenn., says: Neal Smith, the colored convict who criminally assaulted Miss Maggie Henderson, the daughter of Colonel William A. Henderson, of Carpenter, Tenn., after crushing her skull with a club at Cole City, Ga., paid the penalty of his diabolical crime Sunday night with his death. At 7 o'clock a crowd began to gather at the prison stockade. In an hour 250 men armed with guns demanded the negro, and the guards, seeing they were in a hopeless condition, delivered him to the mob. He was dragged with a rope about his neck to the scene of the crime. Here he was made to confess the deed, after which the crowd commenced shooting, riddling the body with bullets. After the affair was over the mob dispersed, quietly leaving the body of the negro in the woods. The crime was one of the most atrocious ever committed in this section. The girl is still unconscious and cannot recover.

VENEZUELAN QUESTION.

The London Papers Comment on the United States Government's Action.

London special: The Westminster Gazette, in an article under the caption, "Turn about is fair play," says: The other day Lord Salisbury sent an ultimatum to China, and now, according to dispatches received from Washington, Ambassador Bayard has been instructed to notify Gread Britain that unless the Venezuelan question is submitted to arbitration within ninety days, the United States government will enforce the Monroe doctrine. It is to be hoped that if settlement of the question can be hurried up, Lord Salisbury will do it, but surely, President Cleveland cannot wish to rush us out of just claims.

The St. James Gazette says: Isn't it awful? But it might be still more awful if we knew exactly what the blessed Monroe doctrine was, or what on earth the United States government has got to do with a quarrel between Great Britain and another independent State.

The Big Fight.

Paris (Tex.) special: The law passed by the Legislature prohibiting prize fighting in Texas has caused the managers of the Corbett-Fitzsimmons contest to look elsewhere for a place to settle the question of the world's championship. The news comes straight that the fight will take place at Roebuck's Lake, a most delightful spot twenty miles north of here in the Choctaw Nation, on the St. Louis and San Francisco railroad. It is four hours run from Dallas, three from Fort Smith, Ark., and forty minutes from this place. There will be no obstacle as the Choctaw Nation has no law against prize fighting. The lake and grounds are leased and controlled by the Roebuck Rowing and Fishing Club of this city, who freely gave the managers of the contest the use of them. People here are jubilant over it.

THREE MEN

Asphyxiated By Gasses in a Well Caused By an Explosion of Dynamite.

A thirty-foot water well on the farm of Claymeyer Wegman, living near Pemberville, Ohio, was shot with dynamite to increase the flow of water. Two hours after the charge of dynamite had been shot off Henry Fahle went down in the well to see what effect the explosion had had. Those at the top of the well waited anxiously for some word from Fahle, but none came. Lewis Wegman then decided to descend into the well and see what was the matter with Fahle. Mr. Wegman in turn was not heard from, and his brother, Charley Wegman, nothing daunted by the experiences of the other two men, descended into the well, and he, too, failed to return or indicate that he was alive.

The workmen then got ropes and tackle and very carefully began to explore the engulfing depths. The three men were found together at the bottom of the well, all dead. They had been asphyxiated by the gasses caused by the explosion of dynamite. Fahle and Charley Wegman were married and Lewis Wegman was single.

Only One Guilty.

The jury in the Indianapolis National Bank case has returned a verdict that Francis Coffin was guilty as charged and that Percival was not guilty. Francis Coffin warmly congratulated his brother upon the verdict. This is the second trial for this offense, the charge in both trials being aiding and abetting President Theo. P. Haughey, of the late Indianapolis National Bank, to wreck that institution. There was a motion for a new trial which will be heard soon. Meanwhile the penalty was not fixed by the court.

Blown Into Atoms.

The other night three boys left Montpelier, Ind., in a drunken condition. After walking a short distance from the city they passed a derrick. They saw three cans near it and supposed they were empty. One of the boys fired his revolver into one of the cans. It contained nitro-glycerine and a terrific explosion followed. The three young men were blown into atoms.

Sad Ending of a Hickory Nut Party.

Stanley Brain and Miss Mabel Old, both 17 years old, were drowned near Snyder's Station, five miles west of Springfield, Ohio. They were with a hickory nut party of five, and just before starting home decided to take a boat ride. They had not rowed long before the boat capsized, and they were drowned before assistance could arrive.

A Fatal Wreck on an Eastern Road.

South bound train No. 1, 657, the fastest freight on the Worcester division of the New York, New Haven & Hartford road, ran through an open switch at Blackstone Junction, R. I., into a turn table pit, wrecking the engine, nine loaded cars and turn table. Three persons were killed and a number injured.

Turned the Wrong Key.

James Ferguson, an employed at the Union Steel Works, Alexandria, Ind., while cleaning out one of the big boilers, accidentally turned a key that allowed the boiler to collapse. He was caught and his head crushed off. His brest was also crushed in, and he was unrecognizable when taken out. Death was instantaneous.

Attacked by Robbers.

Samuel Petty, a farmer living a few miles from Anderson, Ind., was attacked by four robbers. Petty made a desperate fight and shot and killed one of his assailants, after which the others bound Petty with harness straps and forced Mrs. Petty to give up $100. They then fired the house, which was burned to the ground.

Protest Against Cigarettes.

The Lima, Ohio, school board has adopted an order prohibiting the use of tobacco and cigarettes among pupils, many of whom have been stunted mentally and physically by the use of these narcotics. Stringent measures will be resorted to, as the practice has reached alarming proportions.

Turned to Stone.

While engaged in removing members of a family buried at Warren, Ohio, years ago to another cemetery, relatives found that the remains of J. Parsons buried fifty years ago had turned to stone.

Supply Store Burned.

A fire broke out in the Jacksonville supply store at Jacksonville, Ohio, and destroyed it and the adjoining building which compose the block. Loss estimated at $75,000.

Coasted to Death.

Daniel German, a bicyclist of Sherrodsville, Ohio, was fatally injured while coasting down a hill. His right arm was broken in two places besides internal injuries.

CUBA'S CRY IS HEARD

CITIZENS OF CHICAGO PROTEST AGAINST TYRANNY.

Cause of the Oppressed People Warmly Championed—Speeches Made and Resolutions Adopted in Keeping with Declaration of Independence.

Pleas for Self-Government.

The first protest of free-born Americans against Spanish tyranny in Cuba was heard in Chicago Monday night. It was as fervid, as resolute and as defiant as if it had been voiced by men and women who had suffered personally the wrongs that have kept Cuba in a state of ferment for a century. There was no sign of prearrangement in the speeches. They differed widely as to the proper course of this government. But whether the speaker dwelt upon the necessity of conforming to international law, as Mr. Bryan did, or whether, like Mr. Hynes and Mr. Mason, he spoke out squarely for Cuban independence, the undertone was the same. The meetings cried for freedom, says a correspondent, and it was noticeable that no sentiment was received with greater applause than Governor Altgeld's blunt declaration in a telegram to the chairman that Cuba should be annexed to the United States.

The Central Music Hall meeting was the larger of the two. The other, in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association in LaSalle street, was an overflow, but enough people attended it to comfortably fill all the seats. As for the State street meeting, it was one of the most remarkable demonstrations ever seen in this city. In the first place—and that is the most important point—it was American to the core. There are not many Cubans in Chicago. Probably all the exiles of the suffering islands who have found their way to the cigar shops of the town would not fill the parquet circle of Central Music Hall. Most of them were there, leaning forward in their seats to take in every glowing sentence and cheering wildly the red-hot denunciations of their old masters that poured from the stage. Quesada, the secretary of the revolutionary party, was on the floor, and so was Zayas, the propagandist of the cause, who is here trying to secure contributions of arms, ammunition and medicine for the insurgents. The big cheer of the evening went up for an excited Cuban who arose in the gallery while Mr. Hynes was speaking and yelled: "I go over and lick Spain myself alone."

Chicago's Official Stamp.

The other big feature of the meeting was that it was presided over by the Mayor of Chicago, and that the City Council gave it official recognition by attending in a body. If this had happened over in Europe it might have been casus belli.

What brought to Central Music Hall this tremendous crowd that filled the auditorium from the back of the platform to the eyries of the topmost gallery? In the crowd there were not fifty men who had ever been within gunshot of Havana. There were not twenty to whom it makes a dollar's difference whether Cuba bursts her shackles or goes on toiling, footsore under her burdens. There was neither politics nor business in it. Their motive must have been as pure as that which impelled the men who made New England ring against human slavery. It was a great demonstration. From the moment that the gavel of the chairman struck order it was a long roll of applause, shouted applause emphasized with roars that would lend grace to the greatest political meeting. It brought Cuba and the trials and struggles of the Cubans 1,000 miles nearer to Chicago. It lent a new meaning to the familiar lines of the declaration of independence which were in the mouth of every speaker. Liberty and patriotism rang with a different sound to the ears that had only heard them from the mouths of politicians who sought to use them for stepping stones to office.

Every mention of the cruelty of the Spaniards was greeted with groans, every mention of the Monroe doctrine and the duty of the government to enforce it with the wildest cheers. If the responsibility of admitting Cuba to statehood had lain with the meeting and some one had put the question another star would have been added to the flag. At the mere suggestion of Cuba's possible statehood the meeting went into the wildest applause. To the committee that had in charge the drafting of the resolutions the demands on the behalf of the struggling Cubans had at first seemed too strong, too pronounced; but in the light of the enthusiasm which prevailed when they were read they seemed weak and ineffectual. But they were adopted with a roar. Mayor Swift was chosen chairman of the meeting, and addresses were given by the following gentlemen: Rev. Dr. F. W. Gunsaulus, Thomas B. Bryan, William J. Hynes, William E. Mason, the Rev. J. H. Barrows, Bishop Fallows, the Rev. Dr. P. S. Henson, John Mayo Palmer and E. B. Sherman.

NO OPEN SUNDAY AT ATLANTA.

Resolution to That Effect Tabled, It Is Thought Permanently.

The preachers of Atlanta are still fighting the exposition on the question of sale of liquor on the grounds. A meeting of the Methodist Ministers' Association was held, and at that meeting the special committee appointed a week ago reported that it had secured legal advice on the question, and that the lawyers were unanimous in their opinion that the right to sell liquor did not belong to the exposition people or to their concessioners legally. A long discussion as to what the ministers should do in view of their report followed. Some of them were in favor of enjoining the exposition directors from allowing liquor to be sold on the grounds, while others favored bringing the matter to the attention of the grand jury. The matter finally took that course. A resolution was adopted thanking the exposition directors for keeping the grounds closed on Sunday and expressing the hope that they will continue to keep them closed.

At the meeting of the board of exposition directors action was taken which apparently kills for all time the project to open the exposition on Sundays. A resolution providing for Sunday opening was introduced by Director Cabaniss, but after some lively discussion was tabled. The advocates of Sunday opening have not lost hope, but it is pretty safe to say the chances of that resolution remaining tabled are excellent.

HAZING IN A MISSOURI COLLEGE

Student Tucker Terribly Maltreated Upon Initiation to the Sigma Nu.

J. Turner Tucker, a new-comer at the State University at Columbia, Mo., wanted to join the Sigma Nu fraternity, and was initiated the other night. It was a plain case of hazing. First he was bound hand and foot and blindfolded and gagged. Then he was beaten with stuffed clubs for a while and was next put into a coffin for burial. The coffin was carried out and put in a spring wagon, and away the funeral train marched.

Finally the athletic grounds were reached, and he was buried. Then he was taken out and stripped and thrown into a mud hole and then rolled in sand. Then he was kicked and induced by the plausible story of the leader to sing and dance. The hour was close to midnight, and he sang "Won't You Be My Sweetheart?" and kept step as well as he could. Then he was hung up by the arms for a while, and was next taken to a haystack and given several rapid slides. Then he was branded with lighted cigarettes, ordered to dress, and about 2 a. m. was taken home. An investigation has been ordered by the faculty, and it will go hard with the guilty ones.

A NEW BATTERY OPENS FIRE ON SPANISH OPPRESSORS.

HEAVY FROSTS.

Many Portions of the Country Visited—But Little Damage Done.

Dispatches received by the Associated Press indicate that heavy frosts fell Sunday night throughout the greater portion of the country. Little damage was done.

Warsaw, Ill.—The first frost of the season fell, killing all tender vegetation. No damage to corn.

Centralia, Ill.—A light frost, with no damage.

Elkhorn, Wis.—A heavy frost fell. All crops are beyond injury.

Plainfield, Wis.—A very heavy frost fell, killing all garden stuff.

East Tawas, Mich.—A sixteenth inch of ice was formed. A heavy frost fell with great damage to all kinds of vines.

Indianapolis, Ind.—A killing frost fell in many Indiana counties.

Louisville, Ky.—There was a killing frost which did great damage to tobacco and other vegetation in various portions of the State.

Topeka, Kan.—A heavy frost throughout the State. Broom corn seriously damaged.

St. Louis, Mo.—Light frost over the State, with little damage.

Memphis, Tenn.—Frost was found in low-lying localities at various points in West Tennessee, north Mississippi, and Eastern Arkansas. Tender vegetation was bitten, but no serious damage was done to the Irish potato crop, and cotton was not injured to any considerable extent on the uplands.

Duncan, Miss.—A heavy frost in that part of the delta which may cut the cotton crop short by causing immature bolls to open.

Ottumwa, Iowa—The frost the other morning was the heaviest of the season and all vegetation was badly damaged. Ice formed in all parts of the county.

Altoona, Pa.—The first snowstorm of the season fell, accompanied by a cold wave.

Notes of Current Events.

The personal property of Minnesota is $99,553,000, as against $100,726,000 in 1894.

Orian Apade, 18 years old, living near Akron, Ohio, was killed by the explosion of a gun.

The entire family of N. C. Ratte at Akron, Ohio, were poisoned by eating cabbage which had been sprinkled with paris green.

DEATH IN THE CRASH.

AWFUL DISASTER AT A CHURCH CORNER STONE LAYING.

Platform Gives Way and 300 Are Precipitated Into a Pit—Parochial School Is Turned Into a Hospital—Forty Persons Injured.

Many May Die.

A frightful disaster plunged Lorain, Ohio, into mourning Sunday, and what was meant to be an incident of glad rejoicing became in an instant a catastrophe of appalling horror. One child was killed outright, ten persons were fatally injured and between thirty and forty others were seriously hurt by the sinking of a section of temporary platform built on rotten timbers. The accident occurred at the outset of the ceremonious laying of a corner stone for the new St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church, and just after the priests had hushed a crowd of 5,000 people into solemn silence. The list of dead and injured is as follows:

Killed:

Mary Weber, 3-year-old daughter of Mat Weber, of Sheffield.

Fatally injured:

Miss Kate Deidrick, of Sheffield; both legs broken and hurt internally.

Mrs. John Eustin, aged lady, of Lorain; left leg crushed and chest injured.

John Feldkamp, of Lorain; hurt internally.

Katie Griffin, 8 years old, of Lorain; left leg crushed and hurt internally.

Mrs. Michael Kelling, middle aged, of Lorain; injured internally.

Rosa McGee, 3 years old, of Lorain; skull fractured.

Mrs. Mary McGrath, of Lorain; left leg crushed and hurt internally.

Mrs. Margaret Mackert, of Lorain; hurt internally.

Mrs. Cornelius Sullivan, of Lorain; spine injured and left leg crushed.

Mary Sieder, of Lorain, aged lady; chest crushed and hurt internally.

Seriously hurt:

Col. W. I. Brown, leg and arm bruised.

Mrs. William Burgett, of Lorain; hurt internally.

Mrs. M. Bruce, of Hoganville; left ankle broken.

Nellie Dollard, of Lorain; head cut.

John Eustin, of Lorain; back hurt.

Mrs. John Fox, of Sheffield; both legs broken.

Mrs. Mary Latimer, of Carlisle Center; right leg crushed.

Mrs. Mary O'Keefe, of Lorain; hurt internally, and leg will have to be amputated.

William Ryan, of Lorain; right leg broken.

George Theobald, 3 years old; head cut.

Nicholas Wagner, leg bruised.

Platform Was Crowded.

The foundations of the church are extended about ten feet above the bottom of the unfinished basement. It was on these foundation walls that a large platform had been built, on which the ceremonies were to be held. From an early hour in the morning until after noon people had been gathering on this platform, anxious to secure a point of vantage from which the services of the church could be seen and heard. When the reverend fathers took their places on the platform at 1 o'clock fully a thousand people were standing or sitting on it. The great majority of these were women and children. Four thousand others were grouped about the place, all within earshot.

Just as Monsignore Boff, of Cleveland, the chief Roman Catholic dignitary present, raised his hand to bring the audience to quiet, a sound of splitting timbers threw the great crowd into consternation, which became panic when it was seen that a section of the temporary platform was sinking beneath the weight of 300 people huddled together upon it. The crash came of a sudden and every one of the 300, save a dozen or two who scrambled off the edges, was precipitated into the pit ten feet below. The section which gave away was in two wings, and as it sank it formed a veritable death trap for the victims. The pit, with its slanting board walls, resembled an inverted roof of very steep slant, the gable ends being closed up by the stone foundation walls, and into this vortex were heaped men, women and children in one conglomerated, struggling heap, all in frightful, maddened panic. The sound of the crash was followed by a wail from the helpless victims as by an echo, and that again by a great cry from the spectators of the tragedy, who had been stricken into a panic and were well-nigh as helpless as the victims themselves.

The inevitable result of panic followed and doubled the horror, already great enough. Those persons at the top of the mass escaped easily, but when the pit was partly emptied those victims who were still entrapped could not clamber up the steep sides, and they trampled upon each other like so many wild creatures, the strong men getting on top and the weaker women and children being crushed and beaten down beneath the greater weight.

Three thousand people, lost to presence of mind, made a mad rush forward toward the pit, hoping to lend aid to the unfortunates, but as they pressed forward their weight threw at least fifty of those nearest the edge headlong into the pit. For at least fifteen minutes no aid was given, and nothing was done except in the way of making matters worse. Finally ropes and ladders were procured and handed down to the struggling victims. When assistance finally reached them and the rescue was well under way it was found that the dead body of one child lay in the bottom of the basement, and that almost fifty other persons were lying bruised and mangled on the floor.

Church Is Made a Morgue.

The old Catholic church, a few rods distant from the new, was turned into a morgue and hospital, and some of the injured persons were carried into the parochial school next door and there made as comfortable as possible. Twenty physicians were on the scene within twenty minutes, and they were kept busy until sundown caring for the victims' wounds. Several of the injured will die before daybreak.

When the people had carried the dead and wounded into the old church and quiet had to some extent been restored among those who escaped the services of corner stone laying were resumed. The delay occasioned was not more than thirty minutes, and the ceremonies laid down by the Roman Catholic ritual were not altered in any wise, except that they became a shade more solemn and to the devout hearers a trifle more impressive. Father Boff delivered the sermon. It was eloquent and impressive and was tinged with the somber hue of the dark tragedy that introduced it. Reference to the disaster was frequent throughout. The prayers and then the formalities in which Father Boff was assisted by six other priests also partook of the unwonted sadness, yet they were carried through with imperturbable purpose, though the audience was altogether unnerved and unstrung. Following prayers came the laying of the corner stone. When the ceremonies were finished the priests called at the extemporized hospitals and made inquiry concerning the condition of the victims—their parishioners.

Wabash officials and employes at Toledo say there is no immediate danger of a strike on that system.

MUST ARBITRATE OR FIGHT.

Alleged Ultimatum by Olney to England in the Venezuela Affair.

Nothing has been done by our Government with reference to the Venezuela boundary controversy since Secretary Gresham forwarded Minister Bayard a copy of the resolution passed by the late Congress urging Great Britain to submit the disputed question to arbitration. It is said, however, that Secretary Olney has prepared a note for Mr. Bayard to lay before Lord Salisbury that contains a more forcible expression of the views of the United States on this subject than has yet been officially uttered. This dispatch is of a positive and most unequivocal nature. As soon as it shall be placed before the British Government it will raise a question which can be settled only by the retreat of one or the other Government. The stand taken by the United States in this dispatch is one which involves the oldest and most sacred tradition of the Government—the enforcement of the Monroe doctrine.

Secretary Olney's dispatch is in substance a declaration in the most positive language that the United States will never consent to British occupation of the disputed territory in Venezuela unless that nation's right thereto is first determined by arbitration. While this declaration is substantially the same as that which was made some months ago, and to which the British Foreign Office replied with a statement that the English right to a part of the territory in question could be submitted to arbitration, the right to another part of the region in question could not be submitted to such arbitration.

When Great Britain took this ground the question which President Cleveland and his advisers had to decide was whether the United States is bound by the Monroe doctrine and by her dignity to insist that all the territory in dispute should be submitted to arbitration, or whether by conceding England's contention we should virtually abandon the field and leave Venezuela to fight it out alone. Few more serious questions have presented themselves to the American administration within recent years.

The decision of the President and his Cabinet advisers, after careful discussion and painstaking investigation, is that a bold and consistent policy shall be adopted, and this policy has been formulated in the dispatch which Ambassador Bayard will lay before the British Government as soon as he returns from his present journey to Scotland.

The dispatch meets England's rejoinder with a reaffirmation of the principle of original contention expressed in phrases which leave no possibility of doubt as to the meaning and earnestness of the United States. It does more. In polite, but firm and significant words, Secretary Olney declares it to be the belief of the United States that the territorial claims which Great Britain has set up in Venezuela are in the nature of an attempt to seize territory on the American continent to which she has no legal right.

CORN TO BURN.

The Garnering of 1895 Is Certainly a Monster.

The Chicago Tribune thus suggests a novel way of disposing of the surplus corn crop:

"On a 2,500,000,000 bushel crop the West will have corn to burn. According to a Kansas City dispatch a packing house company has already issued orders to its Wichita house to begin the use of corn for fuel so soon as it can be bought for 12 cents a bushel. Last year the unusual and abnormal feature in the grain situation was the feeding of wheat to farm animals. Little attention was paid to it at first, except as an experiment, but in the aggregate it amounted to millions of bushels, and was reflected in reduced stocks in farmers' hands. Burning of corn for fuel is less of a novelty than feeding of wheat to hogs, as it has been general enough on several occasions to attract a great deal of attention. Both are direct results of overproduction. The conditions in wheat which made stock-feeding practicable are all present in corn in an aggravated form to make its use as fuel in many sections feasible. The 1895 crop of corn is practically made, and without doubt it will be a record-breaker. On the basis of present prices corn will be cheaper than coal for fuel during this fall and winter in States west of the Mississippi River. It is said that experiments have shown that a ton of dry corn will go further in producing steam than a ton of coal. The oil in the corn makes it especially adapted for hot fires. It is clean to handle and almost smokeless. A prominent operator on the Board of Trade offered to forfeit $10,000 if he could not furnish the 'Alley L' road with corn for fuel at a less cost than that of the coal supply."

But on the other hand reports from Nebraska, Kansas and Iowa points, where in times of coal famine resort has been made to corn for fuel, state that its use is neither satisfactory nor profitable. The heat is so intense that the iron of furnaces and stoves is soon burned out. Then, too, it is not steady, which renders it impracticable for making steam.

INDIANS AVENGE THEIR DEAD.

Bannocks Kill Three Men Who Have Caused Them Trouble.

J. W. Wilson, a scout and courier for the United States troops stationed in Granite Canon, came into Idaho Falls, Idaho, and reported the killing of Capt. Smith and two companions by Indians, in the lower end of Jackson's Hole, on Thursday morning. Capt. Smith will be remembered as the man who precipitated the Indian fight last July in the Jackson's Hole country. At that time he killed one or two Indians, and was himself shot in the breast, but recovered. The Indians swore vengeance against Smith, and as he was, with his two companions, prospecting along the south fork of the Snake River, at the outlet of Jackson's Hole, he was ambushed and all three were shot and their bodies left on the river bank.

Wilson was scouting in the vicinity at the time, and, with Constable Manning, saw the bodies, and immediately rode to Capt. Collins' command, in Swan Valley, and reported the facts, leaving Manning in Camp Granite to return to Jackson's Hole with the military, who immediately left for the scene of the killing. Wilson rode into Idaho Falls with dispatches. Wilson says there are about sixty Indians in the Hole. He believes that this will settle the matter, and that the Indians, having avenged the death of their braves by killing the man they were after, will return to the reservation. The Indians are Bannocks from the Fort Hall reservation. Troops C and D, Capt. Collins commanding, immediately started into the Hole, and will undoubtedly drive out the Indians, if found.

At Yankton, S. D., the London and Yankton Development Company, representing $750,000 invested in fraudulent school bonds and tax certificates, issued by J. T. M. Pierce, of Yankton and London, has taken possession of Pierce's property, including an unfinished railroad to Norfolk, Neb.

Charles Stewart, ex-member of Congress from Houston district of Texas, died at San Antonio, Texas, after a lingering illness. He was 59 years of age and served five years in Congress, where he was prominent as a member of the River and Harbor Committee.

CHAPTER I.

"Jenny!"

"Yes, Sergeant Lynn."

His fine figure drawn to its full height, as rigidly as though the eyes of the adjutant were upon him, yet apparently straining every nerve to appear unembarrassed and at his ease, Sergeant Lynn was a man with whom any woman might be satisfied as a sweetheart. His features were good, if not refined, and the weakness of his mouth was hidden by a mustache as magnificent as that of any cavalry colonel in the service.

It was only pretty Jane Knox, the sergeant major's daughter, who seemed so impervious to his attractions and made him appear as witless and uncouth as the latest trooper who had joined the awkward squad. Hitherto, success had been so easy to the dashing sergeant. It could only be said of his over-eagerness to please that this time he bade fair to fail. She did not even dislike him, he told himself with angry surprise; it was merely indifference that she felt—indifference aggravating as it was complete.

"Jane, don't be so provoking. You know I mean——"

"That it would be best for me to marry a sergeant. Well, I dare say it would"—thoughtfully—"if—if I could only make up my mind."

"Try—only try, Jane. Love always comes after marriage," he argued, eagerly.

"Why don't you prove it by your own example?" she answered, negligently. "Marry some one you detest, and if——"

"You—you don't detest me!"—blankly.

"Oh, no; but I don't love you, and there's no middle course in marriage, I think."

He was silenced for the time, and contented himself with watching her as she flitted about the room, arranging the bits of holly, with here and there a twig of the white berries intermingled.

Mrs. Knox, Miss Jane's mother, had been the daughter of a veterinary surgeon, and being left almost penniless at her father's death, had become a teacher in the village school. It had been a quiet, little-frequented spot, and until the age of twenty-nine she had not even the suspicion of a love affair to brighten the monotony of her existence. Then the clergyman of their village came into a small fortune, sufficient to allow him to retire from his labors and put a curate in his place.

The man chosen was a bachelor, but that might well have been considered the only point in his favor. He was plain, elderly, and half-starved, as indeed he might well be, considering the miserable stipend he received. But to Jane's mother his charm was that he was a gentleman.

His manners had seemed to her the perfection of courtly breeding, and had he asked her she would have gladly become his wife, in spite of all the petty troubles which were attendant on genteel poverty. But, either because his own heart was not sufficiently interested, or that, from mistaken unselfishness, he hesitated to let her share his lot, he never did; and after three years of alternate hopes and fears on her side, another lover appeared upon the scene, and by his brisk wooing succeeded in winning her for his wife.

"A terrible match for her," people said—she, the educated woman, to bind herself to the rough if dashing hussar, who could offer her only the barest necessaries, and at whose side she might have to encounter endless hardships; but equalized surely by the fact that she was faded and worn, and that he was a man in the prime of life, loving her passionately, oblivious of her vanished youth and indifference to him.

"Hold it a little higher, Jenny darling," whispered the Sergeant, audaciously, and coming close behind her, he attempted to encircle her waist.

But she wrenched herself away, and confronted him crimson with wrath and shame.

"How dare you! How dare you!" she exclaimed, and in her anger she could say no more.

But the momentary madness over, Sergeant Lynn looked as penitent and abashed as she could have wished, or any number of reproaches could have made him.

Falling back to his old position of "attention," he could only murmur shamefacedly:

"I'm very sorry, Jenny, upon my soul, I am!"

"You of all people—you who pretend to like me— to insult me so!"

"It was just because of the liking," answered the Sergeant, with a twinkle in his eye, which fortunately Jane did not detect. "Besides," he added, hastily, "I didn't kiss you."

"I should think not, indeed!" tossing her dainty head.

"And I'll never do it again—until you give me leave."

"And that will be never."

The Sergeant, noting ruefully her compressed lips and flashing eyes, decided that she was sincere in her intention, and that he had lost rather than gained by the boldness of his wooing. He looked so woe-begone that the situation became ridiculous in Jane's eyes, and she hastened to bring back the subject to a more matter-of-fact footing.

"You never told me where you got it all," she observed, nodding vaguely at the evergreens that were the innocent cause of her admirer's first offense.

"But you never asked me," was his prompt reply, only too eager to snatch at the proffered olive branch. "It was quite by chance as it happened. I was up at the Colonel's with some letters when a big hamper arrived—from Simla, I think, he said—and I helped to open it as if I would like a bit—I thought of you directly—for he gave me as much as I could carry, and told me to give it to my sweetheart—and—so I brought it to you."

"Indeed," remarked Jane, frigidly.

"I brought it in a basket for fear any one should ask me for a bit, and I wanted it all for you. I don't suppose there's another in Alipore, besides the Colonel and yourself, that has a piece of real mistletoe or holly."

"Did you say it was for me?"

"I mentioned no names, but I expect he guessed. I don't think there's much mistake about my feelings any way."

Jane remained frowningly silent.

While she was still silent, the outer door was thrown violently open, and Mrs. Knox came in hurriedly and sunk upon a chair.

"Have you heard the news?" she asked, turning a white, excited face first to one and then to the other.

"We have heard nothing," replied the Sergeant.

"What is it, mother?" asked Jane.

"The quartermaster—he is——"

"Not ill, is he? I saw him out this morning," said the Sergeant.

"Not married? There has hardly been time for that," smiled Jane.

"He is dead," was the solemn answer, and when the first shock of their surprise was over, Mrs. Knox began to tell her story.

It had been so sudden, so terribly sudden. He had been at "orderly hour" that morning. Then he had returned home to breakfast, and afterward had gone into a small room he used as an office, and where he never permitted himself to be disturbed except on urgent business. It was the Colonel himself who, wishing to speak to him, had sent in a salam. The terrified bearer came back with the news that his master was dying or dead. And dead he had proved to be. While sitting quietly writing in his chair a sudden attack of heart disease had seized him, and life had been extinct for several hours when at last they found him.

"Don't you see what this means for your father?" Mrs. Knox said, eagerly, when her auditors had both expressed their sympathy and surprise. "He will be quartermaster in his stead. The Colonel said as much just now, when he asked him to take over the work until permanent arrangements could be made. He will be a commissioned officer at last, and we shall mix with gentlefolk; and you, Jane—don't you see what a good thing it will be for you?"

"Miss Jane will marry a gentleman now. She must forget all that I have said," remarked the Sergeant, sadly, looking so handsome and noble as he renounced all his hopes that Jane's heart warmed toward him, and she stretched out her hands impulsively.

But Mrs. Knox rose hastily from her seat, and answered for her daughter.

"Of course she will forget. She is entering into a new life, and will make new friends. You see yourself how impossible it is that there could be anything between you now!"

"Why not?" asked Jane, sharply. "Neither of us has altered; it is only the circumstances that have changed."

"You mean——" began the young fellow eagerly.

"I mean that I should be ashamed to let this make any difference; and—and I will marry you if you like, Sergeant Lynn."

But when the Sergeant, radiant with delight, came forward quickly to take her in his arms, the mother threw herself between the two lovers.

"She is mad; she does not know what she is saying. If you have a spark of manly feeling, Jacob, you will go away at once. Jane, I forbid you to say another word."

Talking still for fear of either of them disobeying, she pushed him from the room, so that he could only turn his head and gaze regretfully at his sweetheart, whom he had so unexpectedly won. She was standing with both hands clasped tightly on her breast, her face white and frightened, as she realized to what she had pledged herself. But her eyes met his bravely, and spoke eloquently of her intended fidelity and truth.

CHAPTER II.

The new year brought many changes to Jane Knox. Her father's appointment to the quartermastership had been ratified from headquarters, and they had immediately taken a bungalow in the officers' lines.

Jane was pretty enough, however, to prosper without any adventitious aid. Though very small, even delicately formed, she was neither thin nor insignificant in appearance. Her figure was slim yet svelte, graceful without effort, and as pliant as a reed; but in her face was her chief charm—the bright, glowing beauty that spoke of such perfect health, without degenerating into anything approaching coarseness. The sun-touched nut-brown hair fell into the softest curls on her low brow; the darker eyelashes shaded two lovely hazel eyes and deepened their dreamy, laughing light.

"If only she would fall in love!" thought the anxious mother, "she would see things in a more reasonable light then; and once she began to compare a gentleman with him, it would be all up with Jacob Lynn."

They had been nearly a month in their house when some regimental sports were announced to take place, and Mrs. Knox determined to take her daughter to see them.

The first step must be made, and Alipore society had had time enough to decide whether they were to be admitted within its sacred precincts or not. She would at least show that she considered herself worthy of the honor. But, boldly as she had looked the question in the face, her courage failed her when they had been on the ground some minutes, and not one had come forward to welcome them on their first appearance.

Formerly they had always remained at the further side of the band-stand, with the other Sergeants' wives, among the soldiers and tradespeople of the station, but now Mrs. Knox placed herself only a little way apart from where the staff and officers of the regiment were seated. Jane was crimson with mortification, and would have given much to find herself safe back in her own home, away from those slighting sidelong glances of the women present, and the bolder, admiring gaze of men.

She had turned her back on both, and strove to appear deeply interested in the polo-pony race that was going on, when presently a gentle, drawling voice sounded in her ear.

"How do you do, Miss Knox? Have you decided which is to be the winner?"

It was Colonel Prinsep, the colonel of her father's regiment, the —th Hussars.

"I was not thinking about the race," she confessed, blushing.

He did not press the subject but stood beside her, making a remark now and then, and listening courteously to the timidly hazarded replies. But when Mrs. Knox joined nervously in the conversation, he found his interest flag, and after a few desultory remarks moved away toward a group of three people, among whom was a young lady, who were standing several yards away.

Her eyes were fixed upon the ponies that were being walked up and down preparatory to a race, but she saw as little of what she looked at as Jane Knox had seen some twenty minutes before. Perhaps it was because all her thoughts were with the "what might have been" that she could not see what actually was. The most casual observer might have guessed she was a woman with a story—a story in which both her companions had played a part.

Nora Dene was not yet twenty-two, but looked older on account of the gravity of her expression, which seldom relaxed into a smile. Her mouth had a little pathetic droop which seemed to compel pity in spite of the pride which would not stoop to ask it. Her eyes were sad with the sadness of those which seldom or never weep, and are the "saddest eyes of all."

Her face lightened when Colonel Prinsep joined them, and she made a movement toward him, which he forstalled by quickening his pace. They were as good friends as it was possible for man and woman to be without protestations and with no thought of anything beyond.

"You are looking tired," he began. "Won't you come over to the seats?"

"Thank you; I think we have a better view from here, and I am interested in this race," she answered, only now beginning to see the ponies as they cantered up and down.

As she spoke one of the men—her husband—came and placed a chair beside her which he had brought over from the tents.

"Why did you not say you were tired, Nora?" he reproached her gently.

"Because I did not feel so—at least, not with standing. There is always a certain amount of fatigue in watching things like this. Don't you think so?" turning to the Colonel.

"I dare say—at least—of course there is. Regimental sports are always an infliction. They are one of the sacrifices we feel obliged to make for the men, and for which we get no thanks." Then, as her husband fell back and resumed conversation with his companion, he added, in a lower voice, "Mrs. Dene, I want to interest you in some one if I can."

"Am I so difficult to interest in anything, that you take such an humble tone?" she asked, looking up at him in some amusement from the low seat of which, in spite of her denial of fatigue, she had availed herself.

"I am distrusting myself rather than you—I don't know whether I ought to ask it, in fact. She seems very quiet and refined, but I should never forgive myself if any unpleasantness came to you through granting my request."

"Are you speaking of the new quartermaster's daughter?"

"The very person—but you must be a witch to have found it out."

"Not a very wonderfully discovery, considering you have been talking to her exclusively for the last half hour."

"Ten minutes, I assure you"—smiling good-humoredly.

"I dare say it seemed no longer," dryly. "She is a very pretty girl."

"Is she? I scarcely noticed. I was sorry to see her and her mother standing all alone, and joined them out of purest pity."

"And you want me to emulate the nobility of your conduct?"

"I should like you to be good to them if you can. Theirs is such an awkward position. You see they cannot associate with their old friends, and gain no new ones in place of those they lose."

"Of course I will be amiable if you wish; but, honestly, don't you think it a mistake—don't you think they will only be uncomfortable out of their proper sphere?"

"It is only the 'first step' that will 'cost' them anything. Women adapt themselves so readily to altered circumstances; and Mrs. Knox is considerably above her present position, I have heard."

She shrugged her shoulders, but did not attempt a verbal contradiction.

"You are not thinking of going home just yet, are you, Gerald?" she asked, turning to her husband.

"Not unless you wish it. I am at your service."

Horses Are Dainty at Dinner.

Did you ever watch a horse grazing? If you never did you have missed one of the prettiest sights nature affords her lovers, says the San Francisco Call. It is something to watch the animal enjoying a good meal of hay, shutting its eyes and burying its head to the ears in the fragrant grasses in the manger, or to note the unerring accuracy with which it picks up a mouthful of grain from the box and rejects, without ever seeming to see, the bit of stone or dirt that has got mixed in with it.

I have known a horse to eat a measure of oats "slick and clean," and leave in the manger the medicated powder that had been mixed with it. Even an elephant's proboscis is not more keenly alive to the presence of a foreign substance in the creature's food than is the long, flexible, sensitive upper lip of the horse, which serves him as unerringly, as faithfully, almost as universally, as a finger does the human being.

His cousin, the rhinoceros, and his brother, the tapir, have this prehensile upper lip even more markedly than he, changes in the manner in which he obtains his food having somewhat modified his use of this organ, but not sufficiently but that we may trace some very interesting reminiscences of his origin therein.

The long, tapering upper lip is a characteristic mark of a well-bred horse. A blunt, square nose is an indication of coarse blood, even when it accompanies an otherwise well formed head.

I have said that a horse grazing is one of the prettiest sights in nature, and I think those who have watched the process will agree with me. Just outside my window, as I write, a pretty mare is feding upon the short, thick alfalfa. The ground is strewn with eucalyptus leaves and twigs and all the wind blown debris of the recent storm. In with the alfalfa burr clover is growing, and a few weeds, but not a stray leaf or twig, not a sprig of clover nor a stalk of any weed finds it way into madam's mouth.

She has just eaten every spear of a tuft of alfalfa, in the midst of which mushroom is growing—and left the mushroom intact. Weeds are bent back, leaves turned over, clover brushed aside and twigs tossed away in the most unconscious manner by the busy upper lip, while all the while the even white teeth are nipping off leaf after leaf of just the pasturage sought for, never by any chance getting a bite of anything else. It is quite wonderful to watch her.

There is no other animal quite so well equipped in the dental line as is the horse. That is to say, of course, for his own particular needs. His dentition is peculiar, and shows clearly the modifying influence of his sojourn with man.

Logwood is the marrow of a peculiar tree in the West Indies. It is shipped in long, thick pieces of firm, heavy, dark red wood. It is split up and moistened by water or acid for use.

THE BIG ELM IN SAVANNA, ILL.

It Is Twenty-three Feet and Nine Inches in Circumference, and Is Supposed to Be Three Hundred and Thirty-five Years Old.

On the banks of the Mississippi in Savanna, Ill., stands an elm tree that is the pride and wonder of Carroll County. It is probably the largest in Illinois, if not in the United States, taking circumference, height and spread of branches into consideration. The famous elm of Boston, which was destroyed in 1876, was twenty-two feet in circumference at the base, while the elm of Savanna is twenty-three feet and nine inches. Its height is eighty feet, and the spread of its branches shades an area of 100 feet in diameter. It was a large tree when the present city of Savanna was laid out in 1828. Indeed, if De Candolle, the Swiss botanist, was correct in placing the age of the elm at 335 years, this hoary giant must have sprouted soon after De Soto explored the Mississippi in 1542. The figure of a man in the trunk view serves a double purpose. It illustrates the size of the tree as compared with the body of a large man, and at the same time shows the past of the nation in the person of one of the oldest pioneers, Pliny Taylor, who has lived under the shadow of the big elm for fifty-five years. To D. L. Bowen, the oldest living pioneer, who came to Savanna in 1836, is due the credit of preserving the big elm in later years. Curiously enough, there is no scar or mark upon this tree to show that it has ever been struck by lightning, although trees all around it have been shivered repeatedly.

The Megatherium Americanum is the name scientists have applied to a gigantic mammal that once flourished in South America. On the flat alluvial plains south of Buenos Ayres, Argentina, the remains of this monster have been found and from them casts of the strange creature have been made. The Megatherium was allied to the sloths and ant eaters, and perhaps to the armadillos. Its bones were more massive than those of the elephant and it was endowed with wonderful strength. Instead of climbing trees for its food as modern sloths do it sat on its huge haunches and tail as on a tripod and grasped a tree in its powerful arms, breaking the trunk. It then devoured the succulent vegetation, after which it repeated its work until its appetite was appeased. The illustration represents a cast of the skeleton.

Grumblers

How full this world is of grumblers. Many of the same people who are scolding this summer, because it is warm, will scold next winter because it is cold. There is no point between zero and the nineties that suits them. Whether the gray clouds yield rain or snow makes no matter—neither is wanted. If skies are clear somebody's cistern needs rain; if the showers descend somebody's feathers are ruined. It would add much to our happiness and detract much from the fatal tendency to grow old if we would strive after contentment and cease worrying over the inevitable. The truly happy are the happy-go-lucky, who take everything as it comes and make the best of it. It rains all that is left to do is to put up our umbrella, if we are so fortunate as to have one, and trudge along. Wet and bedraggled skirts won't hurt us any more than poverty and dirt will, if there is something within too sunshiny for poverty to cloud, too noble for drudgery to debase. The person who spends his life scolding because things don't go to suit him is like the fly on the king's chariot wheel. Things may not be planned exactly for the comfort of the fly, but his protest will never stop the procession. The best tactics for flies and grumblers to pursue is to take what comes along and be glad it is no worse.—Chicago Times-Herald.

NOVEL BICYCLE BUILT FOR TWO.

Only One Must Know How to Ride the New Contrivance.

Bicycle manufacturers seem inclined to introduce some sort of a machine that will take the place of the tandem wheel now in use. The majority appear to favor a wheel on which two riders can ride side by side. Several wheels of this character have been manufactured, but they have been on the bicycle type and not much fancied.

Something new on the bicycle market

THE LATEST BICYCLE BUILT FOR TWO.

is what is called the Companion, a bicycle, as shown in the accompanying cut. It seats two persons, being of the ordinary type of safety with two wheels. At a glance the construction of the wheel would lead to the inference that this bicycle would upset with two people; but, on the contrary, one person can ride it, and, on account of its lightness and admirable outline, it is becoming very popular.

CHAPTER I.

"Jenny!"

"Yes, Sergeant Lynn."

His fine figure drawn to its full height, as rigidly as though the eyes of the adjutant were upon him, yet apparently straining every nerve to appear unembarrassed and at his ease, Sergeant Lynn was a man with whom any woman might be satisfied as a sweetheart. His features were good, if not refined, and the weakness of his mouth was hidden by a mustache as magnificent as that of any cavalry colonel in the service.

It was only pretty Jane Knox, the sergeant major's daughter, who seemed so impervious to his attractions and made him appear as witless and uncouth as the latest trooper who had joined the awkward squad. Hitherto, success had been so easy to the dashing sergeant. It could only be said of his over-eagerness to please that this time he bade fair to fail. She did not even dislike him, he told himself with angry surprise; it was merely indifference that she felt—indifference aggravating as it was complete.

"Jane, don't be so provoking. You know I mean——"

"That it would be best for me to marry a sergeant. Well, I dare say it would"—thoughtfully—"if—if I could only make up my mind."

"Try—only try, Jane. Love always comes after marriage," he argued, eagerly.

"Why don't you prove it by your own example?" she answered, negligently. "Marry some one you detest, and if——"

"You—you don't detest me!"—blankly.

"Oh, no; but I don't love you, and there's no middle course in marriage, I think."

He was silenced for the time, and contented himself with watching her as she flitted about the room, arranging the bits of holly, with here and there a twig of the white berries intermingled.

Mrs. Knox, Miss Jane's mother, had been the daughter of a veterinary surgeon, and being left almost penniless at her father's death, had become a teacher in the village school. It had been a quiet, little-frequented spot, and until the age of twenty-nine she had not even the suspicion of a love affair to brighten the monotony of her existence. Then the clergyman of their village came into a small fortune, sufficient to allow him to retire from his labors and put a curate in his place.

The man chosen was a bachelor, but that might well have been considered the only point in his favor. He was plain, elderly, and half-starved, as indeed he might well be, considering the miserable stipend he received. But to Jane's mother his charm was that he was a gentleman.

His manners had seemed to her the perfection of courtly breeding, and had he asked her she would have gladly become his wife, in spite of all the petty troubles which were attendant on genteel poverty. But, either because his own heart was not sufficiently interested, or that, from mistaken unselfishness, he hesitated to let her share his lot, he never did; and after three years of alternate hopes and fears on her side, another lover appeared upon the scene, and by his brisk wooing succeeded in winning her for his wife.

"A terrible match for her," people said—she, the educated woman, to bind herself to the rough if dashing hussar, who could offer her only the barest necessaries, and at whose side she might have to encounter endless hardships; but equalized surely by the fact that she was faded and worn, and that he was a man in the prime of life, loving her passionately, oblivious of her vanished youth and indifference to him.

"Hold it a little higher, Jenny darling," whispered the Sergeant, audaciously, and coming close behind her, he attempted to encircle her waist.

But she wrenched herself away, and confronted him crimson with wrath and shame.

"How dare you! How dare you!" she exclaimed, and in her anger she could say no more.

But the momentary madness over, Sergeant Lynn looked as penitent and abashed as she could have wished, or any number of reproaches could have made him.

Falling back to his old position of "attention," he could only murmur shamefacedly:

"I'm very sorry, Jenny, upon my soul, I am!"

"You of all people—you who pretend to like me—to insult me so!"

"It was just because of the liking," answered the Sergeant, with a twinkle in his eye, which fortunately Jane did not detect. "Besides," he added, hastily, "I didn't kiss you."

"I should think not, indeed!" tossing her dainty head.

"And I'll never do it again—until you give me leave."

"And that will be never."

The Sergeant, noting ruefully her compressed lips and flashing eyes, decided that she was sincere in her intention, and that he had lost rather than gained by the boldness of his wooing. He looked so woe-begone that the situation became ridiculous in Jane's eyes, and she hastened to bring back the subject to a more matter-of-fact footing.

"You never told me where you got it all," she observed, nodding vaguely at the evergreens that were the innocent cause of her admirer's first offense.

"But you never asked me," was his prompt reply, only too eager to snatch at the proffered olive branch. "It was quite by chance as it happened. I was up at the Colonel's with some letters when a big hamper arrived—from Simla, I think, he said—and I helped to open it as if I would like a bit—I thought of you directly—for he gave me as much as I could carry, and told me to give it to my sweetheart—and—so I brought it to you."

"Indeed," remarked Jane, frigidly.

"I brought it in a basket for fear any one should ask me for a bit, and I wanted it all for you. I don't suppose there's another in Alipore, besides the Colonel and yourself, that has a piece of real mistletoe or holly."

"Did you say it was for me?"

"I mentioned no names, but I expect he guessed. I don't think there's much mistake about my feelings any way."

Jane remained frowningly silent.

While she was still silent, the outer door was thrown violently open, and Mrs. Knox came in hurriedly and sunk upon a chair.

"Have you heard the news?" she asked, turning a white, excited face first to one and then to the other.

"We have heard nothing," replied the Sergeant.

"What is it, mother?" asked Jane.

"The quartermaster—he is——"

"Not ill, is he? I saw him out this morning," said the Sergeant.

"Not married? There has hardly been time for that," smiled Jane.

"He is dead," was the solemn answer, and when the first shock of their surprise was over, Mrs. Knox began to tell her story.

It had been so sudden, so terribly sudden. He had been at "orderly hour" that morning. Then he had returned home to breakfast, and afterward had gone into a small room he used as an office, and where he never permitted himself to be disturbed except on urgent business. It was the Colonel himself who, wishing to speak to him, had sent in a salam. The terrified bearer came back with the news that his master was dying or dead. And dead he had proved to be. While sitting quietly writing in his chair a sudden attack of heart disease had seized him, and life had been extinct for several hours when at last they found him.

"Don't you see what this means for your father?" Mrs. Knox said, eagerly, when her auditors had both expressed their sympathy and surprise. "He will be quartermaster in his stead. The Colonel said as much just now, when he asked him to take over the work until permanent arrangements could be made. He will be a commissioned officer at last, and we shall mix with gentlefolk; and you, Jane—don't you see what a good thing it will be for you?"

"Miss Jane will marry a gentleman now. She must forget all that I have said," remarked the Sergeant, sadly, looking so handsome and noble as he renounced all his hopes that Jane's heart warmed toward him, and she stretched out her hands impulsively.

But Mrs. Knox rose hastily from her seat, and answered for her daughter.

"Of course she will forget. She is entering into a new life, and will make new friends. You see yourself how impossible it is that there could be anything between you now!"

"Why not?" asked Jane, sharply. "Neither of us has altered; it is only the circumstances that have changed."

"You mean——" began the young fellow eagerly.

"I mean that I should be ashamed to let this make any difference; and—and I will marry you if you like, Sergeant Lynn."

But when the Sergeant, radiant with delight, came forward quickly to take her in his arms, the mother threw herself between the two lovers.

"She is mad; she does not know what she is saying. If you have a spark of manly feeling, Jacob, you will go away at once. Jane, I forbid you to say another word."

Talking still for fear of either of them disobeying, she pushed him from the room, so that he could only turn his head and gaze regretfully at his sweetheart, whom he had so unexpectedly won. She was standing with both hands clasped tightly on her breast, her face white and frightened, as she realized to what she had pledged herself. But her eyes met his bravely, and spoke eloquently of her intended fidelity and truth.

CHAPTER II.

The new year brought many changes to Jane Knox. Her father's appointment to the quartermastership had been ratified from headquarters, and they had immediately taken a bungalow in the officers' lines.

Jane was pretty enough, however, to prosper without any adventitious aid. Though very small, even delicately formed, she was neither thin nor insignificant in appearance. Her figure was slim yet svelte, graceful without effort, and as pliant as a reed; but in her face was her chief charm—the bright, glowing beauty that spoke of such perfect health, without degenerating into anything approaching coarseness. The sun-touched nut-brown hair fell into the softest curls on her low brow; the darker eyelashes shaded two lovely hazel eyes and deepened their dreamy, laughing light.

"If only she would fall in love!" thought the anxious mother, "she would see things in a more reasonable light then; and once she began to compare a gentleman with him, it would be all up with Jacob Lynn."

They had been nearly a month in their house when some regimental sports were announced to take place, and Mrs. Knox determined to take her daughter to see them.

The first step must be made, and Alipore society had had time enough to decide whether they were to be admitted within its sacred precincts or not. She would at least show that she considered herself worthy of the honor. But, boldly as she had looked the question in the face, her courage failed her when they had been on the ground some minutes, and not one had come forward to welcome them on their first appearance.

Formerly they had always remained at the further side of the band-stand, with the other Sergeants' wives, among the soldiers and tradespeople of the station, but now Mrs. Knox placed herself only a little way apart from where the staff and officers of the regiment were seated. Jane was crimson with mortification, and would have given much to find herself safe back in her own home, away from those slighting sidelong glances of the women present, and the bolder, admiring gaze of men.

She had turned her back on both, and strove to appear deeply interested in the polo-pony race that was going on, when presently a gentle, drawling voice sounded in her ear.

"How do you do, Miss Knox? Have you decided which is to be the winner?"

It was Colonel Prinsep, the colonel of her father's regiment, the —th Hussars.

"I was not thinking about the race," she confessed, blushing.

He did not press the subject but stood beside her, making a remark now and then, and listening courteously to the timidly hazarded replies. But when Mrs. Knox joined nervously in the conversation, he found his interest flag, and after a few desultory remarks moved away toward a group of three people, among whom was a young lady, who were standing several yards away.

Her eyes were fixed upon the ponies that were being walked up and down preparatory to a race, but she saw as little of what she looked at as Jane Knox had seen some twenty minutes before. Perhaps it was because all her thoughts were with the "what might have been" that she could not see what actually was. The most casual observer might have guessed she was a woman with a story—a story in which both her companions had played a part.

Nora Dene was not yet twenty-two, but looked older on account of the gravity of her expression, which seldom relaxed into a smile. Her mouth had a little pathetic droop which seemed to compel pity in spite of the pride which would not stoop to ask it. Her eyes were sad with the sadness of those which seldom or never weep, and are the "saddest eyes of all."

Her face lightened when Colonel Prinsep joined them, and she made a movement toward him, which he forstalled by quickening his pace. They were as good friends as it was possible for man and woman to be without protestations and with no thought of anything beyond.

"You are looking tired," he began. "Won't you come over to the seats?"

"Thank you; I think we have a better view from here, and I am interested in this race," she answered, only now beginning to see the ponies as they cantered up and down.

As she spoke one of the men—her husband—came and placed a chair beside her which he had brought over from the tents.

"Why did you not say you were tired, Nora?" he reproached her gently.

"Because I did not feel so—at least, not with standing. There is always a certain amount of fatigue in watching things like this. Don't you think so?" turning to the Colonel.

"I dare say—at least—of course there is. Regimental sports are always an infliction. They are one of the sacrifices we feel obliged to make for the men, and for which we get no thanks." Then, as her husband fell back and resumed conversation with his companion, he added, in a lower voice, "Mrs. Dene, I want to interest you in some one if I can."

"Am I so difficult to interest in anything, that you take such an humble tone?" she asked, looking up at him in some amusement from the low seat of which, in spite of her denial of fatigue, she had availed herself.

"I am distrusting myself rather than you—I don't know whether I ought to ask it, in fact. She seems very quiet and refined, but I should never forgive myself if any unpleasantness came to you through granting my request."

"Are you speaking of the new quartermaster's daughter?"

"The very person—but you must be a witch to have found it out."

"Not a very wonderfully discovery, considering you have been talking to her exclusively for the last half hour."

"Ten minutes, I assure you"—smiling good-humoredly.

"I dare say it seemed no longer," dryly. "She is a very pretty girl."

"Is she? I scarcely noticed. I was sorry to see her and her mother standing all alone, and joined them out of purest pity."

"And you want me to emulate the nobility of your conduct?"

"I should like you to be good to them if you can. Theirs is such an awkward position. You see they cannot associate with their old friends, and gain no new ones in place of those they lose."

"Of course I will be amiable if you wish; but, honestly, don't you think it a mistake—don't you think they will only be uncomfortable out of their proper sphere?"

"It is only the 'first step' that will 'cost' them anything. Women adapt themselves so readily to altered circumstances; and Mrs. Knox is considerably above her present position, I have heard."

She shrugged her shoulders, but did not attempt a verbal contradiction.

"You are not thinking of going home just yet, are you, Gerald?" she asked, turning to her husband.

"Not unless you wish it. I am at your service."

Horses Are Dainty at Dinner.

Did you ever watch a horse grazing? If you never did you have missed one of the prettiest sights nature affords her lovers, says the San Francisco Call. It is something to watch the animal enjoying a good meal of hay, shutting its eyes and burying its head to the ears in the fragrant grasses in the manger, or to note the unerring accuracy with which it picks up a mouthful of grain from the box and rejects, without ever seeming to see, the bit of stone or dirt that has got mixed in with it.

I have known a horse to eat a measure of oats "slick and clean," and leave in the manger the medicated powder that had been mixed with it. Even an elephant's proboscis is not more keenly alive to the presence of a foreign substance in the creature's food than is the long, flexible, sensitive upper lip of the horse, which serves him as unerringly, as faithfully, almost as universally, as a finger does the human being.

His cousin, the rhinoceros, and his brother, the tapir, have this prehensile upper lip even more markedly than he, changes in the manner in which he obtains his food having somewhat modified his use of this organ, but not sufficiently but that we may trace some very interesting reminiscences of his origin therein.

The long, tapering upper lip is a characteristic mark of a well-bred horse. A blunt, square nose is an indication of coarse blood, even when it accompanies an otherwise well formed head.

I have said that a horse grazing is one of the prettiest sights in nature, and I think those who have watched the process will agree with me. Just outside my window, as I write, a pretty mare is feding upon the short, thick alfalfa. The ground is strewn with eucalyptus leaves and twigs and all the wind blown debris of the recent storm. In with the alfalfa burr clover is growing, and a few weeds, but not a stray leaf or twig, not a sprig of clover nor a stalk of any weed finds it way into madam's mouth.

She has just eaten every spear of a tuft of alfalfa, in the midst of which mushroom is growing—and left the mushroom intact. Weeds are bent back, leaves turned over, clover brushed aside and twigs tossed away in the most unconscious manner by the busy upper lip, while all the while the even white teeth are nipping off leaf after leaf of just the pasturage sought for, never by any chance getting a bite of anything else. It is quite wonderful to watch her.

There is no other animal quite so well equipped in the dental line as is the horse. That is to say, of course, for his own particular needs. His dentition is peculiar, and shows clearly the modifying influence of his sojourn with man.

Logwood is the marrow of a peculiar tree in the West Indies. It is shipped in long, thick pieces of firm, heavy, dark red wood. It is split up and moistened by water or acid for use.

THE BIG ELM IN SAVANNA, ILL.

It Is Twenty-three Feet and Nine Inches in Circumference, and Is Supposed to Be Three Hundred and Thirty-five Years Old.

On the banks of the Mississippi in Savanna, Ill., stands an elm tree that is the pride and wonder of Carroll County. It is probably the largest in Illinois, if not in the United States, taking circumference, height and spread of branches into consideration. The famous elm of Boston, which was destroyed in 1876, was twenty-two feet in circumference at the base, while the elm of Savanna is twenty-three feet and nine inches. Its height is eighty feet, and the spread of its branches shades an area of 100 feet in diameter. It was a large tree when the present city of Savanna was laid out in 1828. Indeed, if De Candolle, the Swiss botanist, was correct in placing the age of the elm at 335 years, this hoary giant must have sprouted soon after De Soto explored the Mississippi in 1542. The figure of a man in the trunk view serves a double purpose. It illustrates the size of the tree as compared with the body of a large man, and at the same time shows the past of the nation in the person of one of the oldest pioneers, Pliny Taylor, who has lived under the shadow of the big elm for fifty-five years. To D. L. Bowen, the oldest living pioneer, who came to Savanna in 1836, is due the credit of preserving the big elm in later years. Curiously enough, there is no scar or mark upon this tree to show that it has ever been struck by lightning, although trees all around it have been shivered repeatedly.

A GIANT SLOTH.

An Extinct Creature that Once Flourished in South America.

The Megatherium Americanum is the name scientists have applied to a gigantic mammal that once flourished in South America. On the flat alluvial plains south of Buenos Ayres, Argentina, the remains of this monster have been found and from them casts of the strange creature have been made. The Megatherium was allied to the sloths and ant eaters, and perhaps to the armadillos. Its bones were more massive than those of the elephant and it was endowed with wonderful strength. Instead of climbing trees for its food as modern sloths do it sat on its huge haunches and tail as on a tripod and grasped a tree in its powerful arms, breaking the trunk. It then devoured the succulent vegetation, after which it repeated its work until its appetite was appeased. The illustration represents a cast of the skeleton.

Grumblers

How full this world is of grumblers. Many of the same people who are scolding this summer, because it is warm, will scold next winter because it is cold. There is no point between zero and the nineties that suits them. Whether the gray clouds yield rain or snow makes no matter—neither is wanted. If skies are clear somebody's cistern needs rain; if the showers descend somebody's feathers are ruined. It would add much to our happiness and detract much from the fatal tendency to grow old if we would strive after contentment and cease worrying over the inevitable. The truly happy are the happy-go-lucky, who take everything as it comes and make the best of it. If it rains all that is left to do is to put up our umbrella, if we are so fortunate as to have one, and trudge along. Wet feet and bedraggled skirts won't kill one any more than poverty and drudgery will, if there is something within us too sunshiny for poverty to cloud and too noble for drudgery to debase. The person who spends his life scolding because things don't go to suit him is like the fly on the king's chariot wheel. Things may not be planned exactly for the comfort of the fly, but his protest will never stop the procession. The best tactics for flies and grumblers to pursue is to take what comes along and be glad it is no worse.—Chicago Times-Herald.

NOVEL BICYCLE BUILT FOR TWO.

Only One Must Know How to Ride the New Contrivance.

Bicycle manufacturers seem inclined to introduce some sort of a machine that will take the place of the tandem wheel now in use. The majority appear to favor a wheel on which two riders can ride side by side. Several wheels of this character have been manufactured, but they have been on the bicycle type and not much fancied.

Something new on the bicycle market

THE LATEST BICYCLE BUILT FOR TWO.

is what is called the Companion, a bicycle, as shown in the accompanying cut. It seats two persons, being of the ordinary type of safety with two wheels. At a glance the construction of the wheel would lead to the inference that this bicycle would upset with two people; but, on the contrary, one person can ride it, and, on account of its lightness and admirable outline, it is becoming very popular.

Hospitable.

A peculiar epitaph is inscribed on a tombstone in the old churchyard of an Ohio town. General Wayne was at one time in command of the fort mentioned in the epitaph.

Margaret,
Wife of David Gregory,
Died August 12, 1821,
Aged 66 years
Here lies the woman, the first, save one,
That settled on the Miami, above Fort Hamilton;
Her table was spread, and that of the best,
And Anthony Wayne was often her guest.

LAFAYETTE, IND., May 2, 1894.

Lyon Medicine Co., Indianapolis, Ind.:

GENTLEMEN—It is with pleasure that I can conscientiously say a good word for LYON'S SEVEN WONDERS. For more than a year I was troubled with indigestion and stomach disorders. Various remedies which I tried gave me no relief, until one day last summer I was told by a brother drummer of the virtues of LYON'S SEVEN WONDERS. I concluded to try it, and am happy to say one box, costing only one dollar, entirely cured me. To those who suffer as I did, I would strongly advise them to use LYON'S SEVEN WONDERS.

Yours truly,

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, post-office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY,.....OCTOBER 10, 1895.

TOM TAGGART MAYOR.

Thomas Taggart was Tuesday elected Mayor of Indianapolis, by a majority of about 4,000. Two years ago, the republican majority was about 3,000. Tom was once a DeKalb boy. That accounts for it.

WATERLOO FAIR.

A brief visit to-day to the fair grounds shows everything starting out as well as could be, for the cold weather The halls are filling up with displays of various kinds, and the stables and stalls with stock. One of the best things on the ground is the "Old Log Cabin," filled with mementoes of early days. Another thing that will take the eye of all old soldiers, is Dr. Nusbaum's chunk of a pine tree, taken from Snodgrass Hill, on the field of Chickamauga, the point where the old 44th, under Thomas, helped to stop the rebels long enough to get safely back out of danger. The log is full of cannon balls. All should see it.

EYE REMOVED.

Tuesday, Dr. Nusbaum and Dr. Carey went down to St, Joe to assist Dr. Bowman of that place, to remove a diseased eye for James Sechler, who lives north of there. Drs. Bowman and Nusbaum performed the operation, assisted by Dr. Carey, and the result is satisfactory. Some time ago, Mr. Sechler got a gun cap in his eye, and has been troubled with it ever since. Lately the injured eye has been inflamed and began to affect the other eye, and this operation became necessary to save the uninjured one.

Do the Maccabees pay their policies? Yes! Do they do as they promise to do? Yes! Do they take care of their sick? Yes! During the sickness of my husband they proved themselves unfailing friends. They were at his side both night and day, and did all that human hands and hearts could do. When he closed his eyes in slumber of death they stood by my side and comforted me, with words of cheer and hope. They laid him to rest in the beautiful Woodlawn in a christian manner. I wish further to say that my husband had been a member of the Maccabees for 18 months, and had paid about $18 00; and just 8 days from the time of his burial, I received my check for $1,000 from the hands of our Record Keeper. I wish to thank the Knights of the Maccabees not only for their kindness, but for their promptness in the payment of the $1,000. I have nothing but good words for the Maccabees. May the blessing of God rest upon them as they go forth in their labor of love and mercy. Mrs. Clara McClellan

RECENTY we spoke of the petitions that had been distributed for signatures. They were sent out, 100,000 of them, by the Dr. Miles Medical Co. of Elkhart and went to all parts of the United States. They are generally being signed, for the feeling among the people is almost unanimous in condemning the harsh and even cruel manner in which Spainhas generally dealt with her greatest dependency, Cuba. Of course there are many opinions as to the fitness of Cuba's people, to enjoy freedon, for they have been so long oppressed that there is a reasonable doubt on this point. Many of the people are of mixed races, and the great bulk are densely ignorant. Still, it is a question when they will be better fitted, should Spain continue to control the affairs of the Island. For our own part we hope to see the present rebellion succeed, whether Cuba eventually joins the United States or not. But just at present, she will find she must fight her own battles, at least until some new move occurs, by which help from abroad may be secured. An acknowledgement of her belligerent right would not be enough, unless Cuba herself makes a strong and at least partially successful fight before long. There are drawbacks to the acknowledgment of belligerent rights, that must be considered for this would give Spain a general right of search and seizure of all suspected vessels at sea. This would be a serious matter to friendly nations and might do Cuba a serious injury. However, if Cuba could have the right of belligerent accorded her, it would give her rebellion a more solid basis.

BUTLER

Herman Repp, of Glenn, Mich., a nephew of J. A. Campbell, is visiting him and other relatives about Butler.

The writer was an eye witness to the Kendallvile Holocaust and being summoned to another part of the grounds supposed the flames would be easily stayed by the hundreds of men standing by, was surprised beyond expression on returning to see the destruction wrought. The large number present only hindered the few who seemed to keep their heads and hundreds of dollars worth of property that did not seem to be in the slightest danger was destroyed simply because there was no one with sense enough at command to remove it from the tongues of flame.

Among those from abroad attending Mrs. Helwig's funeral were J. P. Jadwin and wife, of Orland; Nathan Crossly and wife, Mrs. Isaac Helwig and John Kimmel and wife, of Helmer; Andrew Cox and wife, of Corunna; and Geo. Helwig and wife, of Edgerton.

Died.

At her home on west North street, Butler, Ind., Oct. 4, 1895, after a continued illness of several years, in the sixty-fifth year of her age, Ann E. Helwig.

Ann Elizabeth Jadwin was born March 3, 1831, in the city of New York, in the part of the city then known as "Up Town" not far from the present site of Fifth Avenue Hotel. Her earliest recollections were of a home in that vicinity with her mother, her father being a sailor spent most of his time in long cruises, of three or four years each on board whalers, or men of war, visiting most of South American,and Mediterranean ports. She removed with her parents to Carroll, Co., Ohio, when but a young girl, remaining there until 1849, the cholera year, when nearly all the lake ports and many inland towns were visited with the plague. She with her parents one brother and three sisters, emigrated to DeKalb Co. Ind., traveling in a one horse wagon, carrying all their household goods over roads that an ox team could scarcely be urged to pass over now. Her father Andrew Jadwin, whom many of our older people knew, as an uncompromising abolitionist and religionist, traded his horse and wagon for forty acres of land, all in timber situated in Troy township, and the present site of the residence of Daniel Kinsely. Here he built a cabin, and commenced the arduous task of clearing a farm, sorry work for one who had spent his life on the ocean Here, on the 10th day of September 1853, she was united in marriage to Peter Helwig, whose home was with his father who then owned the farm adjoining on the north. Mr. Helwig soon after bought forty acres of land in Stafford township in section 5, where he cleared a few acres, erected a cabin, that I believe is yet standing and made a home for himself and wife. Here their four children, one son and three daughters were born. In 1865, he sold this place and bought 80 acres one mile north and half a mile east of Butler, which he improved, and where they lived until about three years ago, when Mrs. Helwig's failing health caused them to remove to their present home in Butler, where the last sad days of her life were spent. She leaves her aged husband, one son and three daughters, one brother John P. Jadwin, of Orland, and one sister Mrs. Jemima Morrill, of Oxford, Kansas, to mourn her departure. Mrs. Helwig was a loving wife and kind mother, laboring for her family as long as her health enabled her to do so, was an excellent neighbor, a true and trusted friend. She has been a member of the Lutheran church almost since the church had an organization in this vicinity and died in full faith of a glorious immortality. Her funeral took place from the Methodist church Sunday Oct, 6 Rev. Dustman of the Lutheran church officiating assisted by Rev. Disbro, of the M. E. church and Rev. Hawkins, formerly of the U. B. church. The large house was filled to overflowing, and her remains were followed to her last resting place in the Big Run cemetery by large concourse of friends and relatives.

Obituary.

John Wesley Jones was born in Ashland Co., Ohio. Aug. 22, 1842, died in Waterloo, Ind., Oct. 6th, 1895, aged 53 years 1 month and 14 days.

At an early age he came to Indiana where he grew to manhood. Early in the War time he enlisted in an Infantry Regiment but owing to hardship and exposure, his health failed him and he was discharged. He returned to his home where he soon recovered, and on the 8th day of March, 1864 he enlisted in Co. 'A' 1st Ind. Heavy Artillery, in which capacity he served until the close of the War.

On the 19th day of April 1864 he married Miss Sarah A. Plumb with whom he lived happily until the end. They had born to them 9 children, seven of whom with the faithfull wife survive to mourn the loss of a kind and indulgent parent, and an attentive, indulgent and industrious husband. Over nineteen of his last years have been spent in the service of the L. S. and M. S. R. R. Co. in the yards and about the yards, as Weigh Master. He had the confidence and esteem of both the Co. and the many patrons of the road.

His death was a shock, lamented and regretted by all who knew him. He was buried under the auspices of the G. A. R. in the Waterloo Cemetery.

FREE MEDICAL BOOKS.

An Illustrated Book on Health, Diseases and Family Medicines,

A recently publish book, packed full of valuable information for the masses, will be sent free for a time by The Pe-ru-na Drug Manufacturing Company of Columbus, Ohio. This book contains numerous physiological and anatomical illustrations, conveying accurate and useful instruction. The book covers the whole list of diseases to which the human family is liable, and gives the treatment for each one. It is written in plain and tobase language, expressly for family use. It contains no reading or illustrations of an objectionable character. The author of the book is Dr. Hartman, whose long and extensive experience has enabled him to speak with authority on all medical subjects. This book should be in every family.

Another book, by the same author, entitled Woman's Hand book of Female Diseases, will be sent for a short time to ladies only. This book can not fail to be of priceless benefit to the afflicted women. It has lead to the cure of thousands of suffering women. Those preferring Dr. Hartman's personal advice should write, giving age, symptoms, and duration of disease. Answer free.

Everybody takes Pe-ru-na for chronic malaria and all forms of nervous prostration and fall biliousness. It is the greatest of tonics and invigorators.

New Machine.

Columbia City reports the invention of a new machine, or new power. The article says:

"There is a thorough and finished mechanic in this city who may yet bring to the front an air engine of small dimensions to be placed on the rear axle of bicycles that will propel the wheel. The design shows an air boiler, plungers and other mechanical appliances (not delicate or numerous) but thoroughly substantial. It will be necessary to start the bicycle by foot power, which will assist the boiler to secure air sufficient enough to start the plunger and other parts, these latter then supplying both air and the wheel goes on at the rider's bidding. Leonard Wolfersperger is the gentleman who has the idea figured out.

Some Truth

Among the stirring addresses at Chickamaugua was that of Gen. O. O Howard who uttered a great truth on the occasion when he said that "everything in our political method, in all parts of the country, is not yet all right. There are ballot stuffings; there are corruptions of office; there is bribery in elections; there is cheating in legislation; there is selfishness in great monopolies, and there are political dangers, but the fundamental institutions remain to us, namely: A church where every man is free to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience; schools adequate to the necessities of a great people, well established and free to every child, and an American home, which in its purity and simplicity cannot be surpassed by those of any other people on the globe."

The Future Horse.

The Inter Ocean, in an editorial on "The Future of the Horse," says "he is all right, and is here to stay. Adolphus will not hire an electric buggy or petroleum propelled phaeton when he takes Angeline out on a moonlight drive. The time will never come when Old Crœsus and his wife will stroll along the boulevard in an electric brougham. The horse is a symbol of wealth. The children will never cry for a kerosene buggy, as they do for a pony and trap. Men will never flock to the English Ascot or the American Harlem to watch and bet on races between electric and vapor propelled sulkies. If mankind were utilitarian only, the end of the horse would not be far off But thank heaven, mankind is not utilitarian only. The greater part of mankind is utilitarian only that it may earn leisure and money wherewith to gratify its emotional nature. And in the gratification of that horses always played, and always will play, an important part."

Court.

Promptly at 8 o'clock this morning the old bell sounded out from the old court house tower, and a half hour later, the bustle in the court room showed that the mill of justice was once more in active operation. Henry Wolf takes charge of the grand jury again, and Charley Crew is court room bailiff. Both have had experience. The grand jury were all in their places before ten o'clock and Judge Penfield gave them the usual instructions, much of which is not only right but very valuable and should be observed to the letter. The grand jury by name is made up with J. J. VanAuken for foreman, the others being George Quince, D. C. Marvin, John Stearns, Edward Kraft and Samuel Morr. We presume that Mr. VanAuken was put in place of John Harris, the Junction Merchant, who probably could not leave his business. It is made up of good men. The train from the north brought down the attorneys from Waterloo and Angola including Prosecutor Butler, Mr. Roby, C M. Phillips, W. H. Less, J. F. Shuman and others. Of our own attorneys, all were on hand including J. F. and J. H. Rose, Judge McClellan, E. D. Hartman, D. F. Husselman, D. A. Garwood, P. D. West, C. E. Emanuel, F. L. Welsheimer, J. E. Pomeroy, D. Link. From Butler, we noticed C. J. Coats. J. M. Barrett of Ft. Wayne was here a few minutes, but took the next train home Business on settlements of estates, and matters connected with them. This line of work is generally taken up early, and there seems to be a good deal more of this now, than there is of regular litigation.

Obituary

Caroline (Ferrer) Kruse, wife of William Kruse, was born in Sharpzow, Mecklenburg Schwerin, Germany, Dec. 27, 1843, and died at her home in Auburn Oct. 1, 1895, aged 51 years, 9 months and 5 days. She was joined in marriage to William Kruse in the year 1867. To this union were born 15 children, 5 girls and 10 boys, nine of whom survive her. One year after the marriage, she accompanied her husband to this country; they moved to Sedan Ind, where they have lived until last May when they moved to Auburn, on account of his work being there. A number of years ago she was converted in the German Methodist church, and afterwards united with the Lutheran church at Sedan of which she was a member. She was deprived of church privileges the last few years on account of her affliction. She was a great sufferer, but bore it all patiently; she clung to her Saviour until he said, it is enough, come up higher. On the evening before her death, she commemorated the suffering and death of her master, by partaking of the consecrated emblem, (the bread and wine.) She said to me that every thing was all well, and was ready to meet her Lord. She leaves to mourn her departure a husband, 9 children, and so far as is known, her parents, 2 sisters and 4 brothers who still live in Germany and many friends besides. The funeral was held at the Lutheran church Sedan Rev. J. D. Brosy officiating. Interment at Cedar Lake cemetery.

Is It Fate?

Did you ever stop and think how our lives are affected by some seemingly trifling circumstances? It is amusing to think what might have occurred but for some more or less trifling circumstance If the nose of Cleopatra had been shorter the whole face of the earth would have been different. It is said that a glass of wine too much changed the course of French history; many persons who have carelessly picked up a scrap of literature on Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer have been cured of what they considered an incurable disease by its use C. S. Chambers, Atlanta, Ill, was a sufferer from nervous prostration. A friend, who had knowledge of Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer, gave him a small sample. Its use stirred up new hope in his mind; he used two full sized bottles and was cured—fate directed this wonderful medicine to his notice. Your fate may be urging your attention to the same remedy. If you are troubled with nervous prostration, spasms, fits, sleeplessness, mental depression, exhausted vitality, despondency, sexual and general debility. For sale by F. E Davenport. 40 44

The steel ceiling is now on the opera house. In a few days the scaffolding will be removed and then we can get a better idea of what a magnificent building it will be when completed. No town in the state can boast of having so fine an opera house. Many cities have not near so nice.

Telephones are bound to come cheaper. At Logansport, the Central Union Telephone Co., in order to head off the Mutual Co., has put down prices so that it only costs a business house $12 a year, and residences only $9. When companies can come down like that, they will get more business And it only goes to show the size of the profits they must have made before prices dropped.

Butler Record:—At the meeting of the Butler Co., last Monday and Tuesday, it was decided to build 3000 wheel next year and to arrange to give the factory a possible capacity of 3500. It was also decided to make no reduction in prices but to materially increase the quality of the wheel. A. W. Griffith was promoted to the position of General Manager. The Company will probably put two two traveling salesmen on the road about the first of December.

Announcements have been received of the marriage, Oct. 2, of T. R. Marshall of Columbia City to Miss Lois Kimsey, daughter of County Clerk W. E Kimsey at Angola. The groom is a well known and brilliant attorney and they will be "at home" in Columbia City after Oct. 15. The COURIER, as an old-time friend, sends the best wishes.

The Fayette Normal University gives you your choice of two excellent systems of short hand; the Benn Pitman or the New Rapid. One, the best of the old systems and the other, the best of the new. We do not turn out second-rate stenographers for the business world has no need for them. Merit a good position and you will get it.

As Nelson Cramar was coming into town last evening, his horse stepped on a nail, running it into its hoof. It became so lame, he could hardly get to town. But after arriving here, he found also a gravel in the hoof, and having removed this, the nail came out, and the horse went back all right.

The Y. P. S. C. E. of the Lutheran church enjoyed a very pleasent time at the home of Rev. and Mrs. Trover on North Jackson St., last evening. The entertainment consisted of singing, and speaking and instrumental music, after which light refreshments were served; every one went home feeling benefited. Our Endeavors have entered upon their work with renewed and enlivened interested. We hope that many more such pleasant evenings may be ours to enjoy.

Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Snyder started last evening over the Wabash, for St. Louis, where they will spend a few days at the famous St. Louis Exposition.

It's just as easy to try One Minute Cough Cure as anything else. It's easier to cure a severe cough or cold with it. Let your next purchase for a cough be One Minute Cure. Better medicine; better results; better try it.

Mrs. Dr. Siver of Ft. Wayne goes this week to Detroit, where she takes lessons in painting. She has a decided taste in this line and is already an accomplished artist.

While at the Pioneer Hardware store this morning a COURIER representative's attention was called to the fine line of heating stoves they carry. They have them in all styles and prices.

Dr. Chas. E. Miller, who pays special attention to adjusting lenses to the eye, will again be at Yeebera's jewelry store, Saturday Oct, 19th, those needing glasses should avail themselves of this opportunity.

John Lochner and Al. Bishop reached home to day noon, coming in from Avilla. They had a good time fishing in the lakes about Petosky and came home with faces clothed in a richly tanned hide. They brought home about seventy-five pounds of the finny tribe,

There was a strange funeral at Gravesend, N. Y., last week. The services were by a phonograph. The obituary, the singing, and the funeral discourse were all read off by the machine. Now if it could only die for us, how handy things would be!

Dr. Siver and wife came up from Ft Wayne Saturday evening, making the trip on their wheels. They left Fort Wayne at 5.30 and took supper with Judge McClellan's family. The distance as shown by their cyclometers was exactly 22¼ miles.

J. E. Dermott, of Concord, was here Saturday. He confirms the reports that the dry season has been hard on that section. Besides the injury to crops during the summer, it is now hard on the newly sown wheat, so that their seeding is up to this date almost a failure. It is evident that they did not have the late rains that helped the farmers near Auburn.

Horace Shoemaker was at Goshen Tuesday to attend the reunion of his old regiment, the 129th. They had a nice time, 188 of the men of the old regiment being present, besides many other old veterans. He comes back very much in love with Goshen, which all admit is one of the cleanest and nicest cities in the state. He met there, Mr. Miller who used to live here, as well as several other former Auburn people, and all are reported as doing well.

Capt. Otto has returned from attending the reunion of the Eleventh Indiana Battery at Ft. Wayne Wednesday. They had a good time of course, and what makes him especially happy and proud is the lovely little field piece, his comrades presented him. It is of gold and looks as natural as life and the fact that those who served under him are the givers, will make the little jewel one of his most dearly prized treasures.

THE STEUBEN REPUBLICAN quotes an interview with Congressman Leighty in which he admits a strong preference for Harrison as the next candidate for president. While he overstates Harrison's ability or popularity, he is certainly right in claiming him to be the safest and most acceptable and conservative man the republicans have been putting forward lately. McKinley probably would please the rank and file of the party, best, but his extreme tariff views will never again be accepted by a congress of the United States.

Yesterday afternoon as one of the COURIER force was wending his way down one of Jackson township's by-roads on his way to Sunday school, as all COURIER people do, he was startled by a rush in the leaves of a tree near by; and glancing upward he was still more startled. It wasn't a squirrel—no, not by any means. There, perched on the uppermost bough of that hickory tree, with a large club in one hand and holding to the tree with the other, was George Bishop. We don't know what he was doing up there, but he was using that club in a very careless manner over the limbs, while on the ground below, stood Ollie Clay, with a bag, as if ready to catch George on his downward flight.

The Angola Republican claims to congratulate the COURIER for saying we ought to "patronize home industries," for, he says that by this advice, we admit the correctness of the republican kind of protection. But that is just where so many people are mistaken. It is good democratic doctrine for the people to patronize home institutions, but neither good democratic doctrine, nor wise business doctrine to claim that government should interfere in private business, for the only result in such a case is, that one interest is built up at the expense of another. But every industry should be made to support itself without government aid. To enable it to do this the people must patronize it And this is all the protection any industry needs on ought to have. Our industries would be better off to-day, would be stronger, more self-supporting and less liable to financial disaster, than where it has been pampered and therefore weakened, by government aid.

Foot ball is getting quite interesting in Auburn. A good game was played Saturday.

The Butler Record has quite a nice account of the recent meeting of Editors at Toledo.

Mrs. H. A. Potter of Butler was the guest of J. E Rose and family over Sunday. She will be better known as Miss Letitia Coats.

Dr. Fitch has the largest potatoes yet. He has eight that weighs seventeen pounds. They were raised on his farm south of town.

The healing properties of De Witt's Witch Hazel Salve are well known. It cures eczema, skin skin affections and is simply a perfect remedy for piles.

Rev. J. D. Brosy went to Elkhart today to attend the Lutheran Synod. Mrs. Brosy is visiting her people near Montpelier, Ohio.

Hamilton Advocate:—Rev. Brosy, who resides at the capital of DeKalb county ties more knots than any other minister in the county. Keep along with the good work.

A large number of the "New Process" Oil Heaters were sold last fall. They give the very best satisfaction. See them at the Pioneer Hardware Co's store.

John Keeran and Joseph Link are home again, having remained at Wolf Lake as long as they expected to. They are not certain as to the next stopping place,

Stomach and Bowel Complaints are best relieved by the timely use of De-Witt's Colic & Cholera Cure. Insist on having this preparation. Don't take any other.

The Angola Magnet has been sending out questions to its readers asking their choice for president. These answers at last reports stood: 1st choice—McKinley 72, Harrison 55, scattering 7, 2d choice—McKinley 48, Harrison 29, Reed 28, Allison 10, scattering 12. Total, 134

We see by the Goshen Times that F. V. B. Minnich has sold out his extensive business and will probably retire from active pursuits. His brother-in-law, J. W. Miller, has purchased the furniture stock. A business man of Pittsburg, named Allen, buys the hardware store. Mr. Minnich was at one time, many years ago, a resident of Waterloo.

This office is again bombarded with offers to "club" or for us to buy a variety of premiums to give subscribers so as to help "boom our circulation." If we had believed all these fellows say, and had acted on it, and the results they have claimed had materialized, the Old Reliable COURIER would now be sending out about a train load of copies, all to "paid up subscribers."

No people suffer so much from physical disabilities as those whose business requires little or no muscular exertion. The lack of exercise causes the liver to become sluggish and the result is constant Constipation, Indigestion, Biliousness and Sick Headache. To prevent this take Simmons Liver Regulator; it keeps the liver active and makes one's condition as comfortable as those who have much exercise.

The C. L. S. C. began this new year, with a reception last Friday evening, at the home of Mrs Virgil DeWitt on South Main. Each member had the right to invite her husband and two other guests, and there were present, about sixty in all, for no one turns a cold shoulder to an invitation from either of Auburn's Clubs. There was a musical program, charades, and other literary exercises. And then came a light refreshment, such as the ladies have acquired an enviable skill in providing and serving.

Cures Croup.

Every mother should know that croup can be prevented. The first symptom of true croup is hoarseness. This is followed by a peculiar rough cough. If Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is given freely as soon as the child becomes hoarse or even after the cough has developed it will prevent the attack. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord. 40-44

The U. S. Gov't Reports show Royal Baking Powder superior to all others.

THE KING
REGULATOR

Reader, did you ever take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR, the "KING OF LIVER MEDICINES?" Everybody needs take a liver remedy. It is a sluggish or diseased liver that impairs digestion and causes constipation, when the waste that should be carried off remains in the body and poisons the whole system. That dull, heavy feeling is due to a torpid liver. Biliousness, Headache, Malaria and Indigestion are all liver diseases. Keep the liver active by an occasional dose of Simmons Liver Regulator and you'll get rid of these troubles, and give tone to the whole system. For a laxative Simmons Liver Regulator is BETTER THAN PILLS. It does not gripe, nor weaken, but greatly refreshes and strengthens.

Every package has the Red Z stamp on the wrapper. J. H. Zeilin & Co., Philadelphia.

About the only law known to Americans that the courts cannot get away with is lynch law.

The race between corn and coal for the honor of being the cheaper material for fuel is interesting this year.

"They imprison dealers in adulterated milk in New York," says the Boston Globe. Indeed! Not deep enough to drown them, we suppose?

It is said that the Bannock Indians refuse to be photographed. This certainly indicates that they are intelligent and kindly disposed toward all mankind.

The Buffalo Times proudly says: "South Buffalo has a new smell." We don't know what it is, but we are willing to wager that it can be duplicated by the Chicago river.

American politicians could discuss American politics at home, to be sure, but they seem to think it much nicer to go over to Europe and let somebody pay cable tolls on their opinions.

The news that Emperor William is sketching a picture is interesting. But there is no guaranty that the picture will be a good one. A man is not an artist simply because he draws well as a three-ring circus.

Japan has asked China to release the prisoners captured during the recent war, and China's characteristic reply is that only two can be found. Japan will hardly be surprised, for the cruelty of cowards is proverbial.

A New York medical expert says that "insanity is simply the result of imagination getting the better of judgment." If that definition is true, the whole world is merely a gigantic insane asylum. Perhaps we have locked up the wrong lunatics.

It is now estimated that it will cost $115,000,000 to build the Nicaragua canal. That is to say, the expenditure of that amount will take the enterprise to a point where it will not do to give it up, and necessary additional sums will have to be forthcoming.

The report that Russia proposes to act as a mediator between England and France and settle all their disputes by dividing up Turkey between them may be taken as a convincing proof that there is a silly season in politics over there as well as over here.

Ducks' eggs are shipped pretty ripe from Swatow, in China, to Bangkok and Singapore. They are put in shallow baskets in layers two or three deep, wrapped up in soft paper, and the climate is so hot that they are hatched before they reach their destination.

A French physician prescribes rocking chairs for people with weak stomachs. The oscillation, he says, has a good effect on the gastro-intestinal peristalsis—provided, of course, the unfortunate person happens to have Latin of that sort concealed about his person.

According to the latest reports of the new acetylene gas, a ton of the raw material makes 11,000 cubic feet at a cost of $20, and five cubic feet per hour gives as much light as 240 candles. If this estimate is correct it is evident the old-fashioned gas must go to the cook stove, if it does not have to go out altogether.

The carelessness of some mothers in the education of their daughters is shown by the fact that a Chicago woman recently sent her daughter to the Iowa Reform School under the impression that it was a State seminary for girls. The girl has since been "pardoned" and set free, but the ignorance of the mother can hardly be pardoned.

There is a fine sixteenth century ring in that threat of the Kaiser to use the army to supress the socialists. It is strange that a man of the Kaiser's good sense should take such pains to put himself in the hands of his enemies. This yawp will create tens of thousands of votes in Germany for the socialists. Outside of Russia, government on the lines laid down by the Tudors and the early Bourbons has been obsolete for more than a hundred years.

A gentleman from Birmingham tells (in the Atlanta Constitution) of a very effective way in which the anti-bloomer enthusiasts of that city checked and forever killed the growth of the craze in that-up-to-date city. So far, it seems, none but young girls have appeared publicly in bloomers, but it became whispered around that some of the young women were having them constructed. Thereupon the anti-bloomerites secured the services of an enormous negress, whom they dressed in a grotesque bloomer costume, consisting of a red waist, blue trousers, with a broad stripe down the sides, and bright yellow hose. The ridiculous figure had been made to parade the streets on a bicycle for several days, perspiring at every pore. She has served, it is said, to forever kill the bloomer craze in the Magic City.

A most interesting suit, in which a discontented husband seeks separation from four wives and a number of children, has been filed in an Oklahoma court. The plaintiff is a Cheyenne Indian whom civilization has brought up from the plug hat, calico shirt stage of darkness into the fullest privileges of aboriginal dignity before the law. Yellow Bonnet is the name of this disaffected son of nature who now finds his tepee too crowded. Under tribal concessions made to him he contracted the marrying habit, and now under the law of the territory he seeks surcease from a job lot of mothers-in-law. Mr. Bonnet has been eating too much government beef. He is feeling his oats. When a follower of the Indian agency commissariat fails to harmonize with the conditions which have so long made that commissariat necessary he needs dieting. Give him less beef and more of that great social problem of making ends meet. Yellow Bonnet should be suppressed. If he wants justice of the courts by all means let him have it. Arrest him for bigamy on three counts and put him through the divorce mill by way of the annulling power of a term in the penitentiary. Imagine a white citizen of the country asking for divorce from four wives at the same time! He'd get two years apiece, anyhow.

The report that some seven Chinese have been executed on account of the Ku Cheng massacre of missionaries may be held to satisfy justice if the seven include the instigator of the massacre and his chief assistants. But the fact that seven are executed for the crime does not necessarily imply in China that the real criminals have suffered. The ingenious orientals have a method of substitution which is convenient for the officials. They snatch up any poor outcast they find without friends and execute him in the place of the rich or influential criminal who can afford to pay for such service. Miserable wretches not infrequently volunteer in consideration of money to be paid to surviving relatives to undergo sentences, and the custom of the country permits the substitution.

It is evident that Lord Dunraven, in claiming to be "a sportsman," is not sustained by his acts. In the last race he crossed the line at the start, as he said, because he was "a sportsman," and that the start of both yachts was necessary to give the Defender a right to the cup as the winner of the race. In the yacht race, as in a horse race, two or more must start in order to make up a case of competition for the purse or prize. Lord Dunraven made the start, sufficiently to fill the technical requirements of the case, and then sailed back into the harbor. This was spurious magnanimity. It was not sportsmanship. It was a fraud of bad temper and John Bull sulleness caused by past defeat and the certainty of future defeat. In fact, Lord Dunraven admitted that it was no use to sail the race, as he had an inferior boat. This fact was made patent by the offers to Dunraven to provide a new cup for another race, to put up a purse of from $2,000 to $20,000 in money, and the tender of other wagers if he would race his yacht against the Defender, anywhere off the American coast from Sandy Hook to Marblehead. This would give him a stretch of 500 miles of ocean, without interference or the possibility of an adverse "fluke," on which his sloop could do its best to outsail or outmaneuver the consummate product of Yankee naval architecture and seamanship. He refused this offer.

An American named Spalding, who has been given by the Hawaiian Government a franchise to lay an ocean cable from Honolulu to San Francisco and who has been promised a subsidy of $40,000 a year, has just visited Washington to notify the authorities that when Congress meets it will be asked to grant a charter to a company of American capitalists and to "grant sufficient assistance" to make it feasible to construct and maintain this submarine cable. The promoter hopes the government will grant a yearly subsidy, which, in connection with that granted by Hawaii, will enable this company of capitalists to raise the money—about four million dollars—which will be needed to lay the cable. This is a proposition Congress should not entertain. If it were necessary for the United States to be in telegraphic communication with Hawaii it would be cheaper to sell 3 per cent. bonds, raise four million dollars, and lay the cable than to pay this company the subsidy of two or three hundred thousand dollars a year it is anxious to get. For the interest on the bonds would be only $120,000 a year. But there is no urgent demand for such a line, commercially or politically. The hundred thousand inhabitants of the islands, mostly natives, Japanese, and Chinese, do not need to be in close telegraphic communication with the rest of the world. The great industry of Hawaii is sugar-raising. The fluctuations in the price of that article are not as great or as frequent as those of stocks in Wall street. The producers can get along very well without a cable. Even if the islands had been annexed, and were an integral part of the United States, one would not be needed imperatively. There is not a hundredth part of enough business to support a cable, with its heavy charges. There would not be enough to support a land line of that distance. There is no reason why the government should come to the assistance of promoting speculators so that they can make money out of a scheme which is commercially unprofitable. There would be some sense in making Hawaii the halfway house of a cable linking our west coast with Japan, China, and Australia. Such a line would do a good deal of business. But to lay one to Hawaii for the accommodation of two thousand Americans and a few thousand Germans, Portuguese, and English, who would make but little use of it, and then make the United States pay for furnishing those facilities, would be a profligate waste of money.

Too Much for Electricians.

North Adams, Mass., continues to be puzzled over a queer crankism of electricity in its vicinity. Although when the great four and one-half mile Hoosac tunnel was built no ores, magnetic or otherwise, were encountered, there was general expectation that rich ore pockets would be found; for a yet unexplained reason not an electrician has been discovered who can send a telegraphic message from portal to portal of that tunnel, be such wire run inside of an ocean cable through the huge cavern or out of it. Therefore such messages have to be sent on wires strung on poles over the top of the mountain, fully nine miles, and that is the way ingoing and outcoming passenger and freight trains are heralded to the keepers of the two tunnel approaches.

Tattooing, which Lombroso and his school assert is a sure mark of delinquents, is spreading rapidly in London society. A member of Parliament recently visited a tattooer with his wife and five children and had the whole family marked with their name and address in case of accidents.

HISTORY OF A PARTY.

THE G. O. P. RECORD IS ONE OF POLITICAL CRIME.

Period Cannot Be Far Distant When It Will Be Driven Out of Power and Out of Existence—No More Tariff Tinkering.

Story of Its Shame.

Neither in this country nor in any country where the semblance of free government exists has any other political party retained power as long as the Republican party has done with such an utter unfitness for the possession of power and with such a record of abominable abuses in its exercise. It is a marvel in the history of politics.

To go but little more than twenty years backward brings us to the Credit Mobilier corruptions, with which the names of a score of the most distinguished Republican leaders were connected. Two Republican vice-presidents, Wilson and Colfax, were exposed as partners in the fraud. Garfield was one of its beneficiaries and the Republicans afterward made him President. Blaine escaped the Credit Mobilier scandal, but was involved much deeper in a similar scandal, of which the Mulligan letters preserved the facts. The "trusted leaders" implicated in this rascality committed as great crimes in falsehood and perjury to avert condemnation as they committed in accepting the bribes.

The back pay corruption of about the same period was a flagrant and inexcusable use of legislative power. The Republican members of Congress increased their pay and made the increase retroactive, by which each man voted into his own pocket thousands of dollars more than the salary at the time of his election. This was an unexampled fraud. Acts of Congress had been repeatedly passed before that time increasing congressional pay. But no previous act of the kind authorized back pay—a rascally grab of money after the term of service for smaller pay had expired.

The defalcations of Republican officeholders for thirty years form an appalling record. In 1875 lists of shortages, embezzlements and thefts in the internal revenue service alone were published aggregating $8,000,000. The bank frauds of a few years ago in New York, Philadelphia and Boston, caused by losses through derelict United States officers, are recent events in the chapters of crime. Frauds in the public land department, corrupt railroad grants and subsidy legislation of various kinds have depleted the treasury and have given to corporations more than an empire of the public domain which should have been reserved for the homes of the people.

The rascalities of the Republican carpet-bag governments at the South were without measure. The devastation which they caused was greater in extent than that of the war. The desolation of the cities and fields, of commerce and industry by the war was a less calamity than that of carpet-bag and scalawag rule for ten years.

Republican tariff legislation was a mere system of robbery. It was larceny from the many to enrich the few. It aggrandized individuals while impoverishing communities. It was brigandage in all but name and the protection of law.

The disfranchisement of vast numbers of voters through gerrymander acts in the various States is a Republican crime of great magnitude. No fraud at the ballot box is as great as a law which enables a small number of Republican voters in one congressional or legislative district to elect a representative while a far greater number of Democrats in another district are deprived of just representation.

This catalogue of political crimes—of crimes of maladministration and crimes in office—might be indefinitely extended. But it would be incomplete without a reference to the instances of scandal and corruption in the local Republican administration. From the murder of inmates in the county insane asylum to the fraud on the civil service involved in the disfranchisement of veteran soldiers for employment and from the prostitution of the police force in political uses to the investment of county and city money for private gain there is no species of misgovernment and public immorality of which the Republican machine administration in the city and county is not guilty.

It is a monumental wonder that a party with this record—and much more that is as bad or worse—is able to command, year after year, a majority of the votes in many of the great States and often in the nation.

It is certain that a reckoning will come at some time. Two national defeats within ten years and defeat in many States have already resulted from popular effort. The period cannot be far away when the Republican party will be driven permanently out of power and out of existence.—Chicago Chronicle.

McKinley as a Disturber.

The dissatisfaction shown by Ohio Republicans with the opening speeches made by McKinley in the State campaign is not surprising. They are anxious to succeed, and it is patent enough that for McKinley the campaign means an opportunity to help his presidential prospects regardless of the effect on the Republican party.

The McKinley faction is composed of a comparatively small part of the Republican party in Ohio. Ohio sheep-growers with capital enough to own ranches in Texas sympathize with his objections to the prosperity of the woolen industry on a basis of free raw material, and no doubt there are others who share his extreme views, but there are not enough of them to count for much in the politics of the State.

The element which McKinley cannot control is that powerful conservative wing of the party represented by Senator Sherman in the guarded but unmistakable protest he made against McKinleyism in the Senate at a time when a few favored campaign contributors were forcing the bill on the country.

The conservative element which in Ohio and elsewhere gives the Republican party its vitality is opposed to McKinleyism at any time, and more especially at the present time when the business interests of the country demand the suppression of agitators, fanatics and demagogues whose recklessness threatens to prevent the return of prosperity and to keep the country in the condition it was prior to the repeal of the McKinley law.

It is safe to say that by attempting to make himself an issue in Ohio politics McKinley is not promoting his presidential prospects. Republicans with the business interests of the country at heart are earnestly in favor of keeping him in the background as much as possible.—New York World.

Trying to Fool the Farmers.

The high-tariff press is engaged in an attempt to coax the farmers back to the doctrines of high taxation and monopoly prices for manufactured goods, and points to the reduction in duties in farm produce as a reason for the restoration of McKinleyism. To make a case for protection the Republicans are claiming that under the Wilson tariff a flood of foreign farm products is taking away the markets of our farmers, and that these importations are much greater than under the tariff of 1890.

A comparison of the imports of farm products during the first year of the McKinley tariff, and the first year of the Wilson law, shows that there is not the slightest basis for the claim of the Republicans. The official statement for this fiscal year 1891, during which the McKinley tariff was in force for nine months, gives the total value of animals imported as $4,945,365. For the year 1895, in which the Wilson tariff was in operation for ten months, the value of imported animals was but $2,738,292. Of breadstuffs the imports in 1891 were worth $4,484,449. In 1895 they were worth only $2,859,449. In 1891 eggs to the value of $1,184,595 were imported. For 1895 their value was $324,133. Hides worth $27,130,759 were brought in in 1891. The last fiscal year's imports were $26,122,942. In hops there was a much greater falling off under the Wilson tariff, only $599,744 worth being imported, while in 1891 their value was $1,797,406. Vegetables of the value of $7,076,374 were imported in 1891. For 1895 their value was only $3,971,445. In 1891 provisions worth $2,108,891 were imported. In 1895 they were valued at $2,028,658.

The only farm product which shows an increase in 1895 is wool, of which $25,556,421 worth was imported, against $18,231,372 worth in 1891. But this increase is explained by the very small imports of 1894, when, owing to the McKinley panic, the woolen industry was practically stagnant, and imports of wool were only valued at $6,107,438. Democratic prosperity brought a demand for more wool than our farmers could at once supply, and imports were therefore temporarily greater. Including wool, the total value of these farm products imported in 1891 was $67,757,211. Those of 1895 were valued at $59,012,028, a decrease under the Wilson tariff of $8,745,183. Thus do the official figures contradict the high-tariff assertions that free trade is ruining the farmer.

High Tariff Chestnuts.

With the advent of autumn comes once more our old familiar friend, the mouldy high tariff chestnut that "protection" caused the great decline in the price of steel rails. The New York Tribune has just heard about the wonderful results of protection in the steel rail industry, and hastens to tell its readers all about it. "Twenty years ago," says the Tribune, "the city of Cincinnati paid $80 a ton for steel rails. Now rails are less that $30 per ton. This is the result of protection."

Certainly. Protection did it all. It caused Sir Henry Bessemer to invent the method of making steel which has so vastly cheapened that product. Of course it happened that the new process was discovered by a wicked free-trader in a free trade country, but the Tribune says protection did it, and that paper ought to know. The high tariff also caused the invention of improved rolling mills and other machinery which have been adopted during the past twenty years. At the same time it put great deposits of coal where it could be easily mined, and created the rich iron mines of the Northwest.

At least, it must have done these things if the Tribune is right, for it was due to their existence that the price of steel rails has fallen. Only the Tribune forgot to say that steel rails are now about $5 a ton cheaper in free trade England than in this country. If protection puts down prices here, what caused them to fall in England? Not our competition, for our prices are still higher than abroad.

No More Tariff Tinkering.

The "Ohio idea" about the tariff, as set forth in the speeches made by the leaders of the party at the opening of the campaign, not only fails to evoke any enthusiasm, but encounters sharp rebuke in other States. The Buffalo Express coolly serves notice upon the McKinleyites that "the Ohio Republicans must not expect that the people are going to rip business all the way down the back for their benefit." The President of the Massachusetts Senate says that in his opinion "the general revival of business is occasioned by the confidence that the business men of the country feel that there is to be no more tariff tinkering for many years." It is true that he adds as an element in the case the confidence of business men that, "if the tariff is to be readjusted in any particular, it will be done by the friends of protection to American industries," but this last clause is evidently thrown in only to "keep in line." The weakness of Ohio's candidate for the Republican nomination lies in the fact that McKinley stands not merely for "tariff-tinkering," but for an entire overhauling of the present system.—New York Evening Post.

Pointer for Farmers.

It will surprise those farmers who advocate the "building of a wall around the United States and import and export nothing" to know that three-fourths of the exports of the United States are farm products, and that England alone buys 59 per cent of this.—Huntsville (Ala.) Mercury.

PREACHER TO PRISON

HINSHAW FOUND GUILTY OF MURDERING HIS WIFE.

Jury Out Only Two Hours When It Brings in a Verdict—Defendant Killed His Wife and Said a Burglar Did It.

Sentenced for Life.

Rev. William E. Hinshaw is guilty of the murder of his wife and will spend the remainder of his life in prison. Such is the verdict of the Danville, Ind., jury after being out two hours and twenty minutes.

Jan. 10 last William E. Hinshaw was found on the road in front of his house in Belleville, Hendricks County, with seventeen razor cuts on his person and two pistol wounds. He said robbers had entered the house and shot his wife. He had engaged in a deadly encounter with them and they had inflicted the wounds before leaving. He directed those who found him to hunt his wife, and she was found unconscious with a bullet in her head. She lived sixteen hours, but never spoke. Hinshaw lay in bed for ten days and was then well. His story was believed at first, then suspicion began to grow that the burglar story was not reasonable. In the snow on the ground his tracks could be seen, but no tracks of a burglar. His conduct was flippant and he continued to preach. He was popular with the women and it was common talk he was a very light-hearted widower. The grand jury convened and he was indicted, arrested, and lay in jail since May. His friends gathered around him and visited him constantly in jail.

Sept. 4 his trial commenced. The trial has covered four weeks, one week of which time was lost through the sickness of a juror. The trial has been most bitterly contested, there being expert testimony of the highest order on the point of whether the woman could have walked and talked after receiving the fatal wound in the head. Both sides had expert testimony on this.

The case was argued five days and one-half most exhaustively and the short time the jury was out showed that the jury determined every point as they went along. The verdict meets public approval. When the defendant refused to go on the stand in his own behalf there was nothing more needed to convince most people that he was guilty, although a hanged jury was the most they expected out of the trial. Hinshaw's attorneys will file an application for a new trial, which, if granted, will result in a change of venue.

MILES GETS THE COMMAND.

Formal Order Issued by Secretary Lamont Assigning That Duty.

Secretary Lamont issued an order Wednesday afternoon detailing General Miles to duty in Washington as general of the army, and General Ruger, now on special duty in Washington, to the command the department of the East, with headquarters in New York.

EXPOSITION IN FULL BLAST.

Atlanta People Ready to Care for All Who Visit It.

The Atlanta Exposition is now in full swing, the exhibits are in shape and the city has made arrangements necessary for the comfort of visitors. Reports to the committee on public comfort show that at the hotels rates range from $1.50 to $5 a day on the American plan, and from 75 cents to $5 a day on the European plan. Many private houses, however, are open to the public, and in the best parts of the city there are hundreds of rooms in private houses to be had for 75 cents a day, some of these houses being located on Peach Tree street, the fashionable thoroughfare of Atlanta. Railroad facilities are adequate and special rates are given to the exposition.

SEEKS DEATH IN THE LAKE.

J. P. Tillotson Takes a Fatal Plunge from a Chicago Breakwater.

J. P. Tillotson, a member of the Chicago Board of Trade, committed suicide Wednesday afternoon by throwing himself into Lake Michigan at the foot of 22d street. Financial losses, the result of an unsuccessful speculation in wheat, are said to be the cause of his self-destruction. Policemen from the Cottage Grove avenue station recovered the body within a short time and tried to restore life, but were unable to do so. Mr. Tillotson was 45 years old and leaves a widow, to whom he was married only six months ago.

A NOVEL INVESTMENT.

STRANGE COMMERCIAL FAITH.

How Bread Cast Upon the Waters of Trade Comes Back After Many Days—Enormous Investments in Modern Business Methods—"What's in a Name?"—Trade Marks and Their Defense.

If our forefathers could look down on modern business methods they would at the first glance conclude that modern merchants were as mad as March hares. After they had become thoroughly acquainted with the magnificent systems which are used by our great railroad corporations and mammoth trusts, they would conclude that the age was an age of magicians, and not of fools. The machinery of business has kept pace with the improved machinery of our mills. Indeed, the merchant of to-day avails of no little machinery in the conduct of his every-day office work. Patented systems of copying, of duplicating, wonderful letter files, and hundreds of neat aids to office work have multiplied very fast during the past few years and within the last month. The Graphophone has gone into active use in business offices, so that the merchant can dictate all his correspondence to a machine which records it on a wax-coated cylinder, from which, at a later hour, the typewriter can reproduce it for the mail.

The marvelous developments of modern business show more strongly in the matter of advertising than in most other branches. Vast sums of money are apparently thrown away in this direction. When a great commercial house spends two hundred thousand dollars during a single year in newspaper advertising, there is nothing in the inventory at the close of the year which will represent the outlay. The papers have been printed, distributed, read and again reduced to pulp in the paper mill, while the merchant's good money has been paid to the publishers. Prudent men, even of the present generation, hardly comprehend it. Thousands shake their heads, and invest their own money in bricks and mortar, feeling assured that they can depend on possessions which they see rather than invest their money in building up something which to them seems visionary.

A true philosopher of the olden time put over his door the legend, "Things invisible deceive not." The bankers and builders of his day sneered at him as they counted their gold and reared their solid buildings. But he had Scripture for his warrant, and modern advertisers are the direct followers of his philosophy. He labored to show men that gold might be stolen, buildings might burn, substantial possessions turn to dust and disappointment, while skill, education and character, though invisible, could not be stolen nor destroyed. The modern advertiser goes much further, and proves conclusively that a mere name may be worth a million if it is well known and well respected.

"What's in a name?" finds forcible answer in the columns of our daily papers. The shrewd school boy, who puzzled his companions by daring them to spell housecleaning in seven letters, and then solved it by spelling Sapolio, must have recognized the intimate connection between these two ideas which has been built up by a vast expenditure of money. The five letters, P-e-a-r-s, though valueless singly, are worth hundreds of thousands of dollars when used in connection with soap. The printed matter, painted signs, and countless devices to make the name popular pass away annually, almost as fast as they are paid for; but if properly managed, the trade name accumulates and carries forward the value as a permanent investment. An article of real worth, clearly named and widely made known to the public, is sure of a brilliant success. Sapolio affords abundant evidence of this. Its great usefulness, its distinct but descriptive name, and its almost universal use has resulted in as great success to its manufacturers as in assistance to the housekeepers of the world.

Such an investment as the trade-name Sapolio needs no fire insurance, and cannot secretly be conveyed to Canada. If tampered with or infringed upon, it must be done openly, and modern law with each succeeding year recognizes more forcibly than before the rights of trade-name owners, and punishes with greater alacrity attempts at infringement. The manufacturers of Sapolio have successfully overthrown countless imitations, and we understand that they are now prosecuting dealers who silently pass another article over their counters when the customer has plainly asked for Sapolio. This is a new departure in law, but is clearly equitable. It promises to add another link to the laws which assist in the defense of trade marks and trade names.

An attempt to imitate is always despicable, except when monkeys or stage mimics are thereby enabled to amuse an audience. Yet although the history of trade furnishes no instance of a really successful imitation, still hundreds attempt it every year.

In the office of the Sapolio manufacturers there is a Chamber of Horrors where the proprietors keep samples of the many cakes of imitation stuffs which have been vainly put forward only to meet with prompt failure or to drag out a profitless existence through a few years. The public is too discriminating to buy an inferior article on the assertion that it "is just as good as Sapolio."

The man who attempts to deceive by imitating the name or appearance of another man's goods is a self-proclaimed liar, and however general the vice of falsehood may be, it is a fact that even liars have no sympathy for one of their kind. The public asks no better proof of inferiority than that the goods are pushed forward under the cover of a better reputation, and the Chamber of Horrors in the Sapolio building tells in plain terms how the public recognizes and despises such attempts.

It is not an empty faith or visionary speculation that leads these well-known manufacturers to expend hundreds of thousands of dollars in constantly reminding the world of Sapolio. Years of intimate acquaintance have taught them that the public knows a good article and is willing to pay for it; that the market for fine goods, whether it be butter or fruits, or laces or diamonds, yes, or good scouring soap, is never glutted. They have become intimate with the people. Sapolio is a household word, always spoken with good will, as if it were a familiar friend. The thousands who pass by The Sun building on their way to and from the Brooklyn Bridge, look up with a smile as they recognize the great sign which now overhangs the ruins of French's Hotel, and say: "There it is again," when they recognize the seven letters arranged under the seven days of the week, with the brief statement that "if used every week day it brings rest on Sunday." The great white wall looks as though it had been cleaned with Sapolio, and a verse underneath gives the comforting assurance that—

This world is all a fleeting show,
For man's illusion given;
But woman, with Sapolio,
Can make that show a heaven.

Poets, artists, designers, clever writers, many of whom would not condescend to touch on trade topics in an ordinary way, do not hesitate to set forth the merits of Sapolio. It is a simple solid cake of scouring soap, but the sun never sets upon its sale. From New York to San Francisco it is found in every household, lightening the housewife's care, and, like the great men of the world, wasting itself to make everything around it brighter. In Honolulu, Nagasaki, Shanghai, Bombay, Ceylon, Calcutta and Alexandria it forms a chain which binds the West of civilization with its Eastern edge; while over Australasia, the African colonies, and the countries of South Africa its sales are very extensive.

This slight record of its successes and systems is a good proof of the value of modern advertising, and we have coupled it with some facts relating to the disasters of those who have not followed the broad theory of advertising and created a name and reputation for something distinctively their own, because we would not by painting a tempting picture of success lure thoughtless people to make the mistake of supposing that servile imitation would lead them to the same thing. Josh Billings covers the ground. "Never oppose a success. When I see a rattlesnake's head sticking out of a hole, I say that hole belongs to that snake, and I go about my business."

A UNIQUE TOWN.

Probably It Doesn't Exist, but It's Perfectly Feasible.

"I live in a town," said the gentleman at the hotel to the reporter looking for an item, "that is unique in its way."

"What's the town?" inquired the reporter.

"It doesn't make any difference what the town is; it is unique."

"In what does its uniquity consist, then?" asked the reporter, seeing that he was balked on the previous question.

"It is self-supporting and there are no taxes."

"Geewhillikins!" exclaimed the reporter, "give me its address. I want to go there right away."

"No," said the inhabitant of this Arcadian vilaige, "I shall not do anything of the kind. We don't want any more people there at present. We may after a while, but as yet we are not ready for an increase."

"What kind of a town is it?"

"An excellent town, of course."

"I should say so. Why don't you put it in a dime museum?"

"We don't have to; we can support ourselves easier than that."

"How do you do it?"

"Simple enough. When we laid out the town fifteen years ago we made it a corporation that could carry on its own business. In this way the town in the disposal of lots sold only every other lot, so that now it owns half the ground it occupies. These lots it gave long leases on at figures which enabled lessees to build good houses on for business and dwelling, and on conditions quite as favorable, if not more so, than those had who bought outright. We had the country around us, good in agriculture, mineral, water and transportation to insure a town, and when it was once started it went ahead, until now we have between 5,000 and 7,000 people, and our ground rents pay all our expenses and practically leave no city tax. Then we have some other sources of revenue from the money the corporation put into manufacturing plants and mines, and on the whole we are in clover as a community."

"Now, look here," pleaded the reporter, "give a fellow a chance. Tell me the name of the place and let me go there, too."

But the visitor was close-mouthed and the reporter went away unsatisfied, even the hotel register conveying no information that was of any value.—Detroit Free Press.

Sets Up a Dog's Right to Bite.

James Armstrong, of New York, owner of a big St. Bernard dog that bites, claims as long as the animal keeps the bulk of his body on private property he can project his head and mouth into the public highway and bite passers-by without breaking the law. Samuel Wilkinson, who was bitten, takes the other end of the argument, and says that he will sue Armstrong for serious injuries. While he was walking past the house he received the bites. Mr. Wilkinson says: "I am willing to swear that the part of the dog that bit me was out upon the public street where I was. It does not matter where the rest of the dog was. The offense of biting was committed with the dog's mouth, and it is of no defense for Mr. Armstrong to prove that the hind legs and tail were on his ground. I don't care where the hind legs were, as they took no part in the proceedings."

Paper Socks.

The day of the paper collar passed away some years ago, and, though paper is used to-day in many more forms than were ever dreamed of a few decades back, this cheap article of haberdashery has almost disappeared from the market. But there is promise that it will have a worthy successor in the paper sock, which is the latest novelty to be ground out of the pulp mill. The mechanism has been perfected to paper yarn of such consistency that it is capable of being woven into fabrics soft enough for wear. A special merit is the cheapness of this newly devised material, socks being produced at a retail price of about 3 cents a pair. At this rate there is no reason why the whole world may not be supplied with foot coverings. At 3 cents a pair the bachelor's life will become gladsome and happy. It is said that substances can be used in the preparation of this material to make the socks so impervious to water that they can stand several washings before falling apart.

Cowardice of a Large Eagle.

The claim of the eagle to the title of king of birds seems to be slightly clouded by an incident reported from Stafford County, Virginia. A gentleman down there was watching an unusually fine bald eagle grandly sailing around in the air a few days ago, when he noticed a little bee martin rise in the air and make straight for the eagle. He wondered what the martin's object could be, and was surprised to see it sail in boldly to tear the feathers out of the big eagle. But he was amazed to see the eagle, after a few moments of effort at beating off the little bird, sail away in full flight, making every effort to escape from the martin. The martin followed up closely for awhile, making a savage jab at the eagle every few yards, but was finally left behind through the superior retreating powers of the big eagle.

Fertile Alaska.

The nature of the whole land can be roughly divided into three conditions: Snow and ice fields bury the coast range and choke up every hollow; to the immediate north valleys are rocky and barren, but the vast interior beyond is richly clothed in luxuriant vegetation. Scientific authorities theoretically mapped out giant ice fields as spreading over the entire land from the Fairweather and Mount St. Elias ranges north almost to the valley of the Yukon. Colossal heights mantled in never-melting snows tower thousands of feet in the air, but within the shadows of these mighty uplands, in the sheltered hollows beneath, lie immense valleys carpeted in richest grasses, and gracefully tinted with wild flowers. Here in the summer a genial clime is found, where strawberries and other wild fruits ripen to luxuriance, where there are four and a half months of summer and seven and a half of winter. In June and July the sun is just below the horizon only for a few hours, and the temperature, though chilly at night, has an average of 65 degrees in daytime.

A Law Rarely Observed.

"Do you know that every time a cigar dealer takes a handful of cigars from a box and spreads them out on top of the show case for a purchaser to select from he violates one of the most stringent laws of the United States?" asked a Chestnut street weed dispenser yesterday. "It's so. The internal revenue law has a rigid provision to the effect that a retailer must not take cigars from the box after it has been packed and stamped. He should always hand out the box to his customers and let them select from it. I knew a young man who started in the business and used a number of cheap cigars to form a novel sign in his bulk window. An inspector who happened along promptly stepped up and tore down the loose cigars and burned them, saying he could have the young man fined and imprisoned, but would overlook the fault on account of his innocence of the law."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

The Greatest Medical Discovery of the Age.

KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DONALD KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, MASS.,

Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor). He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston. Send postal card for book.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it. Read the label.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime. Sold by all Druggists.

SOME women are born managers of bank books, says a writer in the Philadelphia Times. By this we do not mean that they are able to spend every cent which they can lay their hands upon, but that they know how to live within their income, whether it be large or small, and always have something laid aside for that inevitable visitation of Jupiter Pluvius.

Economy to some women, however, is an almost unknown term. They think they understand its meaning, but they do not, a fact which has been borne home to her in many ways.

Economy is such a coy, elusive thing. You may think you have captured it and that you will be able to hold it fast and sure, when, presto! it slips from your very fingers, and it's extravagance itself that you have grasped. "I have often noticed," remarked a sagacious woman the other day, "that my most impressive fits of economy are invariably followed by far more impressive fits of extravagance. I save a penny or so on some dozen petty things and then suddenly rush into some rash expenditure costing ten times as much as all the money I've been saving. I always dread an economical fit, therefore, for I know that it merely precedes some outrageous expense." This is true of most women. There was a certain art student last winter who became shockingly "short"—so much so, indeed, that, greatly as she disliked the idea, she was finally driven to the necessity of borrowing from her chum. "If they don't send me a check from home this morning," she said to herself, "there'll be no other way." Sure enough, the check didn't come, and the art student was just screwing her courage to the asking point when the chum burst forth with, "Oh, by the way, Diana, could you lend me $10? I'm absolutely penniless." Had such a predicament concerned any others than art students it might have been serious, but to them it was but another phase of the bohemianism that they so love. "And when the check did come," announced the art student later, "I felt so overwhelmingly 'flush' that I went right out and bought a dozen handkerchiefs at a dollar apiece. They were such beauties, you know, I just couldn't help it; and, besides, I really did need some new handkerchiefs."

First Woman to Receive D. D.

Rev. Dr. Augusta J. Chapin of Omaha, is the only woman who has ever enjoyed the distinction of having received the degree of doctor of divinity. In the pulpit she has great dignity of manner and naturalness of expression. She has an excellent voice, which is very agreeable and forceful in the lower register, but rather thin and weak in the upper register.

REV. CHAPIN, D. D.

While speaking she uses few gestures. She stands in front of the desk and reads her manuscript in a quiet monotone, only occasionally raising her voice, accompanied, it may be, by a graceful lifting of herself on her toes, by way of emphasizing a sentence. In dress and appearance she is every inch a model doctor of divinity.

Women Inventors.

The Patent Office has issued a second appendix to its list of patents issued to women, bringing the list down to March last.

The office was established in 1790, and the first patent issued to a woman was in 1890 to Mary Kies, for a method of weaving straw with silk or thread. Six years later one was issued to Mary Brush for a corset. It was not until 1828 that more than one patent per year was issued to women. In 1862 only fourteen patents were issued to women, that being the largest in any year up to that time. The war, however, developed the inventive genius of women, and the annual number of patents issued to them increased rapidly. Many of them were for inventions for either fighting or nursing devices. The annual issue increased steadily year by year. In 1870 it was 60, in 1880 over 92, in 1890 over 200, and in 1893 over 300.

From 1809 to 1888 women's inventions averaged thirty a year, from 1888 to 1892 280 a year. The pamphlet gives a classification of women's inventions. This shows that wearing apparel leads the list, with 160 different patents in thirty months. Then comes cooking utensils, with 100 inventions; furniture, with 55; heating, and washing or cleaning apparatus, with 40 odd each; sewing and spinning devices and building apparatus, with about 30 each; educational, medical apparatus, toys and trunks, about 20 each. Other lines in which women have tried their inventive faculties are baby carriages, barrel and bicycle attachments, printing and bottling apparatus, boxes and baskets, clocks, flowers, horseshoes, motors, musical instruments, plumbing and preserving devices, screens, stationery, theatrical apparatus, toilet articles and typewriter attachments. Very few of the patents issued to women were for entirely new creations. Excluding those especially concerning women's work, nearly all the other patents were for attachments to some previously existing device.

Steam and Chiffon.

Steam is a great ally of the would-be thrifty woman. A chiffon dress that has become mussed can be freshened to look as good as new unless torn, by steaming it over a large volume of steam such as a wide mouthed boiler affords. Veils that are wrinkled can be smoothed out better by steaming than by ironing them. The moisture as soon as evaporated has the effect not only of taking out the wrinkles, but of giving some life to the net. Ironing destroys the "life" of silk or net.

How to Arrange the Hair.

The Woman About Town in the Washington Post describes the headdress of her near neighbor at the theater recently. She was the envy of her observers. Her gown was not different from many another, but her hair was unique. You thought when you first looked at her that she was wearing a bonnet, but she wasn't. Her heavy brown hair was dragged to the crown of her head and there twisted and puffed and pinned into a very fair imitation of a Dutch bonnet, complete even to the big bow in the back. It was odd, it was striking, but it was decidedly the latest fashion.

A CYCLE OF WELL-DRESSED WOMEN.

Clever Mother and Daughter.

Since the franchise was granted to the women of Wyoming the sex has taken a much greater interest in public affairs than formerly. None is more interested in the welfare of the State than the wife and daughter of Governor Richards. During his recent absence on an Eastern trip public affairs were largely in the hands of his daughter, who while acting as his private secretary broke all records by signing a requisition on the Governor of a neighboring State for the return of a man who was wanted by the police authorities of a Wyoming city. Miss Richards thoroughly understands the duties of the position she fills and has had able assistance from her talented mother. Mrs. Richards exercises the right of franchise just the same as her husband, but as an incident of her duty, not as a business. She has found that, with all her outside political work and affairs, most of her time is occupied with her children, her household duties, her church and society. Mrs. Richards is an extremely handsome woman, and believes in the new woman, but not the bloomered new woman.

ELEANOR ALICE RICHARDS.

Plaid Silks.

There is a new fancy for making skirts of plaid silk. With these are worn plain silk bodices. A great many of these plaid silks have been purchased by the importers, from which may be inferred that they are to be worn in the fall and winter. Some of these plaids are very handsome and effective; the colors are subdued and artistically blended, and the effect is not as striking as the word "plaid" usually suggests.

Returns to His Family After Thirty-Three Years Absence.

Thirty-three years ago Aaron Swain of Kokomo, went to California, leaving behind a wife and infant daughter, promising to return from the gold fields with a fortune. Twenty years rolled by, and, no tidings of the absent husband coming to the ears of the family, Mrs. Swain married again and is rearing a second family. The infant daughter deserted by Swain was married to George Conner eighteen years ago, and she now has children grown. The other day Swain, after a third of a century's absence, reappeared on the scene, calling first at the home of his daughter, the wife of his youth being now the wife of a prosperous farmer in Henry County. On being told that she was presiding over another household and the mother of a second set of children, the old gentleman manifested no great concern.

"Well," said he, "she has got none the best of me on that score. I have another wife and children in California myself."

All parties are on friendly terms, and there is much speculation as to the outcome of the matrimonial tangle. The old gentleman is puzzled to know which wife to keep. The old lady will probably decide the matter.

Minor State Items.

Vermillion County now has six newspapers.

Laporte is to have a shirt factory in the near furture.

Michigan City's new census gives a population of 13,979.

Oliver O'Neil, a Brazil butcher, fell into a vat of boiling lard, and was fatally scalded.

Frederick Royce, of Griffith, was killed by a Chicago & Erie freight train at Hurlbut.

Chiefs of Police of Indiana met at Terre Haute, Tuesday, and effected a permanent organization.

Mrs. Marion McKay was thrown from a runaway buggy at Shelbyville, and fatally injured.

During the centennial Fort Wayne will give bicycle races in which $1,500 in prizes will be awarded.

Alexander James, a Connersville letter carrier, was probaby fatally shot by a coal thief whom he tried to capture.

The State Convention of the Young Women's Christian Association of Cities and Colleges will be held in Richmond, Oct. 17.

A smart young man frightened a horse which two young boys were driving at Laporte. In the runaway the boys were seriously injured.

The Elwood Police Board has issued an order closing up all the gambling rooms in the city and ordering the proprietors to keep them closed in the future, or have all the fixtures burned in the streets. The order is being obeyed.

Patents have been issued to residents of Indiana as follows: Edward Brewer, Greenwood, rotary photograph album; George Pederson, neck yoke; James Simpson, Veedersburg, gate; James C. Burgess, Yountzville, bolt clipper.

A new electric road is to be constructed connecting Logansport with Rochester, Fulton county, and Burlington, Carroll County. The road will be about thirty-five miles long and will penetrate the best part of Fulton and Carroll Counties.

Sheriff Burk investigated the Shelbyville jail and discovered that the bars had been sawed away from a window, and that a wholesale delivery had been planned. A saw and a file were found in one cell. Among the prisoners are two alleged murderers.

While sweeping leaves out of the gutter at Lafayette, Miss Nellie Bagane, aged 19, was fatally burned, her clothing igniting from the flames of a fire she had started. The unfortunate young woman was very popular. She lived several hours after the accident.

The seven-months-old child of O. P. Kerr of Brazil, who was given a tablet of corrosive sublimate by its grandmother, who thought it was a tablet left by the doctor for the child, is dead. The aged lady who gave the poison is distracted with grief.

Mrs. William Van Buskirk, of Ewlood, is one of the direct heirs of the Edwards estate of $60,000,000 now in course of settlement in New York City. She is one of the direct descendants, and will receive about $850,000. Her family is poor, and recently lost their home by fire.

The Rev. Nathan Caldwell McDill will have completed his forty-third year as pastor of the United Brethren Church, at Richland, Rush County, in November. He is now 71 years old, but continues in the active discharge of his duties as pastor. He has been married three times.

The private bank of C. D. Porter, of Geneva, has been reorganized under the title of the Geneva Bank, as a State institution, with a paid-up capital of $60,000. The officers elected are: A. G. Briggs, President; S. W. Hale, Vice President; C. D. Porter, Cashier, and Eugene Ash, Assistant Cashier.

Mrs. John Spencer was burned in the potter's field at Richmond. She, her husband and two children arrived from Ohio, enroute to Anderson, going overland. While starting a fire, her clothing ignited, and she died from her injuries. Spencer has disappeared, and the two children are in the Home of the Friendless.

The Trustees of the Indiana State Soldiers' Home, in session at Lafayette, adopted rules for admission to the Home and appointed the following officers: Commandant, Capt. John P. McGrew, of Indianapolis, late Commandant of the South Dakota Soldiers' Home; Adjutant, Capt. W. F. Hevens, of Indianapolis, Assistant Adjutant General of the State.

While Jos. Pye was hauling gravel at Oaklandon, his team ran away, throwing him under the wagon, which passed over his body, killing him almost instantly. Mr. Fye was a son-in-law of the late D. G. Hanna. He was a member of the I. O. O. F. and leaves a wife and one child.

Clinton Miller committed suicide at the fair grounds at Marion by shooting himself through the head. He left a letter stating that, having spent all of his wife's money as well as his own, and having otherwise grossly misbehaved, he felt that the best thing he could do was to put an end to his existence.

A costly fire broke out at Fortville, and destroyed a half-dozen storerooms and two residences before it burned itself out. It started in a bakery, which was quickly a mass of flames, and soon spread to adjoining buildings. The loss will reach probably $10,000, with very little insurance. The means of fighting fire were totally inadequate.

Verla Crisman, aged 12, of Middletown near Muncie, is dead. Six years ago she swallowed a pin and for four years has had intense suffering. About a year ago the point of the pin was found protruding from her back and was extracted. After her death it was found that four of the vertebrae had decayed, leaving several ribs without support.

COCOANUT TREES.

How the Natives Manage to Climb Them Like Monkeys.

The native proverb says: "A cocoanut tree is a bride's dowry," and really the many uses to which the palm and its productions are put are wonderful. They provide a family with food, shelter, fuel, house utensils, and, if need be, clothes. It takes a long time for the cocoanut tree to attain its full growth—seven years—but when this time has passed it is a mine of wealth, and happy he who can call a plantation of a hundred acres his own. The nuts when ripe fall to the ground, and, when necessary, are plucked by men who climb up. It sometimes makes one's blood run cold to see them run up the trees like monkeys.

Two ways are practiced for mounting the trunk. In the case of a small tree, or at an odd moment, the man walks up the trunk, keeping his feet flat against it and throwing his weight back from it as much as possible, retaining his position at the same time by the tension of his arms. The other and safer plan is to pass a loop of cord around the feet, which are thus kept close together, and grasp the trunk of the tree, the arms in the meantime assisting the climber, who moves upward in a series of jumps.

The busy season on a cocoanut plantation is when the nuts ripen, which they seem to do all at once, and every hand is engaged in gathering and conveying them with carts to the drying ground, which is always in close proximity to the bungalow, so as to be as much as possible under the eye of the manager. Here they are split in half, longitudinally, with an ax—a feat which is dexterously performed with one blow by the man appointed for that duty—and then spread out to dry. The intense heat of the sun rapidly shrivels the kernel, which curls up into a ball the size of your fist and detaches itself from the shell.

This is now what is called "copra," and is shipped to the nearest point of landing in sacks, where it is either transported in bulk to Europe or more generally made into oil, the refuse, oil cake or "poonak," being sold locally for feed for cattle.—Frank Leslie's Monthly.

John G. Carlisle as a Pleader.

Mr. Carlisle is a masterly pleader before any bar. Kentucky judges used to look upon his appearance before them as a star attraction instead of a part of a wearisome routine of duty, and Kentucky literature has been enriched by many stories of the Senator's legal career. On one occasion as related in Washington, Mr. Carlisle had an important case that the other side was sure of winning. Mr. Carlisle labored faithfully on his arguments and produced a speech that thrilled all auditors and deeply impressed the bench. The moment he had concluded the judge ordered court adjourned till afternoon. The opposing counsel objected strenuously, pleading that it was nowhere near the dinner hour and that he was ready and anxious to proceed. But the judge was not to be moved. "What," he said, "spoil the the taste of such an argument as that? Never, sir. I mean to enjoy a good thing when I have the chance to. The court will adjourn."

An Odd Race.

A "Noah's Ark Race" is an amusing novelty on the turf. It was introduced at the Madras fair, and was a handicap for all animals bred in the country, the competitors including buffaloes, elephants, a goat, ram, emu, and elk, and other creatures, besides ponies and horses. The elephants were as placid as if moving in a marriage procession, and went over the course at a quick walk. The ram and goat, ridden by little boys, ran well, and the buffaloes went at a good gallop: but the emu would not stir—neither would the elk, until the end of the race, when it took fright and darted down the course at great speed. Finally a ram was the winner, a horse coming in second, and a buffalo third.

A Beautiful Vine.

In our search after beautiful vines we have overlooked one of the choicest ones of native growth. Our English cousins are more discerning, and in many places in that snug island may be seen vitis labrusca, our northern fox grape. Anyone who has seen it trained over an arbor or spreading its thrifty and abundant foliage over rough rockeries and masses of roots will not soon forget the impression it gives of wild grace and beauty.

If not, expect to suffer without aid. The Bitters is the stanch friend of all who travel by sea or land, emigrants, tourists, commercial travelers, mariners. It completely remedies nausea, biliousness, dyspepsia, rheumatic twinges and inactivity of the kidneys.

Old-Time Fashions Now in Vogue.

English School Statistics.

In 1870 1,500,000 went to school in England; in 1894, 5,000,000. In 1870 there were 12,000 persons in prison there; in 1894 only 5,000. In 1870 about 3,000 sentences for capital crime were pronounced; in 1894 but 800.

The Bergamot Tree.

There is but one spot in the world where the bergamot tree can be cultivated with profit—a fact of some importance, since its essence is indispensable in the manufacture of numerous perfumes and medical preparations. The spot referred to is Regio, in Calabria, that extremity of the Italian peninsular which is familiarly known as the "toe of the boot." Mr. Kerrich suggests that there is a good chance here for enterprising capitalists of getting a highly profitably monopoly of the bergamot tree by buying up from the producers all that they extract. At present the Reggio bergamot suffers both in quality and reputation through the frauds of small traders, who, it is said, mix it with ten parts of adulterating matter.

Good Time for Art Auctions.

It is said to be the time for selling pictures in London, as the new African millionaires are stocking up with "old masters," and give any price for them. A London collection, valued by experts at £50,000, sold at auction the other day for £87,000.

A Happy Woman.

At last I am a well and happy woman again; thanks to McElree's Wine of Cardui. I have suffered for four years from womb trouble of the most horrible kind. Twelve years ago I went to the San Antonio Hospital where they performed an operation, but it left me in a worse state than ever. I went to Dr. Kingsley and Dr. D. Y. Young, but they gave me little relief. After spending $125.00 I was not able to leave my bed, and most of the time suffered pains to equal a thousand deaths. On the 10th of last October my friend Mrs. Stevens advised me to try McElree's Wine of Cardui. The first bottle did me good, and I got more, and to-day I am a new woman; am able to do all my cooking and house-work. I am running a boarding-house and doing all the work myself. I still use the Wine, and always keep it in the house—it saved my life.

RIPANS TABULES

Miss Lucy W. Lewis, of Randolph, Mass., a well-known and highly respected lady, writes under date of Jan. 22, 1895: "I can speak only in praise of 'Ripans Tabules.' I am troubled by what my physician has called Nervous Dyspepsia. My work, that of a school teacher, often brings on a state of intense nervousness, which prevents digestion and results in severe headaches. I have found that by watching my feelings, and taking a Tabule with meals—as I feel myself becoming tired and nervous—I get relief at the time and prevent further trouble. I have derived much benefit during the time I have used them, and do not intend to be without them."

Ripans Tabules are sold by druggists, or by mail if the price (50 cents a box) is sent to The Ripans Chemical Company, No. 10 Spruce Street, New York. Sample vial, 10 cents.

Not Down On The Program

Hicksville News.

Sunday evening during services at the Christian church, a small sensation, and some amusement, was occasioned by the action of a small dog belonging to L. E. Griffin. Jim had followed his master into the building and was snugly laid away under a seat when the service was opened with music. At the first notes of the choir, Jim broke into a most violent howling and barking and would not let up until after much chasing and labor, he was fired out. Poor Jim is now undergoing banishment in the cellar, where he will be kept until he has cultivated a more appreciative taste for music. It is not known which particular voice caused him to weep.

After Whales

G. A. Bishop and John C. Lochner started for Petoskey this afternoon, and will be gone all the week. They expect to clean out the fish in northern lakes and surprise the native Michiganders by the size of their appetites and fish stories. The COURIER man took along Geo. Grund's gilt edged fishing outfit and if he finds out in the five days, what all the mysterious tools and trinkets are for we look to see the COURIER office garnished next week with the skeleton of a whale at least. What the COURIER force don't know about fishing fills a large volume. But then, have we not Al. Bishop along for preceptor? Let us possess our souls in peace till they return to made glad the waste places that are now in mourning for the absent.

Sudden Deaths.

Waterloo reports several deaths Sunday. R. D. Tefft was up there and Charlie Koons came over to Auburn, both reporting in substance the same thing. Wesley Jones, a well known resident of that place, was up and about at the usual time, and after doing his chores went to the house and soon complained of a cold feeling in his feet. He finally lay down on the bed, and his wife began to put hot water, etc., to his feet, to warm them and restore circulation, but soon saw he was dead. He had long been troubled with heart disease. Mr. Jones was a man highly regarded, and had been in the freight office of the Lake Shore road at that place for nineteen years. All the railway men are taking part in the preparations for his funeral.

The second death, is that of a daughter of Godfrey Geller a well known citizen residing a few miles east of town for many years. She also died very suddenly, the trouble being apoplexy.

There is also a rumor that one of the Smurrs, east of Waterloo, is dead, but we could not learn anything certain about it.

The Dominion.

A TRIP TO NIAGARA FALLS AND INTO THE DOMINION OF CANADA, PROVINCE OF ONTARIO.

A short walk brought us to Prospect Park with fine drives and walks and soon we stood on the verge of a precipice looking down upon the greenish blue waters far below, upon a beautiful rainbow that advanced or receded as one changed position, observing the furious and swift rush of waters over the rocky ledges, the rich, yellow sparkle of falling masses, and the cloud of upward rising mist that fell again as a gentle, cooling rain. To the left and beyond Goat Island, in the near distance is a greater and more impressive fall and, standing there dwarfed by surroundings into insignificance, one hears the solemn, monotonous, majestic fall of waters that have thundered on for centuries ever lengthening the magnificent gorge as the erosive forces slowly crumble away the rocks. The Falls of Niagara, the rapids, the gorge, the whirpool, their accompaniments constitute one of the grandest scenes ever viewed by man and are well worth the journey of thousands of miles to see and hear. To the right spanning the chasm, a little below the American Fall stretches a suspension bridge which you can use for fifteen cents, and far below, a little steamboat, the Maid of the Mist, makes her way boldly among the foaming waters of the Canadian Fall, rocks stationary, puts on steam and rounding a curve, returns down stream to her dock on the other side for other passengers and another like venturesome trip. Her deck is washed by water, the heavy mist hides the view and falls a heavy rain but oil-cloth coats protect the passenger who is amply repaid for slight expense and passing inconvenience. Turning from the falls, we wend our way paralled with the rapids northward toward a bridge that connects with an islet adjacent to Goat Island. From this bridge, a magnificent prospect is presented. On a long stretch of two miles there is seen a wide expanse of rushing, foaming, roaring waters and were this all, it is itself most grand and we-inspiring and yet but one-third the volume of Niagara river sweeps down the rocky ledges of this wide and far extended channel. On this islet stands the office of the State Commissioners and reservation carriages will convey the visitor around Goat Island for fifteen cents and allow the privilege of stopping off at Luna Island, Cave of the Winds, Horse shoe fall, Three Sisters and The Springs. Our party chose to take their time and enjoy the unparalled scenery at leisure. Heated and wearied, we drank from the pellucid cold water of the springs, traversed the broad walk leading to the north end of Goat Island, passed by cyclers, coaches and numerous groups of tourists on foot and, from rocky coigns of vantage looked out upon the august movement of the rapids over which pass the masses of surplus water from four of the greatest fresh water lakes on earth. At a point of rock where parting, the currents flow south and westward at the head of the Island an incomparable view far-reaching and widely extended is presented. In the fore ground, a long reach of fall pours thundering over a ledge of rock, speed foaming and disturbed a short distance to another ledge below which there seems a lengthened valley of churned waters, narrow, ebullient and yeasty beyond which billows rise in bursting masses as if gigantic sub-aquean monsters were disporting beneath. From this point, down a long, steep incline among hidden and projecting rocks, the maddened waters impelled with irresistible power, rush, and leap and surge till in vast volume smooth and swift, condensed and shining a greenish blue, the great stream reaches and pours a solid mass over an ever-lengthening, ever-widening crevasse into the deep gorge below. Up from the depths rise eruptions of mist which clear and disclose the beauteous green fall shading left and right into a creamy white. From four points of observation, each widely distinct, two on channel rapids and two at the falls rises ever the solemn roar of the mighty cataract which, exists a marvel of beauty, a synonym of sublimity that no lover of nature should fail some time to see and admire.

TO TORONTO AND BEYOND.

The day had been hot, 96 deg., while at Denver a foot of snow was falling, and to restore equilibrium of temperature, a cold wind crept eastward disturbing the surface of the lakes and, making a parting morning visit to the Park, we found the falls devoid of spectators, the steamboat morred at her deck, the sunless mist robbed of its iris, chilling cold and the only object of attention across the gorge a broad red flag floating from the flagstaff of the Clifton Home and reminding one of the rebel battle-flags on the lines at Atlanta bidding defiance to Union forces. Just in time for the train from Buffalo to Lewiston, we found seats on the river side and were richly rewarded by a continous and splendid view of Niagara river from the fall to the end of the gorge. Below the Grand Trunk Suspension Bridge, the view from the verge of the canyon reveals the waters confined in a narrowed gulch, speeding with foaming crests downward with a velocity that rivaled the speed of the train, till expanding in a broad stream at Lewiston, they once more rest quiet and placid save here and there, ebullient from depths below, and thence flow undisturbed towards the lake. Down a wooden stairway of many steps to the water's edge, the crowd hurried and thronged aboard a small steamboat filling every seat and, seeing no other conveyance, regarded with dismay and apprehension a trip in such a boat so loaded upon the rough billows of Lake Ontario. Wagons loaded with the finest of peaches and clusters of sweet green grapes near the wharf were swept of their contents and supplied pleasant lunch to the many passengers.

BRUCE'S MONUMENT.

Across the river from Lewiston, upon a commanding height, stands a stately monument conspicuous a long distance and exciting the interest of the observer. This sightly column of stone, commemorates the death of Gen. Brock, a brave and able British officer killed in action Oct., 11, 1812, at the Battle of Queenstown. On that day, a detachment of regulars was sent from Black Rock to Lewiston where were assembled 3000 New York Militia, under Gen. Van Rensselaer. The British were reinforced from Ft. George. An attack was made upon the enemy at Queenstown across the river. Thrown into disorder by a heavy fire while contending with the strong current an advance party of 100 men under Rensselaer stormed the fort and silenced its batteries. Reinforced on both sides, the conflict was severe, the British were repulsed and Brock while trying to rally them was mortally wounded. Hundreds of Indians joined the British who were again driven back. At this critical moment the victory was lost to the Americans by a refusal of the New York Militia to go beyond territory of the United States. Our forces fighting bravely were overpowered by numbers and recrossed the river with a loss of 300 prisoners and 600 killed and wounded. Should any COURIER reader visit this historic and beautiful locality hereafter the above brief story of the occasion of Brock's monument will spare him the humiliation of ignorance, which the writer found general among tourists, regarding this episode of the War of 1812. At Queenstown, we were relieved by transfer to the Chicora, a fine boat that twice each twenty-four hours makes her trip to Toronto and return, comfortably quartered, speed down to Niagara on-the-lake, where a brief stop sufficed to take on board, a group of passengers, trucks of baggage and quantities of grapes and peaches in baskets and thence moved by a point of land on which stands Ft. Niagara, insignificant in size, its river and lake fronts protected by heavy walls of masonry and memorable for the massacre on Dec. 19, 1813, of a garrison consisting of about 300 invalid American soldiers. Out into the troubled lake, we passed a buoy supporting a bell which as it rocked in the billows, rang warningly, and seemed prophetic coming ill. A heavy gale rising in the night swept over the lake and when a few miles out the swaying, pitching, sickening motion of the boat upon the foam-crested billows brought as its sequence, attacks of mal-sea from which a greater part of the passengers and some of the crew were sufferers during the term of passage. Mr. Sawvel and the writer experienced qualms of the stomach but got off easily, yet dared not presume upon this immunity, seeing women with white, distressed faces staggering below and the men with bowed heads at the boat's side offering oblations to the Neptune of Ontario. Gladly all welcomed sight of land and soon we had entered a spacious and excellent harbor, came along side a wharf and were at Toronto. The customs officials passed us with cursory inspection of baggage and we set off for a hotel to seek rest and refreshment.

TORONTO.

The first object to attract notice was a tall policeman arrayed in a generously buttoned short-skirted coat, which with a small cap from which a strap was suspended between mouth and chin, gave him a unique, youthful appearance. He seemed insolated, and neither spoke to anyone nor was he addressed. Toronto is a large and beautiful city. It impresses the visitor by the number of its costly and stable public buildings and business blocks, the number of its banking houses, the cleanliness of its fine streets and the cheap rates of its big hotels. There is a quietness even on the business streets that contrasts which Chicago and other of our large cities and there is a likeness to our own people, in looks, dress and speech, that makes one seem at home. Newspaper patronage compares unfavorably with ours and the Globe which has the largest circulation in Ontario has a daily average circulation of but 23,000. Leaving Mr. and Mrs. Sawvel here, we took a train on the Midland, division of the Grand Trunk railway for Uxbridge, distant northeast forty miles and reached our destination at dark to find Alexander Skene, a cousin, awaiting us and in his smart conveyance were soon taken to his large farm home, a mile east of the town where we were warmly welcomed and most hospitably entertained.

FARMING IN ONTARIO.

The morning light enabled one to view the landscape. The locality permits an extended view of a country rising eastward into a ridge parallel to Lake Ontario and similar in appearance to southern Wisconsin. The soil near Toronto is sandy but beyond the range of hills bordering the lake at some distance, it is a brown loam easily cultivated and very productive. Barley and wheat yield heavy returns. The root crop is a chief dependence and carrots, beets and turnips for stock grow to great size while the crop of potatoes for quality and quantity is excellent. The Canada thistle is everywhere in evidence and survives the careful but vain attempts at its extermination. Shortness of the season prevents corn from ripening but the crop cut green, run through a machine, and closely packed in huge, deep cylinders called silos is preserved fresh and fed to stock during the long, severe winter. Nearly every farmer has his silo and many were busy cutting, hauling, chopping up stalks and ears and filling up these reservoirs of forage. Farms are worked in part by tenants at a rents of about $5 per acre on a lease of ten years; the tenant, also, pays the taxes which are burdensome. Fields are clean and show careful tillage. The latest and best farm machinery is used and a building is set apart where it is sheltered. Houses and barns are strongly built and the latter are of great size. In one barn in dimensions 90x120 feet with an enclosed and roofed yard of quarter size, every convenience seemed provided. Two men were busily milking and a herd of twenty cows standing in couples in double stalks were contendedly feeding upon stalls of green cut corn. The milk is at once taken to a room in which is a separator turned with a crank by hand. The cream passes into a deep narrow can for conveyance to the creamery while the milk yet warm is fed from a tank to calves and swine. One of the servants stated the dairy for August had netted $58.00. Stock are of the best breeds. This includes horses, cattle, sheep and hogs. Mr. Skene has pedigreed stock of all these kinds but prices are very low and there is apprehension of heavier tariff charges to shut them out from the advantages of the American market. Shipments are made to England but as here horses sell at low prices and a farmer driving a team of the largest, finest horses, ever seen by the writer in vain offered them at $150 each. Roads run north and south and east and west. Land is blocked in tracks of 100 acres. No division of ownership in lots is known. These tracks correspond to our sections and are known as concessions and the drawer of a note places upon it, the concession and number of his lot.

THE ART AMATEUR.

The Art Amateur is offering three months free to all persons sending in their subscription before January 1st. And looking at the October issue, now before us, we should certainly say that it is an offer well worth accepting. A better or more attractive number than this for the art student or art lover one could scarcely imagine. It fairly teems with practical information. Beginning with the color plates, we find an exquisite panel of American Beauty Roses, which is accompanied by another plate showing the progressive steges of painting it. This is an unique feature of The Art Amateur, and showing, as it does, "how a real artist paints a picture," it is simply invaluable to those learning to paint without a teacher. The third color-plate is, "Sunset in the Inlet," a delightful painting by Carl Weber. There are the usual eight pages of Working Designs for china Painting, Wood-carving, and Embroidery, etc. All this is merely supplimentary to the magazine proper. In it we find the first of a series of articles on "Elementary Drawing for Beginners," which we commend to all teachers in the schools; on "Drawing for Advanced students;" on the various methods of reproducing drawings for illustration in newspapers and magazines; "Hints to Young Sculptors," Marine Painting, Flower painting, China Painting, Wood-Carving, Bent Iron Work. Church Embroidery, The Framing of Water Colors, etc. For "The House" we find a view and description of a charming though inexpensive Dining Room, which is to be followed by a Drawing-Room, Library, and Bedroom, for it is an apartment in an ordinary "flat" that is described. In "My Note-Book," the editor, as usual, gives hints and notes which no one buys paintings or art objects generally can afford to miss. Price 35 cents. MONTAGUE MARKS, Publisher, 23 UNION SQUARE, NEW YORK.

Don't Take Our Word,

But ask your doctor if there is any cure for rheumatism. If a member of the old school, he will say there is none. If of the more modern and progressive practice, he will say that Drummond's Lightning Remedy for rheumatism, is the only known specific, and that its proprietors offer a reward of $500 for a case it will not cure. The preparation is both internal and external, consists of two large bottles—one month's treatment, and is sent by express to any address upon receipt of $5, Drummond Medicine Co., 48 Maiden Lane, New York. Stops Inflammation.

There is no medicine so often needed in every home and so admirably adapted to the purposes for which it is intended, as Chamberlain's Pain Balm. Hardly a week passes but some member of the family has need of it. A toothache or headache may be cured by it. A touch of rheumatism or neuralgia quieted. The severe pain of a burn or scald promptly relieved and the sore healed in much less time than when medicine has to be sent for. A sprain may be promptly treated before inflammation sets in, which insures a cure in about one-third of the time otherwise required. Cuts and bruises should receive immediate treatment before the parts become swollen, which can only be done when Pain Balm is kept at hand. A sore throat may be cured before it becomes serious. A troublesome corn may be removed by applying it twice a day for a week or two. A lame back may be cured and several days of valuable time saved or pain in the side or chest relieved without paying a doctor bill. Procure a 50 cent bottle at once and you will never regret it. Runaway

Frank Teeters, who resides on the old home farm west of town, was here this forenoon, and on his way home, he stopped at Hi. Cupp's, to call on young McComb, who is sick. While he was in the house, the horses in some way, broke the hitching post, and then broke loose, and started home on a run. They scattered the hog crates along the road, but at last accounts we cannot learn that anybody was hurt.

Nervous Prostration

Cured by Dr. Miles' Nervine.

Prolonged derangement of the nervous system not only affects the brain and mental powers, but develops disease in some of the vital organs. The most dangerous of these indirect results is when the heart is affected. This was the case of the Rev. N. F. Surface, Fawn River, Mich., who writes under date of Feb. 14, 1895:

"Fourteen years ago I had a slight stroke of paralysis. Overwork brought on nervous prostration. I was exceedingly nervous and the exertion of public speaking caused heart palpitation that threatened my life. I used two bottles of Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure for my heart trouble, and two of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine for my nervousness and feel better than I ever expected to feel again. I can speak for hours without tiring or having my heart flutter as it formerly did, and I have you to thank that I am alive today."

REMEMBER THAT

Spilled the Oysters.

Deputy Sheriff Platter had fun at Garrett Saturday. He went over there to serve some writs and among these were the writs to be served on the city of Garrett, through its officers. He especially wanted to serve a writ on W. J. Martin, city clerk, with a "duces tecum" string attached to it. This, in plain United States, means that the person "called" shall appear and bring his books with him. But this was just what the City Clerk did not care to do. So he kept out of the officer's way for some time. At last, when the officer had "called" all the others he saw Mr. Martin going towards home with a pail of oysters and a package of crackers. He at once followed up and Martin noticing this went faster and finally there was a lively chase. The oysters were spilled and scattered, but it was not oysters the officer wanted and Martin was followed to his door and once in his house defied the sheriff with naughty words. After he had cooled down, however, and saw the officer would not be put off, he came out and the writ was read to him. He will appear and bring his books, for it is poor policy to resist an officer or refuse to obey an order of the court.

For Young Teachers

We have often had occasion to mention the work of Co. Supt. Merica, with the fullest approval. The occasion comes now again, as he is now engaged in a special line of work and giving it fuller attention than he has ever before. Since the opening of the new school year, he has been making it a point to visit first, the schools of the inexperienced teachers—those who are teaching their first term. It is those who need and should have, the most and earliest help. A good word now, a little friendly advice and help at the beginning of the term, may, and probably will secure better work all the year. Except for those early visits, the beginner who is not doing his work properly, goes right on for months, perhaps for nearly the whole year, until the superintendent in the regular canvass of the county schools, happens to reach him. This may not happen, till next May. A little thought, will show anyone, the great value of this special work. We suppose that after these special visits and consequent special work, the superintendent will make the usual regular and systematic canvass of the county.

THE FERRIS WHEEL.

The famous "Ferris Wheel" is again running in Chicago, and people can ride up high enough to look over the "sky scraper" buildings once more. It has been put up in the north part of the city not far from Lincoln Park, though the people about there made a big kick against it, and even carried the matter into the local courts, it succeed in having its way. It is probably a permanent fixture and will be the delight of thousands, both old and young. Those who failed to see it, or take a skyward ride in it, during the world's fair, may still have a chance. It is one of the most wonderful mechanical things ever seen.

Dinner Only $22 00!

Frank Frederick is $22 00 Short Because He Went to Dinner.

While Frank Frederick, the South Side saloonkeeper, was at dinner today some one broke in the rear window of the saloon and took $22 in change that was in the drawer and a Smith & Weston revolver. There is a gang of nine tramps in town today and eight of them were noticed up town at noon. One young man sat in the saloon all forenoon, but whether he belongs to the gang or not is not known and whether he is the man who stole the money and revolver is not known. However, the man, money, and revolver is gone. We presume Sheriff Stroh is after the burglar.

AUBURN TO PETOSKEY

A BRIEF OUTLINE OF THE FISHING TRIP AND SOME OF THE SCENERY.

As noted last week, G. A. Bishop and John C. Lochner left last Wednesday afternoon for a fishing and sight-seeing trip up through Northern Michigan. We took the G. R. & I. train at Avilla at 3:47 and were soon out of the Hoosier state and our attention was directed to the Michigan scenery. But darkness was soon upon us, and at Grand Rapids we took a sleeper and saw no more of the country until we reached Petoskey. Here we stopped a few minutes and were again off. At 6:47 we reached Brutus, a small station, where we took breakfast. From Brutus to Burt Lake the trip was made in a bus, a distance of five miles. We have often heard our parents speak of pioneer life and corduroy roads, but it has never before been our privilege to ride over them. For five long miles we rode through the woods, the track being so narrow that the brush would touch us on either side. But after an hour or so we reached Burt Lake. Here we were quartered in an old log cabin in which John Johnson, who runs the boat livery lived. With Mr. Johnson we found very good board and beds, and what more was wanted. Mr. Johnson has twenty-two of the best boats that can be had and all furnished with cushions and rugs. He was formerly located at Douglase Lake a few miles north, but as fishing was not good there he purchased a tract of land on the south shore of Burt Lake where he has all of his boats. He has one of the finest landings on the lake. There is a gradual slope back about three hundred feet from the water, then a very large hill. This affords one of the very best locations for cottages. The lake view is good, nature has made this a model landing. There is an abundance of flowing springs, on this slope, and of the very best water. But this beautiful landing would be useless were it not for the fish that the lake contains. Most any day a person can row out into the lake and catch a nice lot of fish. They range in weight from two to twenty seven pounds. The lake has numerous weed beds and in these is where the fish are caught. Mr. Johnson has several men hired who are familiar with the lake and who row the boats for you just where you can catch the finny tribe. Auburn people know what kind of fish is caught there for a number of them have been there. Last July Al. Bishop and Bert Robbins caught sixty pounds in two days. Those who like the sport of fishing can not afford to miss Burt Lake.

About ten miles down the lake around the right curve is an old Indian village. It is said that this village is more than one hundred years old. About fifty families of Indians live there. A church has been erected and is supported by the government. These Indians are great fishers. Though they violate the laws, they think it much easier to catch fish by nets than by hook and line. Some interesting stories are told on them. It seems they are lead to do anything if plenty of whisky is furnished them. During the campaign a few years ago, the republicans thought they would get them to vote their way as they had always voted the Democratic ticket, and the evening before election took a few gallons of whisky into the village. But the whiskey had been "loaded," and Mr. Indians slept election day and woke up after the polls were closed, then too late to vote for any party. On returning from the extreme far end of the lake, a distance of ten miles, we were overtaken by darkness, and as we were gliding over the waves we saw the moon rising, as it was from the lake. One can not describe the grandeur of such a sight. Four days were spent in a most delightful manner on this trip. About seventy-five pounds of fish were caught. If nothing prevents we will make this same trip another year.

PAINTED HIM.

One of the Logansport papers has the following to say of an Auburn boy: Quite a mishap befel Charles Snell, the well fed cook at the Vendome restaurant yesterday afternoon. Charles, as one can readily discern with the naked eye, has a corpulency of the first magnitude. In other words, he has excessive obesity to such an extent that he has to edge sidewise through the ordinary doorway, in order to reach the interior. When the accident referred to occurred, he was trying to get through the front door of the restaurant while a stepladder surmounted by a painter with a gallon bucket full of black paint, stood in his way. The result was a collapse of the ladder and a sudden descent of the painter and paint. As ill luck would have it, the falling paint struck Charles squarely on the nape of his neck and the stream of pitchy blackness poured down his back in rivulets. The rest must be left to the reader's imagination. It is said to have required the combined efforts of four men with hoes and scrub brooms, the remainder of the afternoon, to place Charles again in a presentable condition.

The World's Fair Tests showed no baking powder so pure or so great in leavening power as the Royal.

Uxbridge is a solid built and compact town of 2,500 inhabitants. Prices of goods and groceries do not differ from our own. There are no saloons but each of the four hotels has its bar which pays a heavy license to the government and still makes it profitable, as drinking is common and whisky is the staple choice of the farmers. An electric light plant is operated by private parties. The lights are served till 11 p. m. and the cost to the town people is very reasonable. A man named Gould founded the town, became wealthy and has perpetuated his memory in establishment of a library and free reading room and his sons are leading citizens of the place. A feature of the hotel is a commodious free feed yard for convenience of farmers.

THE SCHOOLS.

Accompanied by Skene, the writer visited the High School of Uxbridge, which is separate and apart from the public schools. Introduced as an Indiana teacher and erstwhile County Superintendent of schools to the Principal W. G. Parks, he greeted me with cordiality remarking that it was a rare pleasure to meet an educator from the states and proceeded to show me through the building. Rooms are small but sufficient as no more than twenty pupils were present in any room. Seats were double and inferior. The blackboards were of excellent slate. Pupils are youthful but the advance class taught by Master Ferguson showed a proficience in scholarship. Noticing upon the board under the caption of "War of 1812," a list of questions and answers, the writer said: "I wish to see the view taken of this topic of common history as taught posterity by the other side" and in silence noted among others the following: "What were the respective forces?" "Canadians 8500 men, Americans, a large and disciplined army."

Inquiry was made relative to Indiana's school system and it was with satisfaction that some marked features of our advanced and progressive methods were explained to the teachers. In another and distant part of Uxbridge, we found the public school building badly located, and time worn, it has outlived its day and the ill constructed rooms, seats and narrow, high slits called blackboards are a reflection upon the people. A long direct stairway deeply worn by much travel leads to the upper rooms. Upon the walls hang picture and the red flags of Canada over the blackboards each as with us, patriotism to the children. Alexander McKee a veteran teacher well versed in his profession, has been principal for eleven years and is assisted by a corps of eight teachers, all women. They are paid a salary of $300 per school year and there are no promotions. The primary is considered as important as any other and commands the same recompense. Irregular attendance is a serious obstacle to uniform progress and children of five years and under prematurely sent to school to relieve parents of their charge and to hamper the work of the teachers. A high fence to the rear separates the play-grounds and a long roofed shed exposed to the weather is utilized by Prof. McKee as a drill ground.

THE FAIR.

A two days fair was held. One day was for entries, the other for display and inspection. The grounds are property of the town but the buildings belong to the agricultural association. Judges of stock are selected for experience and are from some distant town to avoid all grounds for charges of partiality and the race track is used only for voluntary and priceless tests of speed. The law forbids racing for money at fairs yet popular interest inclined in that direction and contests were observed with satisfaction by many people. The attendance was large, and well behaved. Exhibits of flowers, fruits vegetables, bread and other articles under roof were full and highly creditable. Making the rounds of the stock, many fine animals including Herefords, Jerseys, Ayershires and Durhams were seen among the cattle and the exhibit of sheep and swine was especially large and fine. A musical merry-go-round run by steam power was the delight of all ages from child to grey head and a rich harvest of half dimes.

RETURN

Returning, Buffalo was reached at night and good quarters found at the New Continental close to the Central depot and at 7:15 a. m. forty minutes behind time. "The Western Express" a solid through train from New York to Chicago set out for Ft. Wayne, 371 miles away. Near Dunkirk, Erie, Cleveland and all along from the shores of Lake Erie back to the hill, one looks out upon fruitless orchards and innumerable vineyards.

These vineyards vary in size from small patches to extensive fields. New grounds are being added and this famous grape region is as expansive as it is productive.

Picking is in progress. Baskets clustered upon the parts upholding the wires supporting the low, leafy vines and groups of men and women were busy filling other baskets which were later loaded upon wagons and hauled to the station for shipment. A fortune delay of the Lake Shore train to accommodate Auburn visitors to the races, enables us to reach the depot in ample time and we were soon at home again well satisfied with our outing.

DOINGS OF THE DAY.

SUMMARY OF THE NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Eventful Happenings in Every Known Hemisphere—Fires, Accidents, Crimes, Politics, Religion, Commerce and Crops, Sandwiched with Minor Affairs.

LIVES SNUFFED OUT.

A Terrible Accident in the Cleveland Rolling Mills.

Four men were killed and seven others probable fatally injured as the result of an unexplainable accident at the Cleveland, Ohio, rolling mills. The furnaces were carrying heavy fires, and the casting department was working a full force. Without warning, and in a manner wholly inexplicable the casting house, the largest building of the plant, collapsed, burrying many of its inhabitants in the debris. As quickly as possible relief came to the imprisoned men, and when all were rescued it was found that three were dead and eight badly injured. One of the injured men died soon after being removed. Of the killed, Charles Wakefield was cooked to death by molten metal. The killed are: Charles Wakefield, Vett Kesarth, Anton Gorman, middle aged man, not yet identified. The injured were taken to the hospitals and none of them can give their names.

A Plucky Woman.

The Southern Pacific station at Baden, ten miles south of San Francisco, was entered by two masked men, who requested the telegraph operator, Mrs. Leva Marshall, to hand over what money there was in the office. Mrs. Marshall immediately reached for her revolver, but the robbers anticipated her movement and opened fire upon the plucky lady, the first bullet striking her in the left arm just below the elbow. Unmindful of her wound, Mrs. Marshall returned the robbers' fire. Alarmed at the fusilade, the intruders fled. Six bullets were sent after them by the brave woman, but it is not known whether any of them were effective. The wounded heroine was conveyed to San Francisco on an engine. Her wound is not considered dangerous.

An Unnatural Wretch.

Catania (Sicily) special: A woman known as Gaetana Stomoli has been arrested for the wholesale poisoning of children with phosphorus. She administered the poison by mixing it with wine and prevailing upon the children to drink the mixture. Her victims already number twenty-three. It is stated that they all died in fearful agony. The woman has confessed to having committed the deed, and offered as an explanation that she wanted revenge for the death of two of her own children, who had been bewitched. A crowd of people attempted to lynch the unnatural wretch, and were prevented with great difficulty.

One Hundred Lives Lost.

San Francisco special: Private advices from Guaymas estimate that the steamers Diego, Mazatlan and another small gulf coaster, have been lost, with all on board. The crafts were right in the path of Sunday's hurricane, and nothing has been heard of them, though one was due at Guaymas, and the other at Mazatlan, some days ago. A number of miners, Americans among them, took passage on the steamers, and if it is true that the vessels went down, 100 lives have probably been lost. There is great difficulty in communication with the districts visited by the gale.

A Gang of Spanish Thieves.

Passengers by the steamship Mascotte, which has arrived at Key West from Cuba, report great excitement in Havana over the arrest of Chief of Police Trujillo, who is charged with defrauding the Government out of nearly $10,000. It is alleged that Trujillo's peculations have extended over a number of years, and that many of the most prominent Spanish officers of Havana are involved. It is believed when the matter is fully investigated that it will be found that Trujillo and his friends have stolen $100,000.

Killed by Lightning.

During an electric storm at Burgin, Ky., lightning struck the house of Carey Hunn, totally demolishing the upstairs part of the house and killing him instantly He was on the floor by the stove in the room asleep, and, strange to say, none of the other members of his family were hurt, though one of his little children was playing beside him, and others were around in other parts of the room. He leaves a large family of children in almost destitute circumstances.

The Gas Exploded.

As a freight train was nearing Athens, Ohio, Conductor James Burns, with a lantern, began examining some oil tank cars. The gas caught fire from the lantern and exploded. Conductor Burns was hurled from the train a distance of thirty feet and terribly bruised and burned and will probably die. The car was blown to pieces. The fire was put out before it had done further damage.

A Cruiser Captured.

The insurgents at Azerradero Bay, near Santiago de Cuba, captured a pilot boat commanded by a Lieutenant in the Spanish navy, and having twelve marines on board, which was doing cruising duty along the coast.

The New Opera Sphinx,

With all of the original scenery, will be at the Masonic Temple, Fort Wayne, Ind., October 22; "For Fair Virginia," October 21; Clara Morris, October 25.

Cut to Pieces.

John Demphey, a glassblower from Gas City, while crossing the Big Four tracks at Marion, Ind., was instantly killed.

Horribly Burned.

A pan of molten metal was upset at the Buffalo, N. Y., Cast Iron Works while it was being carried on an overhead track, and the contents spilled all over the floor. Martin Schplanski was horribly burned and was taken to the Fitch hospital.

Big Fire at Bremen, Ind.

The Holland Radiator works at Bremen, Ind., were entirely consumed by an incendiary fire. The loss is estimated at $150,000, and the insurance is only $2,500. All the wrenches of the hose carts were stolen, and no water could be obtained.

Holds It No Good.

Police Judge Stubbs of Indianapolis, holds that the section of the Nicholson law which prohibits the keeping open of a restaurant after 11 o'clock or on Sunday which is located in the same room with a saloon is invalid. His decision is based on Supreme Court opinions. An appeal was taken by the State.

Now Here is One for You.

At Logansport, Ind., Mary Kunze, was pronounced dead by her attending physician, after a long sickness from paralysis. Eighteen hours later, and just before the time of the funeral, she arose in her coffin and asked for a drink of water and is now rapidly recovering.

LET 'EM GO.

Gov. Clarke of Arkansas, Says the Pugilists Might Fight in the State House Yard.

Corbett and Fitzsimmons can fight in Arkansas without fear of going to prison. "You can say that I would not convene the Legislature in special session to stop it if they were to fight in the State House yard." Gov. Clarke used this language in reference to his probable action in the event that the Corbett-Fitzsimmons contest should be advertised to take place in Hot Springs. "I really do not know anything about it," he began, "but it looks, though, as if they meant to bring it off at Hot Springs. The fact that Mayor Walters and City Attorney Martin of Hot Springs, are in Dallas negotiating with the managers of the affair, indicates beyond doubt that Hot Springs wants it, and they will very likely get it."

"Would you interfere should they attempt to bring it of there?"

"In 1891 the Legislature passed an act making prize fighting a felony. I was in the Legislature at the time and voted for the bill. But the people were not satisfied with that law, for the very next session they repealed it and enacted in its stead a law reducing the offense to a misdemeanor. That is the law now and it will be enforced."

THREE MEN

Asphyxiated By Gasses in a Well Caused By an Explosion of Dynamite.

A thirty-foot water well on the farm of Claymeyer Wegman, living near Pemberville, Ohio, was shot with dynamite to increase the flow of water. Two hours after the charge of dynamite had been shot off Henry Fahle went down in the well to see what effect the explosion had had. Those at the top of the well waited anxiously for some word from Fahle, but none came. Lewis Wegman then decided to descend into the well and see what was the matter with Fahle. Mr. Wegman in turn was not heard from, and his brother, Charley Wegman, nothing daunted by the experiences of the other two men, descended into the well, and he, too, failed to return or indicate that he was alive.

The workmen then got ropes and tackle and very carefully began to explore the engulfing depths. The three men were found together at the bottom of the well, all dead. They had been asphyxiated by the gasses caused by the explosion of dynamite. Fahle and Charley Wegman were married and Lewis Wegman was single.

STATE OF TRADE.

The Future Does Not Seem to be Entirely Clear.

R. G. Dun & Co., in their weekly review of trade, says:

"The barometer gives indications that are not entirely favorable. Cotton goods go up with increasing evidence that the crop of cotton is short. Prices of other manufactured products, of wool, hides and leather, all show some decline, a general abatement in new orders being the principal cause. With an immense volume of business, not much exceeded in the largest month of the exceptional year, 1892, and with evidence that in several important branches the volume has surpassed that of any previous year, there is a growing uncertainty about the near future of industries. Money markets are neither strained nor threatening, foreign exchange no longer raises apprehension and all fears about the great northern crops are past. There have been few advances in wages of labor within the past months, and only a few works have been closed by strikes for an advance.

Schofield Scorched.

Major G. A. Armes, a retired army officer arrested some time ago on the order of Lieut. Gen. Schofield while acting as Secretary of War, was discharged from custody in Judge Bradley's court at Washington, on the prisoner's application for his permanent discharge on a writ of habeas corpus. The court's opinion was read from a carefully prepared written copy, and concluded with a vigorous denunciation of the order of Gen. Schofield. The quiet criticism of some army officers concerning the method of the arrest was transformed by the court into severe strictures upon the commanding officer whose personal "feeling" was held to be the only occasion for the arrest and confinement of Maj. Armes. From the order discharging Maj. Armes, Mr. J. N. Morrison of the Judge Advocate General's staff, the attorney for the Secretary of War, gave notice of an appeal.

Death in the Flames.

Fire which started from an unknown cause on the stage of the Old Comique Theater at Kansas City, resulted in the complete destruction of the building, $8,000 damages to an adjacent building occupied by Mrs. John Hughes as a saloon, and the death of Alvin E. Canaday, brother-in-law to Chief Hales and a member of fire company No. 1. The loss on the theater, which was a three-story brick, is $12,000; on scenery, $3,500. Beside these losses the Billy Rice Minstrel Company lost all of its scenery, wardrobe, and other effects, valued at $1,500 to $2,000. The explosion of three gas magazines used for calcium lights blew out the front wall and spread the blaze. The wall fell upon Canaday, and when finally extricated his skull was found to be broken and he was dead.

The Fight to Come Off at Hot Springs.

Dallas (Texas) special: The Florida Athletic club has moved its headquarters to Hot Springs, Ark., where it will hold its pugilistic carnival of three days, commencing October 31, the date originally selected and given out. All parties to the contest have fully agreed and the matter is settled.

Hot Springs (Ark.) special: The telegram received announcing that the Florida Athletic Club had decided to pull off the Corbett-Fitzsimmons fight here has caused general rejoicing. The mill takes place October 31, as originally intended. Mr. Stuart and his associates are here to arrange the details. Work has commenced on the big amphitheater.

Severe Earthquake.

A special from St. John's, N. F., says: A report has been received here stating that a severe earthquake shock has been felt in Ferryland. Bridges were destroyed, the repost says, and a large extent of the road bed was torn up. Traffic has been suspended. Ferryland is the capital of the New Foundland district of the same name. It is situated on the eastern coast of the Peninsula of Avalon, forty miles south of St. Johns. The town is one of the oldest in the island. It was founded by the celebrated Lord Baltimore when he was known only as Sir George Calvert, and he lived there until he went to Maryland.

A British Steamer Fired Upon.

Havana special: A dispatch from Kingston, Jamaica, dated September 27, announced that the Captain of the British steamer Alene of the Atlas Line, upon her arrival there, reported that his vessel had been fired upon by a Spanish gunboat the previous day. The gunboat appeared in the Alene's wake, and without warning fired three shots after her. The Alene promptly hoisted her colors and put about. The cruiser, according to the Captain of the Alene, approached to within a mile of her and then turned around and steamed away.

Destructive Hurricane.

A special dispatch from Guaymas, via Nogale, says: In a hurricane which swept over Lapaz, 184 houses were destroyed, four lives lost and about twenty-one persons injured. Nineteen crafts, including the American schooner, Czar, partly loaded with dynamite, were beached and a government cutter was sunk. Gardens and orchards were washed away. An iron safe containing $5,500 in Mexican dollars was washed over half a mile away, but recovered.

Gen. Mahone Dead.

Washington special: At noon Tuesday, Gen. William Mahone began sinking rapidly. He died at 1 o'clock. He had been totally unconscious for more than forty-eight hours previous to death, and passed away seemingly without pain. Mrs. Mahone, Butler and William Mahone, Jr., his sons, Mrs. O. M. McGill, his daughter, L. L. Maney of Southampton County, Va., a nephew, and Capt. Rogers, Secretary of the Virginia State Republican Committee, and former Secretary to Gen. Mahone, were at the beside when the end came.

Three Convicts Frightfully Mangled.

At Frankfort, Ky., while drilling out a blast in the city stone quarry that had failed to explode, three inmates of the Frankfort workhouse were almost blown to pieces. "Boots" Patterson had an arm shattered and several chunks of flesh torn off his shoulders and back. "Pink" Street had one eye and the side of his face blown off and will die. Perry Howard, besides having one arm shattered, had numerous small bits of stone blown into his flesh in various parts of his body.

Children Cremated.

At Snyder Station, thirty miles north of Tweed, Ont., the dwelling house occupied by Thomas Lindsey and family was destroyed by fire and six of the occupants were cremated. The family consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Lindsey and eleven children. Six of the children were burned to death. They were two young women aged 18 and 20, twin babies aged about 1½ years and two others. Peter Laberge, his son, and another young man, who had boarded with Lindsey, and the other members of the family had a narrow escape.

Cremated While Asleep.

A fire at th and Smith streets, Cincinnati, in a tenement house resulted in the burning to death of Mrs. Ponso, aged 80, and the fatal burning of Mrs. Davis, aged 30; Julia Davis, aged 19, and Raphael Davis, a boy aged 3, who will die. Ida Minconsky, aged 3, and Mamie Ponso, aged 19, were badly burned, but may recover. The fire originated on the fourth floor from an unknown cause. The building was partially saved. Property loss is small.

Big Strike in Belfast.

Three thousand engineers and their assistants in the ship building yards at Belfast went on strike, their employers refusing to concede their demand for higher wages. The other employes remained at work. The moulders have given notice that they will strike on the 18th inst., unless their wages are raised. The Clyde shipbuilders, who, it is stated, would cooperate with the Belfast men, are working yet.

Brutal Burglars.

At Piqua, Ohio, before daylight Friday morning three masked men entered the house of Barney Peters, aged 82, and bound and gagged him, with his housekeeper, Mrs. Mary Pfeistner, aged 62, and at the point of a pistol made them open their safe. They secured money and jewelry valued at $150 and valuable papers. The robbers then went to a neighbor's and stole a horse and buggy and escaped.

Killed Her Mother.

Mrs. Mary Knig , aged 43, murdered her mother, Mrs. Catherine Hart, aged 64, at Dayton, Ohio. Both women were drunk and quarreling and Mrs. Knight knocked her mother down with a piece of iron then picking up a chair beat her over the head, mashing her skull and brains. The woman was dead when the officers arrived. The daughter is in the city prison charged with murder.

The Elevator Fell.

An elevator in the building of the National Tailoring Company, on Franklin street, Chicago, fell 100 feet, fatally injuring a man and boy, and seriously injuring two other passengers. The victims were all shop employes. The car had reached the fourth floor when the cable snapped. The elevator was an old and rickety freight lift.

Income Tax Refunders.

The records of the Treasury Department show that 1,822 persons paid income tax, aggregating $77,130, before the adverse decision of the Supreme Court as to its constitutionality was rendered. Of the whole number, 709 have applied for and been refunded the amounts paid, aggregating $48,545.

Railroad Fatality.

W. S. Kitchen of Findlay, an agent of the Metropolitan Insurance Company, was killed at Ada, Ohio. While attempting to board a freight train in order to reach home he fell and was drawn under the train and received injuries from which he soon died. He leaves a mother, but no family.

Fairly Good Pay.

Each member of the Cleveland Baseball Club has received a check for $528, that being the individual share of the players from the temple cup games. The club's share of the receipts amounted to $8,453, which amount was divided between the sixteen players.

The Indianapolis Election.

Mr. Thomas Taggart was elected Mayor of Indianapolis by over 3,000 majority, and the balance of the Democratic ticket by a few hundred less.

MAHONE IS NO MORE.

FAMOUS SOLDIER AND STATESMAN DEAD AT WASHINGTON.

Was a Favorite in the Southern Army and Saved Petersburg When Apparently Defenseless After the Great Mine Explosion.

Picturesque Figure Gone.

General William Mahone died at his home in Washington Tuesday afternoon. He had been failing steadily since he was stricken with paralysis nearly a week ago, and it was known that death was only a question of time. The veteran, however, showed remarkable vitality and made a strong fight against the grim angel.

The country will long remember Gen. William Mahone as one of the most picturesque characters in public life during the last thirty years. Exceptionally slight in stature and frame, he has been a marked man in great assemblages. His peculiar style of dress, and especially his hat, attracted attention to him. This broad-brimmed, soft felt headgear seemed out of proportion to the tiny form beneath it. But beneath this shade sparkled a pair of the keenest eyes ever possessed by man.

Gen. Mahone marks an epoch in the history of the United States since the late war. He has been during the last quarter of a century the central figure in Virginia politics, and at one time he was in the center of one of the most violent political storms ever waged in Congress. He was in his 69th year. His favorite sobriquet was "Hero of the Crater," won by his wonderful courage in the attack on Petersburg, when the Federal forces sprung a mine beneath the Confederate defense. He fought like a tiger, and later historians give to him almost alone the credit of keeping Petersburg from the Union hands by repairing before sunset the shattered Confederate lines. He had joined the Confederate army at once after the secession, participated in the capture of the Norfolk navy yard in 1861, and raised and commanded the Sixth Regiment of Virginia. He was commissioned a brigadier general in March, 1864, and six months later became a major general.

At the close of the war he returned to his original work of engineering, and became president of the Norfolk and Tennessee Railroad. He was elected to the United States Senate in 1879. He was like a firebrand cast into a mass of dry tinder, and from the peculiar attitude that he at once assumed he caused one of the most bitter controversies and stubborn deadlocks ever known in the history of that body. Mahone at last acted with the Republicans and gave them the organization of the Senate. His course brought down upon his head the wrath of the Democrats, but the Republicans received him with open arms, and the Federal patronage in Virginia was turned over to him. Since that time he has been the Republican leader in Virginia. He served in the Senate until 1887, when he was defeated.

MARIA BARBERI'S APPEAL.

Alleged Discovery of Evidence Which May Turn Sympathy Against Her.

Among the cases which the New York Court of Appeals will be called upon to decide is that of Maria Barberi, recently convicted of the murder of her lover. Owing to the great provocation under which the crime was committed unusual sympathy has been enlisted in behalf of the prisoner, who is an ignorant Italian girl of nineteen years, unable to speak the English language. Over fifty thousand names have been affixed to a petition for executive clemency, but Governor Morton cannot legally interfere in the proceedings until after the Court of Appeals has taken action.

Although public sentiment is almost unanimously in favor of mitigating the severity of the decision of the lower court Assistant District Attorney John F. McIntyre claims to be in possession of evidence which, if well founded, would place the girl beyond the pale of sympathy.

BANDITS ROB A CAR.

CHICAGO ELECTRIC PATRONS BOLDLY PLUNDERED.

Murderous Brutality Shown by the Daring Marauders—Passengers Assaulted, Money, Watches and Diamonds Taken and Thieves Escape.

Bandits Shoot to Kill.

Four masked and armed men held up a street car on the Evanston electric line at Edgewater, a Chicago suburb, Monday night in true Western style. They succeeded in carrying off between $200 and $300, besides several gold and silver watches. Of the twenty-three persons aboard the car only three offered resistance, and one of these was shot and the other two badly beaten.

The highwaymen stopped the car in Evanston avenue at the corner of Berwyn. Evanston avenue between Montrose boulevard and Edgewater is a lonely place at night. The street is not paved, except in the car tracks, and there is no travel either by teams or pedestrians. When the men stopped the car two of them jumped on in front and two behind. The front men were masked, with white handkerchiefs tied over the lower part of their faces, while of the two in the rear one had a black mask and the other a red one. They all carried revolvers. The man evidently the leader, a tall, slender fellow, with deep sunken eyes and wearing a light overcoat, ordered the motorman, J. O. Merriman, into the car, threatening to shoot him if he disobeyed. Merriman, however, obeyed promptly, and the robber, following him in, immediately commanded everybody in the car to give up whatever of value he or she had in his or her possession.

In the meantime the two robbers on the rear platform had also driven the conductor, W. G. Osborn, inside, and then a robber stood at each door, threatening to shoot any one who attempted to get out, while the other two went down the aisle, grabbing watches from the men, searching their pockets for money, and seizing whatever women's pocketbooks happened to be in sight. After that the robbers had things their own way, and robbed the passengers at leisure. More than $500 in personal property and money was secured from the passengers. Some of the ladies had ear-rings torn from their ears.

Passengers Are Dazed.

For a moment nobody attempted any resistance. The men in the car seemed dazed and the women, of whom there were seven, did considerable screaming. Finally, when the robbers came to N. O. G. Johnson, of Galesburg, Ill., who is in Chicago visiting friends at Edgewater, and whose wife was with him, he strongly objected to parting with a valuable watch and $60 which he had in his pocket. The robber grabbed him by the shoulders and Mr. Johnson struck at him with his fist. The robber replied with a heavy blow with the butt end of his revolver, striking Mr. Johnson under the left eye and at the same time his companion beat him badly over the head. Just then A. E. Westman also offered resistance and was set upon and also badly beaten.

He had a cane in his hand which he attempted to use against the robbers, but one of them took it away from him and used it against himself. Just then Thos. P. Nesbitt made the strongest fight which had yet been made against the robbers. Mr. Nesbitt is a man fully six feet tall, with broad shoulders, and built like an athlete. He jumped up from the rear end of the car, overthrew one of the robbers who was in his way, gave another one a blow which knocked him against the side of the car. The robber in the light overcoat, who seemed to be the leader of the gang, leveled his revolver at him and fired one shot. The bullet took effect in Mr. Nesbitt's left thigh, and, while inflicting only a flesh wound, still brought him to the ground.

The whole affair took five minutes. When the robbery was completed the highwaymen all got off the front platform, taking with them the lever with which the motorman controlled the motor. They also swung the trolly off the wire and cut the rope, leaving the car in darkness and stationary on the track.

UNCLE SAM'S MITTS ON.

Prize Fighters Will Not Be Allowed to Meet on Federal Domain.

Commissioner Browning of the Indian office has taken prompt and decisive action to prevent the Corbett-Fitzsimmons prize fight taking place in the Indian Territory. He has prepared a letter of instructions to Agent Wisdom at Muscogee, I. T., directing him to see that the laws are enforced and to eject forcibly any intruders who may enter the Indian country for the purpose of creating a disturbance or engaging in anything that may be detrimental to the Indians. The commissioner states that the statutes of the United States are ample to cover the situation and to prevent the fight. The agent will have at his back not only the Indian police but all the United States troops necessary to eject the fighters.

The statutes give the United States authority to keep out of the Indian Territory all persons whose presence would be detrimental to the peace and prosperity of the Indians. The commissioner says there is no doubt that the presence of the prize fighters and the gang that would follow them into the Indian Territory would be very detrimental to the Indians and that it is therefore the duty of the Indian office to keep them out. He says that the agent at Muscogee has not as much authority as the agents on reservations, but nevertheless has enough to prevent the fight taking place in the Territory of the five civilized tribes. The commissioner intends also to notify all the governors and head men of the five civilized tribes that they must not allow the fight to take place and must assist the United States authorities in preventing it.

His Wife in Flames.

John Parr, a farmer residing four miles south of Sheredan, was awakened by his wife the other morning at 3 o'clock. He arose and went to a field to cut corn, leaving his wife lying on the bed. He continued his work for a time, when, glancing toward the house, he saw fire. He at once returned to the house and found the water closet in flames and his wife burned to death. When first discovered in the burning building she was sitting on the floor with her feet straight out in front, her body and head leaning back against the seat behind her and her arms folded across her breast in an attitude of peaceful repose. Her position indicated that she must have been wholly insensible and suffered no agony from the torture of the flames. After Mr. Parr left the house she evidently went to the kitchen and lit the gas in the cook stove, as it was found burning later. It is thought possible that she may have accidentally fired her clothing at that time. The remains were burned beyond recognition.

Minor State Items.

The quality of oil found at Muncie proves to be good.

According to its city directory Wabash has 10,000 inhabitants.

Kokomo bloodhounds ran down a gang of thieves near Colfax.

Holland radiator works at Bremen were destroyed by an incendiary fire.

Peter Renner, 64, was found dead in a chair at his home near Columbus.

Albert Robinson ran up a flight of stairs at North Manchester and dropped dead.

Hancock County will next year build a new Court-house at an expense of about $125,000.

A freight wreck on the L., D. & W. road occurred near Bloomington, and five cars were wrecked.

Elkhart County is to be defendant in a number of suits for damages on account of the Bristol bridge disaster.

Eliza Smith, a colored servant girl at Alexandria, burned to death. Her clothing caught fire from a stove.

Frank Bennett, living near Helmer, who was terribly bitten by dogs while gathering nuts, died of blood-poisoning.

A big gas well has been struck eight miles north of Farmland. It is said to be the best well in Randolph County.

The Chase memorial fund has been completed. Trustee Atkinson has received $2,165 in cash. A house in Wabash costing $2,100 has been bought for Mrs. Chase.

Johnson Orr, a wealthy and aged farmer of near Billingsville, while driving across the railway, was run down by a train and crushed to death. The horse escaped unhurt.

The demand for laborers at Alexandria by the new factories just starting up is so far beyond the immediate supply that steps are being taken to bring several car loads of men from Chicago and St. Louis.

William Whitney, who claims his home to be at Washington C. H., O., was sentenced to two years in the penitentiary at Washington, for bigamy. One of his wives in Daviess County and the other at Washington C. H., O.

Isaac Doddridge, aged 68, years, who lives east of Milton, sold 2,500 bushels of wheat and hauled it to the mill himself. He has also during he summer built seventy-five rods of stone wall, laying every stone unassisted.

While out hunting, Samuel Cromwell, a farmer, living near Brazil, was attacked by a ferocious wildcat. Mr Cromwell succeeded in killing the animal, which measured three feet from the tip of the nose to the root of the tail.

Mrs. Catherine Peters, a pioneer of Cass County, wife of Major A. B. Peters, died at her home in Logansport. Death was unexpected. Mrs. Peters fell dead from her doorstep presumably from an attack of apoplexy. She was 75 years old.

David Shumaker, a young man residing east of Union City, accidentally shot and killed himself while out hunting. He was standing near a stump watching for a rabbit, with his right hand over the muzzle of his gun. The piece was in some way accidentally discharged, and the load passed through his hand, entering his left lung.

As Scott Mann, aged 15, and his cousin, and intimate companion, Marshall Menefee, aged 11, were returning from squirrel hunting, the rifle carried by the elder boy slipped from under his arm, and, in his effort to catch it, he touched the trigger, and the bullet was sent into the heart of young Menefee, who was following close behind.

Gas well No. 2, for the bottle factory at Albany, drilled in recently, has developed into a gusher, and is probably the strongest and best one in this field. It will show a pressure of some 330 pounds, and has a capacity for more than 15,000,000 cubic feet per day. A good vein of oil was found while drilling for gas west of town. The well was shot and resulted in an oil well of fifty-barrel capacity, and the flow is said to be increasing. This is the first oil well in this vicinity.

There is the worst epidemic of hog cholera in the vicinity of North Salem ever known. Several farmers have lost from thirty to 250 animals. Andrew Page, who lives just south of that place, has lost 250. Other farmers shipped their hogs before they were ready for market in order to avert complete loss. The disease seems to be extending to other neighborhoods and pigs are dying in every direction except to the north. The loss will foot up several thousand dollars and there is no abatement of the disease. People living in that vicinity will have to buy hogs for their winter meat from other neighborhoods.

An attempt was made near Cockran, Ind., to wreck the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern express. The engine struck a dynamite cartridge which had been fastened to the inner rail. Engineer Tom Higson and his fireman were badly stuned. The fireman was unfitted for work. Great damage was done to the engine. A steel rail was blown out of place and a hole blown in the road. Fortunately the cars did not leave the track. The motive of the attempt was evidently robbery. Several suspicious characters were seen by the train men about the place, but no attempt at robbery was made by the theives when they saw that the train was safe.

Venezuela and Monroe Doctrine.

The English press seems disposed to ridicule the Monroe doctrine. But England may soon learn that it is no laughing matter.—Boston Globe.

The question now for Great Britain to consider is whether it shall be a Dunraven fluke, an arbitration of the boundary dispute or ironclads and coffee.—Washington Times.

The St. James' Gazette wants to know "what the blessed Monroe doctrine is?" When it actually finds out it will probably use a "harder" adjective to describe it.—New York Journal.

If, however, there be genuine ignorance on this subject among intelligent Englishmen, we are inclined to believe that they stand in the way of receiving ample instruction on this point in the near future.—Mail and Express.

Though there is no indication that our diplomats have done anything in particular the people have prepared an ultimatum and are ready to enforce it. It is that England shall never control the mouth of the Orinoco or any other American river south of the Canadian line.—New York World.

To Americans generally it seems plainly evident that the British Government's claim rests on a small foundation; and if the British Government should send an army to invade Venezuela, the justice and propriety of the Monroe doctrine would be brought in question.—Boston Advertiser.

The American people are weary and ashamed of the immunity that these foreign marauders have so long enjoyed upon the western hemisphere. They want it withdrawn, once for all, and they want the United States to come forward as the champion and the protector of free government in the world. There is no desire here to have Mr. Olney insist upon arbitration with England. What we desire is that Mr. Olney shall draw a dead line and then put a man there with a gun.—Washington Post.

What Peary Accomplished.

Though he returns without laurels from his Arctic explorations, he has evidently left no effort untried to accomplish what he undertook to do.—Boston Herald.

Peary says he will make no more Arctic explorations. A wise decision. He has accomplished nothing, and should retire from the field.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Peary's disappointment over the unsatisfactory termination of the expedition is unconcealed, but all admit that he is not responsible for the failure.—Grand Rapids (Mich.) Herald.

It will require a reading of the detailed story to understand what these explorers went through, but not many will understand why they were willing to go through it, and to go again.—Terre Haute (Ind.) Express.

Lieutenant Peary has returned to civilization in safety, bringing nothing with him but a sheaf of excuses and complaints of dreadful hardships; but as no more than could have been expected of him, there need be no disappointment felt that he comes home empty-handed and forlorn.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

But Lieutenant Peary in what he represents is magnificent. If you stop to think how many of the great and useful discoveries in the history of the world have been incidentally made by fervid explorers of the unknown who sought either the impossible or the useless, you get an idea of the value of the spirit which is in Peary.—Detroit Tribune.

Some of the institutions of the country will be the richer by the deprivations and labors of Peary and his Arctic fellow tourists; the general fund of knowledge about "Greenland's icy mountains" will be increased throughout the civilized world, and Mrs. Peary will be rejoiced to find her long-lost, self-expatriated husband safely returned to the land of civilization, good food and rapid transit.—Albany (N. Y.) Journal.

Summed up, the results of Peary's two years' work are the information that Greenland is covered with a thick ice-cap, that traveling in that country is extra hazardous and tremendously difficult, that the snowfall is phenomenal, the storms terrific and the general tendency of the weather abominable, that game is scarce, the cold excessive, and that if one does not take with him a large supply of provisions he suffers horribly.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Recognition of Cuba.

The United States by good rights ought to recognize the Cuban belligerents.—South Bend Tribune.

The United States has not yet recognized Cuba as a belligerent. Yet Spain accorded the Southern Confederacy that recognition in 1861.—Denver Times.

The position occupied by our government with reference to Cuba is not in the slightest degree representative of the sentiment of the people of the United States.—Scranton Tribune.

All they ask for is munitions of war and such encouragement as Spain made haste to give the Southern Confederacy in 1861, and we hope they will get what they want.—Providence Telegram.

This country should instantly recognize the Cuban patriots and take measures to protect them against a horde of outcasts who, unrestrained, might turn Cuba into an Armenia. This is Spain's crowning disgrace.—Albany State.

This state of affairs is not likely to strengthen the Spanish position in Cuba, and will eventually cause our government to permit this country to become a recruiting ground for insurgent armies which will soon crush the power of Spain on the island.—Scranton Times.

Spanish efforts to prevent the recognition of Cuba indicate a belief that such action would involve something more than moral support. What the oppressors do not want is a pretty good thing for Uncle Sam to do, and the Cubans will appreciate it when it is done.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Keir Hardie, Socialist.

J. Keir Hardie has come to this country to preach socialism. He will soon find out that he cannot get a congregation.—Cincinnati Tribune.

Keir Hardie says he has come to this country to learn. This nails down the lie according to which the object of his visit was to talk.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

James Keir Hardie, the British socialist, says that Chicago is responsible for his visit to America, and Chicago has apologized to the rest of the country.—Fond du Lac Commonwealth.

Keir Hardie is disappointed with New York. Judging from the limited amount of space accorded Keir's doings and sayings by the newspapers New York is also disappointed with Mr. Keir Hardie.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

The presence of Keir Hardie "in our midst" is one of the picturesque excrescences of the labor movement in this country and in England. The time has gone by when any talkative person posing as an apostle of labor or a champion of the workingman is received seriously.—New York Mail and Express.

CHAPTER III.

Nora Dene had been married nearly a year. So strangely had the marriage come about that often she herself was puzzled to account for all the motives that had urged her on to such a rash and unconsidered step.

She had been engaged in the first instance to Major the Hon. Barry Larron, also of the the —th Hussars—a man more than double her age, and rendered gloomy and suspicious by a former unlucky incident in his life. It had been his strangely urgent, even selfish exacting love that had fascinated her. She had thought his passion the deeper that it had showed itself in such an uncouth form, contrasting so markedly with the gentle, almost slavish devotion that was offered her by other lovers. For awhile she flattered herself that she could tame this savage Orson, and render him subservient to all her whims and fancies. But time disproved this, and she became impatient under his jealousy, and rebelled against the strict supervision he deemed it necessary to keep over her actions. Girlishly unheeedful of the consequences, she played upon his fears, thinking to punish him by giving more cause for his suspicions, and when remonstrated with she only laughed.

"I will be an old man's darling if you like," she told him, saucily; "but nothing shall persuade me to be an old man's slave."

She was so innocent of evil that she did not understand the extent of his doubts.

She flirted with such openness that the veriest tyro could not have been misled, more especially as she so artlessly betrayed her love for her fiance at every turn; he was the only one who was blind enough to doubt her.

At last a crisis came. He had forbidden her to dance, an exercise of which she was passionately fond, and she had not rebelled, for even to herself it seemed selfish to indulge a taste he could not share. Now, not content with that, he told her he objected to her singing before any one but her own family.

Then the girl grew rebellious, and refused to comply with such an unreasonable request. That same evening, in defiance of his wishes, she sung at a large party, and when he showed evident displeasure, made no effort to conciliate him.

The next morning he wrote to her, saying that her love of gaiety and craving for admiration were incompatible with the life he should wish his wife to lead, and that he could not trust her with his happiness and honor.

Only one other officer was with him on detachment at Hattiabad, and to him he declared his intention of giving her up; but his confidence had been met with indignant warmth.

Gerald Dene had known Nora Molnet all her life, and was furious at what to him seemed an unwarrantable insult. The wedding day was fixed—was to have been in that same month indeed; and he knew how her fair fame would suffer if she were jilted so at the last moment. The merely friendly feeling he had felt for her seemed to develop in a moment to almost brotherly affection. Had she been indeed his sister, he could not have more keenly resented Major Lorron's behavior.

There appeared only one way to show his sense of the cruel injustice of such conduct, and to silence malicious tongues. He must offer to become her husband in Major Larron's stead.

Undeterred by fear of ridicule or rebuff, he put his chivalrous resolve into execution. He told the girl of the shame he felt that one belonging to the regiment should have behaved so badly, and how utterly he disbelieved in the truth of the accusations against herself.

"In proof of which," he added, gravely, "I can only say that if you will marry me, Nora, I will do my best to be worthy of your confidence and to win your love."

And she had consented to the strange proposal, knowing that she was not brave enough to face the jeers or pity of society when the fact transpired that she had been jilted. And she thought that Gerald Dene loved her.

Her pleasure was his first thought, her wishes his own consideration. He was always at hand to do her service, and gave her no opportunity to discover how he was getting more necessary to her every day. Although formerly a keen sportsman, he now seldom or never went out with his rifle or rod for fear she should begin to think about the past, and find leisure to repent the step she had taken.

That one short year had changed her terribly. The shock to her pride had been so great that she had seemed to grow suddenly old, caring for none of those things which had delighted her before. Her whole being had become chastened, and the laughter quenched upon her lips.

She had never danced since her marriage. She sung sometimes, but without that happy ring which had made her singing so pleasant to the ear. Certainly she had grown very staid—too staid, thought her young husband, as he watched her furtively at times.

The young wife had made no women friends in Alipore. She was in fact rather difficult to please, but she took Jane to her heart directly, liking her the better that she was so free from young-ladyism—so fresh and unspoiled by contact with the world. Having been so long in her convent school, she had contracted a nun-like shyness and gentle, winning way that added to her charm.

Colonel Prinsep, too, saw a good deal of his protege, as Mrs. Dene persisted in calling Jane to herself; he had always thought her more than ordinarily pretty, and soon discovered that she had other claims to his admiration. She was so bright and unaffected, and above all so imbued with sense of his superiority, than which nothing goes so surely to a man's heart. Most people find it difficult to resist flattery, when delicately administered; and in this case the homage was quite unconsciously rendered, and so of double worth.

Mrs. Dene smiled sometimes at Jane's enthusiasm, yet on the whole agreed with her. She had always liked Colonel Prinsep, though she had never seemed to know him so well as of late, now that he so often joined them in their rides and drives. Besides which they were acting together in a comedietta, and Jane often assisted at their impromptu rehearsals. The Colonel was notably good at theatricals, but this was Mrs. Dene's first effort, and she had been very unwilling to accept the part; only the fact that the performance was for the benefit of a regimental charity, and that her husband wished it, at last persuaded her.

Very pleasant were the afternoons spent in these rehearsals. Jane would be seated at the further end of the room as audience, her eyes fixed demurely on the little yellow book, listening with unnecessary intentness to the Colonel's drawling tones, which were becoming dearer to her than she well knew. Sometimes they referred a knotty point to her, and had she been observant, she must have noticed that Colonel Prinsep always adopted her suggestions. Once Mrs. Dene laughingly appealed to him, whether Jane would not make the better actress of the two; but he only smiled, and forebore to express an opinion.

Often he found himself glancing around to see if she were near; in church he listened almost unconsciously for her voice, which was at times tremulously upraised; and once as he stood near her at an afternoon "At Home" at their mess, it entered into his mind that, being so slim and lightly made, she ought to be a pleasant partner.

He strolled toward her slowly.

"You are not dancing," he observed, and smiled a little consciously as at the sound of his voice she turned, her expression betraying a delight that all her demureness could not hide.

"Some one did ask me," she assured him, gravely.

"I do not doubt it. Was he such a bad performer that you refused?"

"It was more of my own shortcomings I was afraid. You see"—blushing—"I have never learned to dance."

"Dancing is an art that requires no teaching; it comes by instinct to—to such as you."

"I wish I could believe so," she answered, quickly, too eager to show embarrassment at the compliment implied.

"Try with me"—persuasively.

"I dare not; besides, I could not. I am with Mrs. Dene, and she is not dancing—the gentleman she introduced to me would be offended——"

"Half a dozen bad reasons don't make one good one," he laughed, gayly. "Come."

He put his arm round her waist, and drew her forward unresistingly. When the first awkwardness was over she enjoyed it, as he could not fail to see by the flush on her cheeks and the sparkle in her hazel eyes.

When they stopped at last he was smiling, as men will smile when they have broken down one of the weak walls which women love to erect, often more as a precaution than a defense. Then almost immediately his mood changed, and he led her back to her chaperon without making any remark.

At that moment Captain Dene returned, and holding out his cigar-case to the Colonel, led the way on to the veranda. It was quite dark, and a warm wind rustling among the trees prevented their footsteps from being heard. Mrs. Dene, unconscious of their presence, answered Jane's inquiry.

"You were exactly describing Colonel Prinsep," she said, laughing lightly. "So he is your ideal of a perfect man."

A discreet cough from her husband startled both, and they turned to see that he and Colonel Prinsep were close behind them.

CHAPTER IV.

Colonel Prinsep drove home that evening with a strange sensation of anger tempered with involuntary amusement. Like most men, he disliked being put in a ridiculous position, and strenuously objected to being the declared hero of a romantic girl, however charming he thought her. The daughter of his own quartermaster, too!

For several days after this he saw nothing of her.

The Colonel had driven out about ten miles to look at some ground where the regiment were to practice reconnoitering, and he was on his homeward road when, turning a corner, he came upon something that made his horse suddenly swerve.

It was Jane, seated on the ground, and near her stood a bamboo cart with broken shafts.

There had evidently been some accident, for the pony and syce that must have once belonged to it had disappeared; and she herself did not attempt to rise when he came within sight.

"You are hurt!" exclaimed the Colonel, jumping down from his high seat, and going hastily toward her, his arm through his horse's reins.

She turned her pretty, piteous face toward him, and there was something so appealing and confiding in her glance that his own insensibly grew warmer.

"You are hurt!" he repeated, with more solicitude in his tone than had been expressed before.

"Only frightened, I think. I am always timid driving. The pony kicked over the traces and upset the cart—and, oh, I am so very glad you came!"

She put one hand in his as he held them out to help her, but she grew so pale as she stood up that he did not withdraw his support.

"I am afraid I am a little hurt," she confessed, meeting his anxious gaze; "I wrenched my foot when I fell out, and my arm——"

She broke off with a faint cry as she tried to move it.

"We must get you home at once," said Colonel Prinsep, promptly. "But your pony—did you see in what direction he made off?"

"The syce took him home to bring back help. They will be so anxious when they see him without me."

"Then we will start at once."

He almost lifted her into his dog-cart, and drew the rug round her gently, fastening his own overcoat loosely round her neck, while she neither deprecated his attentions nor evaded them.

He had seated himself beside her, and gathered up the reins.

"Are you ready?" he asked her, gently.

She nodded assent, and they drove on quickly through the chill, fresh air.

The next morning, in spite of the doctor's injunctions and her mother's alarmed entreaties, Jane insisted upon being dressed in a loose tea-gown, so that she might lie on the drawing-room sofa; may be an indefinite idea of missing the Colonel if he called had something to do with her unwillingness to play the invalid.

Though scarcely conscious that it had gone so far, she made no secret of her liking for him. He was too far above her for her to be ashamed of the feeling. She would as soon have thought of blushing over her love for a favorite poet or celebrated painter. She could worship this "bright, particular star" without any ulterior intention.

It was one o'clock—the fashionable time for calling in India—when she heard voices in the adjoining room, and presently the curtain was lifted, and Mrs. Knox came in.

"Do you think you are well enough to see any one?" she asked, doubtfully.

"Oh, yes," answered Jane, eagerly, but her countenance fell as she saw the visitor who followed swiftly on her words was Sergeant Lynn.

"You did not expect me?" said the young man, quickly, his wits sharpened by jealousy and pain.

"It—it was very good of you to come."

"Of course I came directly I heard of the accident. Does it hurt you much?"—pointing to the bandaged arm.

"One does not generally break a limb without suffering from it," put in Mrs. Knox, tartily.

"She did not seem to suffer much last night."

"Did you see me?"

"Yes, I saw you and the Colonel I thought he was never going; and you stood looking at him as though—as though——"

The young fellow stopped, at a loss for words, and Mrs. Knox looked keenly at her daughter to see if there was any meaning in what he had hinted.

But there was more of scorn than confusion expressed in Jane's face; and the half-formed suspicion that for a moment made her heart beat with excitement and hope was strangled in its birth.

"I will leave you two to fight it out," Mrs. Knox said, and went from the room.

"Jacob, how could you?" flashed out Jane, as she heard the inner door close behind her mother.

But the Sergeant stood erect and unmoved by her anger, which perhaps he took as a confession of guilt.

"You blush now, but you did not think it worth while to blush when the Colonel's arm was round your waist," he sneered in reply.

"He did it to support me, that my arm might not pain me as we jolted over the rough roads."

The blush had faded from her face, and she spoke hesitatingly, as though afraid to say too much; but he was not slow to see her displeasure at the coarseness of his allusion, though he would not immediately give in.

"The roads are good enough," he muttered, gruffly.

"We came from Brountra," said Jane, with dignity. "I remember you said yourself that the road was a disgrace to the cantonment."

The next moment he was at her feet protesting that he had never doubted her; it was only the cruelty of his position that had tortured him beyond endurance. It was too hard that any jackanapes who could call himself a gentleman might approach her when he pleased while he must stand aside.

Jane found the apology more distasteful than the fault it was meant to condone.

"Let us talk of something else," she said at last, wearily.

"And you have quite forgiven me?"

She nodded her head.

Why Coast Defenses.

Passing through Chicago, returning to Washington from a long tour of the western country, the general of the army said to The Chronicle: "Our seacoasts are very inadequately protected from the shore, but this will be remedied as rapidly as Congress makes the appropriations. Especially would it be wise to fortify the Pacific coast strongly. A good start has been made at San Francisco, but on Puget sound there are no fortifications." The general asserted further, upon what warrant The Chronicle does not discover, that "it has become the settled policy of the Government to protect these great ports or provide for their protection as rapidly as possible. Many of them are most inadequately fortified, some not at all, and a few strongly."

Who is menacing the coasts of the United States? Who has menaced them since the close of the war of 1812? What possible danger can either littoral, Atlantic or Pacific, suffer? Who is there to molest us or make us afraid?

Gen. Schofield's talk is like that of all professional soldiers. They seem to think that there must be eternal preparation for war. Under the pressure of such opinion as Schofield's the United States has been at times at the expense of erecting fortifications upon the coast. These in the progress of time have become obsolete. They never received the fire of a hostile gun. They were so much of the fruit of industry thrown to the dogs, and these not dogs of war.

The United States have no foreign commerce in bottoms of their own, they have no colonies, they have no entanglements. There is no more need, present or prospective, so long as the United States behave themselves, of coast fortifications than there is of a coat of mail for the general of the army.

As long as the United States are just and free they will need no coast fortifications. To waste the money of the people, wrested from them through the process of taxation, for the purpose of accommodating generals of the army with fortifications that in the process of time will rot to the ground unassailed would be a crime.—Chicago Chronicle.

She Learned Too Much.

There is an old saw that "a little learning is a dangerous thing." That learning how to write can sometimes do damage, is shown by an incident told recently of a down-east woman whose husband was a soldier. The husband, though fairly entitled to one, was of an independent nature and never applied for a pension. After his death, the widow made application, and, as she never learned to write, signed the papers by making her mark. Everything was proceeding all right until in course of time a call came for some additional papers. The woman had been taking lessons in writing in the meantime, and had then progressed far enough to write her name. So she very proudly executed the new papers by putting down her written signature, and no doubt thought Uncle Sam's officials would be pleased to see how she had improved. The answer came right speedily, as most bad news does. Her claim was rejected for informality and deceit, because she had at first made her mark, when she should have signed her name. She hopes to be able to make the pension officers see how the thing occurred, but has not yet been able to do so.—Lewiston Journal.

THE ISLAND OF CUBA.

LAND WHOSE PEOPLE STRUGGLE FOR FREEDOM.

The Immense Mineral and Agricultural Resources that Await Development—The Black Record of Spanish Cruelty and Oppression.

Rich in Resources.

The civil war in Cuba will probably serve still further to devastate an island which the Spaniards during past years have done all they could to ruin.

THE GREAT CATHEDRAL IN HAVANA.

It is a pity, for tropical America does not contain a fairer land than that over which the flames of civil war are now spreading. No matter what may be the result of the war, it will leave the island in a condition to recover from which many years of prosperity will be required. There are thousands of men now living who vividly remember the status of the Southern and border States of this country after the civil war, and when such desolation is possible in a land where war is conducted with some regard to civilized methods, the question may well be asked, What ruin will not be wrought when the conflict is waged with the savagery peculiar to the Spanish forces?

The general physical characteristics of Cuba are too well known to need description, but few, even of better informed readers, are aware of the resources of the island or of the extent to which it is blessed by nature in the matter of climate and vegetable productions. We are accustomed to think of Cuba as a hot country, situated as it is under the tropics, and the common impression is correct to the extent that the mean average temperature of the year is higher than in countries further north, but the climate is more equable, there are not those sudden variations that in many parts of the United States are so severe on the human constitution. In Havana, for example, the average temperature of the hottest month is 84 degrees, of the coldest, 72. In Santiago de Cuba, a city often mentioned in the war dispatches, the average of the year is 80; of the hottest month, 84; of the coolest, 73. These are high figures, but not very high for an island lying in equatorial regions and surrounded by water that is warm to the hand all the year round. To a stranger from a dry country a feature more objectionable than the steady heat is the tremendous rainfall. The geographical and topographical situation of Cuba provides two seasons only, the wet and the dry. During the latter, rains are not frequent, being atoned for, however, by the abundance of the dew, but in the rainy season Jupiter Pluvius seems to turn himself loose to excel all previous efforts, and from 125 to 140 inches of rain are not uncommon, there being about 102 days when the rain comes down, not in drops, but in sheets, in masses, in tubfuls, at a time, as though the windows of the heavens were opened and the floods of the great aerial deep had broken loose. So abundant is the rainfall, in fact, that, as a recent traveler remarks, the wonder is that any island remains; that the whole is not dissolved and carried off into the sea. But in Cuba no one minds the rain, save only to go in when it rains, the necessary knowledge to accomplish this feat being common alike to Spanish resident and native inhabitant.

IN A CIGARETTE FACTORY.

Owing to the curse of Spanish misrule, the natural resources of the island are not even completely known, to say nothing of being developed. Enough has been ascertained, however, to justify the statement that almost every metal and mineral used in the arts and sciences is to be found on the island. Gold has been discovered in several rivers; silver in four or five of the mountain ranges; copper exists in abundance in a hundred different localities; quicksilver, lead, antimony, zinc, iron ore, magnesia, ochre, alum and several different varieties of marble, some little inferior to the best Italian, have been found in different sections of the island. None of these natural resources, however, have been developed as they should be, for the policy of Spain has been rather to repress than to encourage the progress of the island and its people, and the consequence is that the native wealth of Cuba, while known to be immense and varied, is, as yet, largely a matter of speculation. Such is not the case, however, with regard to those products, which, by the labor of man, the arable soil may be compelled to yield. The topography of Cuba is so varied, composed, as the island is, of plains almost at the level of the sea, of plateaux many hundreds of feet higher, and of mountain ranges, some of which attain an altitude of 8,000 feet, that any product of the tropical, subtropical or temperate regions may be raised, and from the banana of Mexico to the barley of Norway, all are at the command of the Cuban farmer. As might be expected, however, by far the greater portion of the Cuban field products are such as are appropriate to the geographical situation of the island, and tobacco, bananas, oranges, pineapples, other tropical fruits and vegetables, with cotton and sugar, are the leading staples. No pen, however gifted, can give an idea, however, of the luxuriance of vegetation on a Cuban plantation. The sugar cane grows to a size equaled only by that of the most favored situations in Louisiana, while a field of pineapples, with their thorny leaves and spiny fruit, is a sight, once seen, never to be forgotten. But even the glory of the pineapple is excelled by that of the banana plantation, with its great leaved trees and enormous bunches of fruit so large as to occasion the suspicion in the mind of a Spanish ecclesiastic that the bunches of grapes mentioned as borne between two men, when the Hebrew spies returned from their inspection of the land of Canaan, were not really grapes, but bananas. The abundance with which this remarkable plant yields its fruit and the little care required for its cultivation after a plantation has once been made, have not proved an unmixed blessing to the dwellers in tropical regions. An acre of banana plants, with little or no attention, will produce more than a hundred times as much food as an acre planted in wheat, and so long as a man has food for himself and family to be had for the trouble of picking it, there is little incentive to labor. The excellence of the tobacco grown in Cuba has become a proverb the world over, for alike to smokers and to those who regard the weed as a rank poison, the fragrant Havana is typical of the habit. Not every quarter of the island, however, produces the tobacco whose flavor is so highly regarded. Only a few river valleys, whose soil contains elements peculiarly favorable to the development of the aromatic qualities of the leaf, can be relied on for the genuine Havana product, while much of the tobacco of the island is little superior to that grown elsewhere.

WHERE THE PINEAPPLES GROW.

THE BUCCANEERS' FORT.

In any other country, and with reasonably fair opportunities for development, the mineral and agricultural resources of Cuba would render that island one of the richest regions of the globe, but the curse of Spanish rule is alike on the farmer and planter, on the merchant and miner and the same merciless taxation alike prevents all from attaining any measure of success or prosperity.

The history of Cuba has been one uniform record of Spanish depravity, spoliation and oppression. Spanish rule began with the destruction of the entire native population. At the discovery of the island by Christopher Columbus, it was peopled with a race of gentle, inoffensive Indians, whose worst fault was their laziness. The discovery was made in 1492, the island was completely overrun by the Spaniards in 1511, the natives were enslaved, and so great was the barbarity with which they were treated, that, in 1534, the colonists petitioned the Crown to be allowed to import African slaves at once, that they might be inured to toil in the fields before all the Indians perished. African slavery began shortly after, and formed the second black spot on the Spanish record. The third, and perhaps the most detestable of all, has been the treatment of the native Cubans. In their own country they have been subjected to every form of political and social oppression that the ingenuity of the Spaniards could devise. The latter, from the captain general down to the meanest custom house clerk, have generally regarded their positions as given them for the purpose of enabling them to enrich themselves, and have carried out this idea to the fullest possible extent. The people have been robbed, legally and illegally, plundered and taxed to death, so that the industrial growth of the island under the circumstances is something quite marvelous. As a class, the native Cubans are far superior to the Spanish tyrants who have dominated the island, and their restiveness under the control of the foreign element is easily understood and appreciated. Time and again have they risen in insurrection, but the lack of arms and the overwhelming forces that on the first appearance of trouble were poured into the island have up to the present prevented success. Stories of Spanish atrocities are of almost daily occurrence in the newspapers now, but every attempt of the Cubans to gain their liberty has been attended by barbarities similar to those now being perpetrated on captured Cubans. They have been hung and shot by dozens, they have been sent in strings to the garrote, to the galleys, to the prisons for lifelong sentences; they have seen their wives and children murdered before their eyes; they have witnessed the destruction of their property, and yet, in spite of the knowledge that certain death in its most terrible forms awaits them if unsuccessful, the exasperation of Spanish rule goads them to renewed revolt, and they prefer to see their land in ruins if only it may be free of foreign control.

THE PRADO, HAVANA.

Under American control or protection, the advancement of Cuba would be rapid. Havana, with its mediaeval cathedrals and canopied streets, some of which look as though they might have been imported from Barcelona or Seville, would soon become a bustling American town, where the cowboy would jostle the millionaire, and the office building take the place of the prison-like palace that seems designed for no other purpose than to serve as the scene of an opera. The old "Buccaneers' Castle" that, tradition says, saw service when the bold Viking of the South Seas rode triumphant over the Spanish main, would be converted into a museum for preserving the handcuffs and branding irons, the manacles, stakes, thumb screws and other instruments of Spanish cruelty, and the pretty Cuban girls in the cigarette factories would learn enough English to respond to the ardent advances of lovers from the States. That the day of Cuban freedom may be delayed is possible, for the island is too rich a plum for the Spaniards to relinquish willingly, but that it will always remain under the oppressive rule of a nation whose administration of civil affairs is somewhat better than that of Dahomey, and somewhat worse than that of Turkey, is not for a moment to be believed.

Revenge Is Sweet.

It takes a bright woman to rebuke another woman's rudeness, a general statement well borne out by a story from the Atlanta Constitution.

A lady entered a railway train and took a seat in front of a newly married couple. She was hardly seated before they began making remarks about her.

Her last year's bonnet and cloak were fully criticised, with more or less giggling on the bride's part, and there is no telling what might have come next if the lady had not put a sudden stop to the conversation by a bit of strategy.

She turned her head, noticed that the bride was considerably older than the groom, and in the smoothest tones said:

"Madam, will you please have your son close the window behind you?"

The "son" closed his mouth, and the bride no longer giggled.

Mrs. Nurich—You can't think, Brother Caleb, what an expense it's been to us, learning Amelia to play the planner. Brother Caleb (dolefully)—It can't compare with what I had to pay out when George was learning to play the races. And he didn' learn much, either.—Judge.

Horrible Accident.

The Deadly Shotgun Again Does Its Work.

We were furnished the following information by Henry Lesh, of the Pioneer Hardware Co., concerning the accidental shooting of Otto Myers, of Fort Wayne Mr. Lesh and his father, Peter, of Canton, O., who is visiting him drove down to Zulu, a small town a few miles east of Fort Wayne, to visit Henry's uncle. Mr. Myers and another gentleman of Fort Wayne were hunting in that vicini y Sunday afternoon and went into an orchard to get some apples. Mr. Myers took hold of the muzzle of his double-barreled shotgun and knocked off some apples with the butt of the gun. The hammer in some way caught a limb and the gun was discharged. The load entered Mr. Myers abdomen going clear through, leaving a large hole, and cutting off his entrails. Mr. Lesh was present a fe w inutes after the accident and also at about eight o'clock Sunday evening. The wounded man had a good deal of courage and talked to Mr. Lesh concerning the accident. He said after the gun was discharged he felt very hungry. He realized that the accident would prove fatal. At last reports he was yet alive.

A MODEL HOUSE,

The COURIER has described several of the many fine houses in Auburn and now for a change we take one in Waterloo. It is the new residence built by E. R. Shoemaker on the prominent corner one passes in going from the passenger station down by the school grounds and into town. It is a rather plain building though full of evidence of good taste without and within. It is a full two-story with a third floor attic and a full basement. The cellar or basement is high and fully drained by a long sewer connecting with the creek. In the basement is the heater, one of the most approved kind and every room in the house is heated from this, with the exception of one small room on the second floor. All the house will have both warm and cold water. The woodwork of, the interior is of red oak on the first floor, the stairway and railings on the second, while the second story is finished in ash. The bath room, a fine one, is the only exception, this being in cherry. The rooms are all large and comfortable, and a noticeable feature is the large refrigerator at the north side with its door for the supply of ice, opening outside, and its several roomy apartments with shelves, etc., for household uses. It should be remarked that the plans for the arrangement and location of the rooms on both floors, originated with Mr. Shoemaker's daughter, Mrs. May Dills, who is also to be a joint occupant of the residence, we believe. But except this, the carrying out of the entire work as a carpenter has been done by John N. Rickel and his helpers and he has shown great good taste and skill in this and proved himself a "master mechanic." The stone and brick work, we believe is by our old-time friend, Jake Saltzman. Of course it is all under the general supervision of Mr. Shoemaker himself, who has been liberal in everything that would help to produce a model residence. The porches are wide and long and have an air of hospitality that reminds one of the leading spirit of Waterloo's latest improvements. We should not forget the model barn, with its supply of water on both floors and all points remembered that would be of comfort to the animals it is to shelter.

Strange Accident.

Dr. Swarts reports the strangest accident that ever occurred in his many years of practice as a surgeon. A little son of Mr. Mann who lives near Mooresville was Sunday evening playing with his little express wagon. He saw a big turkey gobbler coming his way and was scared and started to run when he struck a small iron at the end of his wagon tongue. The piece of iron struck him in the groin, tore away the muscle that holds the intestines in place at that point allowing them to fall and produce a genuine "rupture." The lad suffered greatly, but of course nothing could be done except by a skilled surgeon. Dr. Swarts was called next morning and he and Mrs. Swarts managed with considerable difficulty to get the parts into place. and he is now in a fair way to recover.

Township Trustees.

It now appears that the township trustee who were elected last fall could have entered at once on their office and can do so the next time the election takes place. Had they done so this time nearly all the county superintendents in the state would have been republicans and the office would have been fully launched out as a political office as so many wanted it to be. Supreme court made the decision.

CUBA.

The war in Cuba goes right on. It will require good management to keep Uncle Sam and Spain at peace. Spain has already said that our Consul general in Cuba has no rights except as other consuls, who are merely commercial agents. But by a treaty of 1799 she gave our consuls as much rights as she would any nation, and as she is giving the German consuls the rights of a resident minister, now Uncle Sam insists on having the same rights. Here may occur the quarrel.

Low Rate Excursion to the West.

Bountiful harvests are reported from all sections of the west and northwest, and an exceptionally favorable opportunity for home-seekers and those desiring change of location is offered by the low rate excursion which has been arranged by the North-Western Line. Tickets for this excursion, with favorable time limits, will be sold on October 22 to points in Northern Wisconsin, Michigan, Northwestern Iowa, Western Minnesota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and a large number of other points. For full information apply to agent of connecting lines, or address A. H. Waggener, T. P. A., 7 Jackson Place, Indianapolis, Ind. 41 42

HOOSIER VOTERS.

Indiana has 627,072 voters according to a statement just published by the Auditor of State. This is based on the enumeration taken this last spring and it is on this that the legislature of next winter should apportion the state into legislative districts. Of the whole number 612,750 are whites and 13,822 are colored voters. In twelve years or during two enumeration periods, the white voters have increased 73,745 and the colored voters 3,270.

Nothing Cheap About it.

Dr. Drummond's Lightning Remedy for Rheumatism is put up in large bottles and once seen is never mistaken for any other preparation All the cheap remedy put together are not worth one bottle of Drummond's Lightning Remedy, and any sufferer who has taken it, will bear witness to its marvelous power, and say they have never seen its equal. H. MITCHELL, 249 Hermann Ave, Riverdale, Dayton, Ohio, says: "For seven years my throat was so badly affected that it was continually covered with ulcers and scabs as large as my thumb nail. By advice of a friend I bought a jar of Pretzinger's Catarrh Balm last winter, and I have not had the slightest return of my former trouble." This under date of September 19, 1894.

Chicago, Ill., August 25, 1894.

The writer can cheerfully recommend Pretzinger's Catarrh Balm as being just what it is represented. It will cure the very worst cases of catarrh if the directions are carried out. I was a sufferer from catarrh for years and was cured by Pretzinger's Catarrh Balm.

Capt. A. L. Kuhlman has received "Special Order No. 94, 1895," from headquarters of the Indiana National Guard, which order contains the dishonorable discharge of three members of Co. K, Auburn Rifles for "Desertion." We are sorry that any of our young men would allow themselves to be dishonorably discharged from the service of the great state of Indiana. They should have obeyed orders until their time of enlistment expired then they could have left the company like veterans. The writer has served three years in the Indiana National Guard and is proud of the fact. We were with the boys when they were called to Roby and Hammond.

LaPorte Argus:—The government surplus in September exceeded Secretary Carlisle's estimate. Notwithstanding an expenditure of $10,000,000 for pensions and the payment of bills due to Republican extravagance during Harrison's administration, receipts were $3,600,000 larger than disbursements.

The secretary of the Board of Health, Dr. Swarts, is again looking after the sanitary condition of the town. He says there are many places that "Smell to Heaven" and he proposes that the health of the people shall not suffer by the general tendency to neglect these place. They must be attended to and he will soon notify those who are negligent, that they must do better. We cannot afford another epidemic of sickness of any sort.

In many places the County treasurer's office will be kept open nights from now till Nov. 4th, to accomodate the laboring and factory men who cannot get up town before 5 o'clock, the usual time of closing the office, to pay their taxes, Taxes become delinquent on and after Nov. 4, and this would be a great accommodation to the mass of people who would otherwise be compelled to lose time to pay their taxes. County treasurer Fair should adopt this rule as we believe many of the laboring men would appreciate it.

Is It Fate?

Did you ever stop and think how our lives are affected by some seemingly trifling circumstances? It is amusing to think what might have occurred but for some more or less trifling circumstance If the nose of Cleopatra had been shorter the whole face of the earth would have been different. It is said that a glass of wine too much changed the course of French history; many persons who have carelessly picked up a scrap of literature on Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer have been cured of what they considered an incurable disease by its use C. S. Chambers, Atlanta, Ill, was a sufferer from nervous prostration. A friend, who had knowledge of Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer, gave him a small sample. Its use stirred up new hope in his mind; he used two full sized bottles and was cured—fate directed this wonderful medicine to his notice. Your fate may be urging your attention to the same remedy. If you are troubled with nervous prostration, spasms, fits, sleeplessness, mental depression, exhausted vitality, despondency, sexual and general debilty. For sale by F. E. Davenport. 40-44

Samuel L. Clemens tells the public that he is not lecturing for his own benefit, but for the benefit of the creditors of the failed publishing concern for which he furnished the financial backing. "Honor," he says, "is a harder master than the law. It cannot compromise for less than 100 cents on the dollar, and its debts never outlaw." He further says: "From my reception thus far I am confident that if I live I can pay off the last debt within four years, after which, at the age of 64, I can make a fresh and unincumbered start in life." When Mark Twain writes this in obvious and very serious earnest he exhibits himself in a very different character from that of the professional humorist. There is a heroic side and a pathetic side as well as a humorous side to this man. May he survive to make that fresh and unincumbered start.

The Turkish ambassador has telegraphed his government the substance of a significant interview he has had with Lord Salisbury relative to the Armenian question. From his statement it appears he informed Lord Salisbury that the Sublime Porte is not opposed to the reforms demanded by the Berlin treaty powers, but that Turkey would not permit the control of Armenia by an international commission. Knowing that Turkey, if left to itself, would never put these reforms into operation, Lord Salisbury appropriately and promptly informed the minister that if this were the position of Turkey it would be of no use to continue the interview. With a final declaration that if the Porte persisted in the refusal the powers would carry out the reforms, and that if it resisted them Turkey would be dismembered, he politely dismissed the Porte's representative. This means business. Turkey will yield rather than submit to a carving which will end its existence in Europe as a separate power. There is one blessing at least in the recent conservative victory.

San Francisco Argonaut: The Call has begun a series of articles entitled, "Plain Talks with Farmers," by Edward F. Adams, himself a farmer. The series begins well. In the first article, Mr. Adams makes these pithy remarks: "Speaking of a farmer, I ask: Why is it that the mercantile and professional classes live more luxuriously than we? Why do not their wives also rise at five in the morning and toil till bed time? Why do they ride in palace cars and we in tourist cars? Now our usual answer to this is that the whole race of them are nefarious cormorants thriving upon the blood and sweat of the patient, noble, honest son of toil. But the real reason that they thrive while we strive unprofitably is because they are not such fools as we are; they know their business and we do not. If they buy a ton of grain they know what it costs them, and when they sell it, they know whether they have made a profit." Never were truer words written. There is much complaint just now over "hard times" among the farmers of California. Much sympathy is expressed for them. Yet we hear no sympathy expressed for the "hard times" of the shop keeper, the small tradesman, the small manufacturer. Why not? Have they not suffered during the past few years just as the farmers have? "Oh, but they are business men," would be the reply. That is exactly it. They are business men, they do not ask for sympathy, and they suffer in silence, while the farmers suffer noisily. The sooner the farmers put themselves on the same score as other men, run their business like other business men, and expect the same treatment as other business men, the sooner will they attain the same measure of prosperity as other business men. As Mr. Adams, himself a California farmer, says of California farmers: "Other men know their business—the farmers do not."

At Chickamauga, in presence of the citizenship of the United States, survivors of Union and Confederate armies united in the dedication of the National Park, which is forever to be associated with memories of a supreme tug of war, of a unique heroism on both sides, and of a completely restored national friendship. The occasion was such a one as has nowhere else ever been witnessed but in America. Germany has just been celebrating its great victories of twenty-five years ago, but no Frenchman was there. Italy has been celebrating its regeneration and victorious unification, but only the one party engages in the memorial celebration of that grand epoch-making event. At Chickamauga those who fought against each other gathered again on the field of battle and celebrated the heroism of both armies. Such a reunion is a sublimely impressive and beautiful token of our gloriously compact national fellowship under the one banner. Slavery, which could have so set brother against brother, with naught else under heaven to divide them, was a bad thing; evil and only evil. And that is dead. It was a mistake, a national sin, which, while it lasted, cost us dear. Even the war for its annihilation, even though its appeal was to the noblest motives to which human nature is susceptible, was filled with horrors. Heaven save us from the necessity of any repetition of them. Meanwhile the several State monuments were dedicated by the Governors and other civil as well as military representatives of the different States. May they stand forever, to be visited in coming generations by patriots from every part of the country, to whom they shall ever speak of individual heroism never surpassed and of a national friendship not again to be broken. Monuments anywhere that can do this are worth erecting, and the fitting dedication of them cannot fail to be occasion for renewed inspiration unto all good citizenship.

Whether or not the derelicts of the sea are in reality the terrors to ocean voyagers then seem to be in the landsman's imagination may be a question, but that they should be exterminated as far as possible admits of no doubt. For thousands of miles they float like ghosts up and down the Atlantic, now governed by the viewless winds, and now by the ocean tides or the gulf stream. They are the vagabonds—the tramps of the deep. It is said their average life is but thirty days, but there are well authenticated instances of abandoned vessels that have kept afloat for nearly three years drifting in the meantime thousands and thousands of miles. One recognized derelict was seen at different times where the points of observation were 7,000 miles apart. Night is the harvest time of these sea demons. Almost inperceptible to the eye as they float water-logged upon the surface of the ocean, great ships full of life and hope suddenly dash upon them, and there is an end. An effort is now being made to arrange a plan by which the United States and Great Britain shall unite to exterminate these monsters of the deep. In October, 1893, Congress passed a resolution authorizing the President to make an international agreement with the several governments interested in the navigation of the North Atlantic Ocean, providing for the removal of dangerous wrecks and derelicts outside the coast waters of the respective countries bordering on that ocean. The plan most approved by the maritime exchanges in London and New York is for the respective governments to equip steam vessels of moderate tonnage, but well built and fitted out, which shall search the ocean far and near and destroy the derelicts wherever found. Short shrift is to be given to these terrors of the deep. International patrols like these would not only protect the great ocean lines of travel but might be able to afford aid and comfort to vessels in distress. The maritime nations cannot be better engaged than in bringing about some such plan.

The Scotch Trio.

But in spite of points of likeness, we must see that Maclaren and Barrie and Crocket do not use their material in the same way. Each village preserves its own individuality of character and story.

These men have revealed to us much that is truly interesting in the native traits of the race to which they belong, and have preserved to a remarkable degree the natural coloring in the bits they have gathered for us. They have inspired us with respect for the sturdy men and women they bring to our acquaintance, making us half afraid to laugh even at the humorist himself; as to the theology of these village people we are rendered helpless to contend where every peasant knows his catechism with all the reasons why, where men of everyday parts are able to sit interested under a sermon several hours long, and then go home to recount the heads of the discourse and the main arguments, adding a little personal criticism of the entire performance together with a close comparison of the sermon with another preached upon the same text some years before by another "body."

Whether these stories or others like them will much longer retain their popularity, who may say? The vein may be nearly worked out; it were a pity to quite exhaust it. It is a delicate point to know when to stop that it may be short of weariness to the reader and where imitations are discouraged. But surely these three men are masters of their art and it would be as foolish to attempt to excel them in their own department as it would be vain to deny the charm of treatment of every subject they touch.—Womankind.

His Words Verified.

About twenty-five years ago a certain Southern man brought a suit against the South Carolina Railroad for damages to his property. He lost the case in the Superior Court, but insisted upon carrying it to the Supreme Court, where he represented his own cause. He began his argument by saying whimsically:

"May it please the court, there is an old French adage which says: 'A man who is his own lawyer hath a fool for a client.'"

The next week the Supreme Court pronounced its decision, which was adverse to the Southerner. He was in Augusta at the time, but received the announcement of his second and final disappointment by means of a telegram sent him by a prominent judge, who was an intimate friend of his.

The telegram read as follows: "Judgment for defendant in error. French adage affirmed by Supreme Court."

Silk Stronger than Steel.

It is not generally known that, size for size, a thread of spider silk is decidedly tougher than a bar of steel. An ordinary thread will bear a weight of three grains. This is just about 50 per cent stronger than a steel thread of the same thickness.

Never judge of appearances—a ten-dollar dude may have a two-dollar salary.

WOMEN IN BRICKYARDS.

Chicago Gives a New Field for Feminine Activity.

Chicago furnishes women with an occupation which is most unusual. In several brickyards they are employed to stack the bricks, and they do the work neatly and well. A writer, describing a visit to one of these yards, says: Scattered about the yard to the number of fifteen or twenty are women and girls at work. Their figures, their faces and their talk, when they did talk, indicate clearly that they came from another country. They are from Poland. Not one of them speaks a word of English. Their dress is less than that of the modern ballet girl. The latter at least wears tights and flounces of gauze. These women of this brick yard have neither. Their frocks of coarse material, stop at the knee, and a loose waist of some other material is gathered about the bust and shoulders. Otherwise these women and girls are as nature made them, and are as bare in feet as Du Maurier's Trilby of the Latin quarter. Their limbs are as bare and brown and crisp as the roofs of the houses in the vicinity where they live. These women are at work stacking brick preparatory to its removal to the kiln. They are the wives and daughters of the men who work in the yards and kiln. While the men are asleep these women come out between 5 and 6 o'clock in the morning and pick up the brick which the men have made and put out the day and night before. In this particular yard these rows of brick are as long as one-quarter of an average block. There are usually about four of these rows. They represent about 10,000 brick. Two women and two girls pick up these rows and stack them under a shelter. There are from ten to twenty of these sections of rows, according to the previous day's work, and in every section there are usually two women and two girls—not always. They are as apt and quick and accurate as an avenue miss with her fancy needle work. They seem to do this work with strange contentment. There is not a day in the week in seasonable weather when they do not come out to this work. As before given, it requires an hour. Then they return to their homes, prepare the morning meal for the men and the men come to the yards to grind the clay, to fill the molds and to lay down the new-made brick on the sandy level.

Not a Joke.

Led on by the comic papers and the humorous paragrapher for the daily press, our people have been inclined to take a light and facetious view of the American tramp. In point of fact, he is personally sodden, impudent and intolerable; while, taken in the aggregate, he presents a really serious problem.

Prof. McCook, who has made a thorough study of the matter, says that there are about forty-six thousand tramps now in this country, and that the number is constantly increasing. To support this horde of vagabonds costs the country something like $8,000,000 a year. Indirectly they probably cause the loss of a still larger amount.

Worse than this, they form a peripatetic school of vice and idleness. The real tramp is easily to be distinguished from the unemployed man. He is not cast down or despondent. He does not want to rise in the world; he has found his real level in the gutter. He desires only to eat, to drink—to be drunk, perhaps, would be the more accurate phrase—and to be let alone.

When he fails to satisfy his wants, he becomes a dangerous criminal. In Indiana last spring tramps took actual possession of an entire village and drove its inhabitants to the woods.

It is time to look at this subject seriously. The tramp is a public enemy.

DOWN WITH ROBBERY

LITERAL TRANSLATION OF THE TERM "PROTECTION."

Its Whole Significance Is Class Legislation—Contradictory Claims Made by Its Worshipers—Some Plain Facts Concerning Wages and the Tariff.

Protection Is Un-American.

In a labored attempt to convince an advocate of Government bounties on farm products that the protection fraud benefits the farmer, the New York Press opposes the bounty system on the ground that it would be paternalism. Such a policy, it declares, "would simply be taxing American citizens to enable American farmers to undersell English farmers in England." This is quite true, yet the Press does not seem to see that its logic condemns the taxation of American citizens in order to enable American manufacturers to charge higher prices to American consumers. That this is the object and effect of a protective tariff is an established fact. The declarations of such eminent Republicans as McKinley and Harrison against cheapness proves that protectionists want to have goods dear. And the range of prices under various tariffs shows that increased protection always results in higher prices.

If taxing the whole people to benefit the farmers would be paternalism, the Press would probably call the policy of taxing everybody to benefit a small class of manufacturers patriotism. That paper has for years supported a system by which the farmers were robbed through high taxation and high prices due to tariff monopoly. Now that the farmers have discovered the swindle which was steadily impoverishing them, and are demanding a share of Government favors, the protection organs shout "paternalism," and say the demand is preposterous. It is true that the proposition to take money from one set of citizens to give it to another class is paternalism, and that for that reason Democrats oppose the bounty system. On the same ground they condemn protection, which is the assumption by the Government of the right to regulate production by compelling the whole people to pay more for the goods of certain manufacturers. If that is not paternalism of the rankest kind, there is no meaning in words.

The Press knows well that the spirit of free American institutions is opposed to paternalistic schemes. Hence, its desire to show that bounties on farm products would be paternalism. But in so doing it furnishes the best of reasons for rejecting the unjust meddling system of protection which it daily advocates.

Some Protection Benefits.

Believing that in the discussion of such important issues as the tariff question both sides should be given a hearing, the following brief arguments in favor of protection are published:

1. Protection shuts out foreign goods and thereby prevents competition and benefits manufacturers by raising the price of their goods.

2. A high tariff stimulates competition and thus cuts down prices of manufactured goods.

3. Under protection the burden of taxation falls on the foreigner who sells his products in our markets.

4. The tariff tax being always added to the price which consumers must pay for imported goods, the domestic manufacturer is enabled to pay his employes higher wages if he wishes to do so.

5. As a protective tariff does not interfere with the free importation of labor, manufacturers can guard against excessive wages by employing foreign workingmen.

6. The protective duties levied on raw materials serve as a check on the too rapid growth of domestic industries.

7. Such raw materials as hides, which are largely produced by the American farmer, should be exempted from protective taxes and allowed to come in free.

8. Protection encourages manufacturers by cutting down the prices of goods and increasing the wages of their employes.

9. A high tariff benefits workingmen by increasing the cost of all kinds of goods they buy, and by attracting to this country the unemployed labor of the rest of the world.

10. The protective doctrine, if adopted by all the commercial nations of the world, would enable each country to produce its own goods, and thus do away with all international commerce.

11. By its stimulation of home industry a high tariff will enable the American manufacturer to sell his products in all the markets of the world.

For these reasons and numerous others equally logical, protection should be favored by all who are incapable of studying the question for themselves.

Did Not Condemn the Administration.

For the past six months the small-fry Republican organs have been shrieking against the iniquity of the bond sales by which this country was prevented from going onto the silver standard, and plunging again into panic and business depression. In the bitterness of their assaults on the integrity of the administration the Pennsylvania papers were especially prominent, surpassing even the Western Populists in their diatribes against "the men who issued bonds in a time of peace."

When the Republican State Convention of Pennsylvania met at Harrisburg it was expected that the alleged public indignation against the Democratic policy of maintaining the gold reserve would find vent in resolutions condemning the bond issues. But while the usual McKinley protest was made against the Wilson tariff, and the Democrats blamed for all the evil results of protection, the convention said not a word about the sale of bonds. The natural inference is that the Republican leaders who controlled the convention realize that the action of the administration is not unpopular, else they would have sought to gain votes by declaring against it. When Republican conventions do not find it wise to disapprove of Democratic action in avoiding a disastrous panic, it is safe to assume that there is nothing to apologize for in connection with the recent issue of bonds.

Every Housewife Knows the Truth.

There is not a housewife in the land who has not felt by experience the advantages of the Wilson law in the reduced cost of 25 per cent on woolen goods alone, and the Republican Congress that attempts to restore the McKinley duties of 33 per cent on raw wool and 97 per cent on woolen fabrics will only evoke ridicule and disgust. The Wilson law removed the tax one-half on woolen goods and altogether on raw wool. The compensatory balance in favor of the wool growers has been so remarkable in better prices and demand as to make even the flockmasters advocates of the new tariff. Reduced prices to purchasers who use about $800,000,000 worth of woolen goods a year, an average of $12 per capita for the whole country, cannot be restored to the McKinley figures, and the party that advocates it simply flirts with dissolution.—Philadelphia Times.

Down, Calamity Howler.

Increase in wages is one of the most reliable signs of a reviving business, and judging from that standpoint there can be little doubt that we have reached the dawn of prosperity.

Since the latter part of March, according to the New York Times, 230 employers of labor, whether as individuals or forming firms or corporations, have increased the wages of their employes and these employes reach the very respectable total of 128,000.

To substantiate its assertion or rather to afford an opportunity to all to prove its accuracy, the Times publishes a list of the individuals, firms and companies which have increased wages, and a great variety of industries these represent. Among those benefited by these increases in wages we note those who work in silk, woolen, cotton, linen, paper, flannel and knit goods mills; those engaged in coke, iron and steel industries; employes in tube mills and boiler works rolling mills, foundries, tanneries, puddlers, coat-makers, garment workers and those following the oil well business in Pennsylvania. Employes in the cotton mills of Fall River, Mass., to the number of 25,000, have received an increase of 12½ per cent.; 25,000 cotton textile workers in New Bedford have got an increase of 5 per cent.; 15,000 men in the Western Pennsylvania coke district are benefited 15 per cent.; 5,000 employes in the National Tube Works and Rolling Mills at McKeesport, Pa., 10 per cent.; 2,200 employes of the Riverside Iron Company, Wheeling, W. Va., 10 per cent.; 5,000 garment workers in Philadelphia; and during last week 10,000 workers in the vicinity of Pittsburg received an advance in wages. This is only a partial list, but it lays low the calamity howler.

Still Trying to Deceive.

With the undeniable facts of business prosperity and higher wages under the Wilson tariff making Democratic votes daily, the despairing New York Tribune resorts to the device of deliberate falsehoods about the condition of trade. Looking tearfully through blue ruin glasses at the country's industries, that paper whines that perhaps things are not so very prosperous after all, and as proof of the sad state of affairs it refers to "the great strikes in woolen and carpet mills which have failed."

The Tribune does not give the names of the woolen and carpet mills where great strikes have failed. And for the very good reason that there were no such mills. Since the Wilson bill went in force there is not one single instance of a strike in any important woolen or carpet mill which has failed to win substantial concession from employers. Many of the leading woolen mills voluntarily advanced wages from 5 to 25 per cent., a noticeable instance being the woolen and worsted factories of Rhode Island, which increased the wages of all their employes 7½ per cent. on Aug. 1. In some parts of the country there have been strikes, but they have practically all been successful. The great strike in the carpet industry of Philadelphia, where 8,000 operatives demanded higher wages, was won by the strikers, the last of the mills signing the increased wage scale last week.

These facts were, of course, well known to the Tribune, but it would not have suited its partisan objects to have told the truth. But if that paper had any fair-minded readers they must be ashamed of its wilful refusal to publish the truth when it hurts the Republicans.

Advance of Wages in Woolen Mills.

Last week the report of a voluntary advance in wages by the Providence, National, Saranac and Manton woolen mills at Olneyville, R. I., was confirmed and a Providence telegram stated that an advance on light weight woolen goods had been made in the Farewell mills at Central Falls. At the same time an increase of wages was made at the Harris woolen, Lippitt woolen, Perseverance worsted, Simpson worsted and Prendergast's woolen mills. "Free wool" is surely working wonders for labor.

Careful and conservative lists show that since the Wilson reduced tariff took effect last autumn there has been an increase of wages in fifty American woolen mills. This is quite phenomenal, and no logical explanation of the fact is possible save that the great boon of free wool which the Wilson bill gave American woolen manufacturers has enabled them to expand and branch out as they have never before done. The woolen industries are placed by the new tariff on high vantage ground for obtaining satisfactory sales of their products both at home and abroad. Free trade in raw wools is a bonanza of untold value to them. This is the logic of the greatly improved and improving situation in all American woolen mills.—New York Herald.

Yet McKinley's Star Has Set.

Recent reports from Fall River, Mass., show that 36 corporations, operating 64 mills and representing an aggregate of $21,000,000 of capital, have paid out $532,875 in dividends for the last quarter, this being an average of more than 2½ per cent. Also it is stated that these dividends do not represent the phenomenal prosperity of those and other mills at the present time. "Nearly every corporation in town is so far freed from debt that its paper has an A1 rating in financial circles," and a new record is being made in the erection of cotton mills while several important additions are made or in process of being made to mills already in operation.

A Point in Political Economy.

Sooner or later Mr. McKinley's demand for a tax on raw wool will puncture the tire of his boom. Put a tack there!

Something Else.

A London journal makes fun of the lady bicyclist, or rather of her costume.

There had been an accident, though happily it was not very serious.

"I am very sorry, sir," said the fair cyclist to the victim of the accident, "but what can you expect at this period of the nineteenth century if you ride a horse that shies at a bicycle?"

Possibly her manner gave offense. At all events, he answered in a very dry tone:

"Madam, it was not the bicycle the horse shied at."

NEURALGIA OF THE HEART

THE TERRIBLE DISEASE THAT ATTACKED MRS. HENRY OSTING.

Slowly Losing Her Life—Physicians Were Powerless—Friends Were Helpless—At Last She Found a Remedy with Which She Cured Herself and Laughed at Physicians.

From the New Era, Greensburg, Ind.

Hearing through Messrs. Bigney & Co., druggists, of Sunman, Ripley County, Ind., that Mrs. Osting, wife of Henry Osting, a prominent and influential citizen of that town, had been cured of a bad case of neuralgia of the heart and stomach, the editor of the New Era determined to know for the satisfaction of himself and the benefit of his readers the truth in regard to the matter, and took advantage of a trip to Sunman last week.

The Osting residence is a very handsome one, and on every hand are seen the footprints of good fortune. Mrs. Osting herself, hale and hearty, invited us into her cosy parlor. One could hardly believe by looking at the lady, who showed all signs of good health, that she was but nine months ago a despondent victim of that dread disease, neuralgia of the heart and stomach. In answer to the question if she had been cured of a bad disease of neuralgia by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and as to whether she objected to an interview, she replied in her pleasant way, "Why, no, sir, I don't, for they've done me such a wonderful good that I feel I owe everything to them." And the statement was to be believed, for she was the example of perfect health, and we were informed by her neighbors and friends that but a short while ago she was only a living corpse.

Mrs. Osting continued: "No, sir; I never did have good health; I was always naturally weak. When quite young I began experiencing trouble from my heart and stomach which the doctors said was neuralgia. I was continually suffering great pain, but not one of the many well-versed physicians from whom I received treatment was able to do me any good. Severe, sharp pains would shoot over my entire body and more severely through my heart and stomach. My entire system became nervous as pains would increase; my appetite began to fail, and for weeks I could not eat a meal—just mince over the victuals. I couldn't sleep, and would only pass the nights in agony. It's a wonder that I kept up at all, for it's so little that I could eat and sleep, for I suffered so. No physicians could do me any good. My family physician said the case was hopeless. I was discouraged. I had tried every medicine that I could hear of that was claimed to be good for my troubles, but not one did me the least good. Finally, I heard of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and our druggist, Mr. Bigney, advised me to try them, for he said they had done so many people good. I had no faith in patent medicines then, for none had done me any good, but I thought I would try them, for surely they couldn't hurt me. I found relief immediately after I began taking them, and the longer I took them the better I got. By the time I used six boxes I was entirely cured. I never had been able to do my work before. I began taking the pills last October, and in December I was well and able to do my work. I can truly say, for the benefit of other sufferers, that I owe my health to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

To confirm her story beyond all doubt, Mrs. Osting made the following affidavit: State of Indiana, County of Ripley, ss:

Mrs. Henry Osting, being duly sworn on her oath, saith the foregoing statement is just and true.

MRS. HENRY OSTING.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are considered an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effects of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, that tired feeling resulting from nervous prostration; all diseases resulting from vitiated humors in the blood, such as scrofula, chronic erysipelas, etc. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities, and all forms of weakness. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork, or excesses of whatever nature. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price (50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50—they are never sold in bulk or by the 100), by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

A WOODEN leg, if stood upon, is not dutiable, according to a recent decision of the Treasury Department. To be admitted without the customs tax it must be attached to the body of the owner. False teeth in the mouth, wigs on the head, false eyes in their sockets, are, under the same ruling, also exempt from duty. The false leg that does not support the owner must bear its part of the support of the Government. Thus the imported leg must do its duty or pay it.

PRETTY

AND ATTRACTIVE WOMEN.

Their Good Looks Not a Secret.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

No matter to what country she belongs, or whether she be black or white, as a woman she desires to look well.

Women know the influence of beauty on men; men rarely admire a beautiful invalid, but they do admire a woman in whom is blended good features and perfect health.

There is no secret about a woman's beauty; it all lies in the care she devotes to herself, to removing from her system all poisonous impurities, and keeping at bay those fearful female diseases.

The flashing eye, elastic step, and brilliant complexion are never companions of a womb trouble; only the distressed expression and aches, pains, blues, faintness, dizziness, bearing-down feeling, etc., keep it company.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound removes female troubles promptly, and cleanses, invigorates, and consequently beautifies, the form of woman. Women, the world over, pay homage to it, and praise its discoverer. Your druggist sells more of it than all other female medicines.

TO SEEK THE NORTH POLE.

S. A. Andree, Scientific Aeronaut, Will Attempt the Trip by Balloon.

The plan conceived by Professor S. A. Andree, a distinguished Swedish scientist and aeronaut, to overcome the difficulties of the polar ice by journeying to the north pole by balloon, is taking such definite shape that it can no longer be classed with visionary projects.

S. A. ANDREE.

The contemplated undertaking is attracting wide attention in Europe, owing not only to its boldness, but also to the fact that Professor Andree is a practical balloonist and scientific man of standing, who would not entertain a wild or obviously impracticable scheme.

He is now in Paris superintending the construction of the balloon. It will contain sleeping rooms for three persons, and a dark room for photographic purposes. It will be equipped with a set of sails which will serve to keep it under control and propel it, and a boat, or gondola, of considerable size, will be carried.

OBSERVATORY AND GONDOLA OF THE BALLOON.

A great number of heavy cables will be provided so that in case the balloon should suddenly sink it will be relieved of weight by the contact of the lines with the earth. It is intended to make the trip, starting from Spitzbergen and crossing the pole to the shores of Bering Strait, next year, in June, when the atmospheric conditions are most favorable to aerial navigation.

A heavy snowstorm would probably be disastrous to the balloon, but in the early summer they are infrequent. It is estimated that not more than a week will be consumed en voyage. The fact that the ice which surrounds the pole and has been an unsurmountable barrier to ships will not have to be taken into consideration constitutes one of the chief reasons for believing that a balloon expedition may succeed where those by vessel have been failures.

A NEW INVALID'S CHAIR.

For Comfortably Moving a Patient in an Upright Position.

The device here illustrated is one of the best chairs for invalids yet invented. One of its greatest merits is its simplicity, with no complicated parts to be adjusted, and no likelihood of its getting out of order.

As may be seen in the cut, there are handles at different heights on opposite sides of the chair, making it very easy for two persons to carry it up or down stairs, while the patient remains in an upright position. Another advantage is that the chair may be placed upon the edge of the bed and the patient moved upon it or from it with perfect ease. When not in use, the chair may be folded into a small, compact bundle.

INVALID CHAIR.

A Parrot's Inference.

Among the neighborhood stories told and implicitly believed in the Massachusetts town of W. is one which we should be slow in asking any reader to credit, but which is interesting as an example of the local wit in story making. The wife of Deacon Saunders, an excellent citizen of the place, is said to have possessed a parrot of exceptional intelligence and remarkable conversational powers.

On one occasion Mrs. Saunders was making cucumber pickles. She had the cucumbers in a dish on the kitchen table, and was stirring a kettle of hot vinegar and spices over the fire with a wooden spoon. While thus engaged she chanced to turn about, and saw the parrot making off with one of the cucumbers.

"Ha, you rascal! You've been stealing pickles!" she exclaimed, and threw the wooden spoon, dripping with boiling vinegar, at the bird.

It struck him on the top of his head, and though it inflicted no serious injury, its effect was to take the feathers entirely off the top of the bird's head, leaving him bald for a season.

Some time afterward a minister from another town came to preach at the W. church, and took dinner at Deacon Saunders'. He was quite bald. As the family and the minister sat down at the table, the parrot, who had the freedom of the room, came up and perched on the tall back of his chair, and eyed the top of his head with a close and highly interested scrutiny. And then the bird called out harshly:

"Ha! you rascal! You've been stealing pickles!"

Whining Children.

Dr. Mary Wood-Allen, writing in Womankind of breaking children of the habit of whining says: "In this case, I should say, that the first thing to do is to secure the cordial co-operation of every other adult member of the family. Let there be united purpose never to give to the child that for which he whines, even if it would be given to him otherwise. Give him to understand this in a firm but gentle way, and if possible secure his approval of the idea. Tell him kindly of the evil of the habit, the unhappiness it causes him and every one else, show him that it is creating a habit for the future years and tell him you are all going to help him to overcome it. Let him feel that your refusal to grant his whining requests are to aid him, not to punish him. Then steadily, persistently, sweetly and firmly, adhere to this policy. Never once yield to his insistence, but always recognize his attempt to meet your wishes in a pleasant manner.

If the thing he wants is something he should not have, tell him so, and assure him that no amount of whining will secure it, and then let him whine. Wait, don't scold, don't tantalize, don't appear to be either disturbed or moved by his whining. If what he desires is something he can have, and he whines for it, assure him that as soon as he asks pleasantly he can have it, and then give him time to make up his mind to be pleasant. We are too apt to try to drive our children rapidly from one frame of mind to another. Wait patiently, and if possible help him by diverting his thoughts to something agreeable. In a few minutes he will probably get control of himself. It is often a very touching sight to witness the efforts of children to gain self-control, sometimes under the stings of the tantalizing reproaches of their elders.—Womankind.

Toeing the Line.

The reign of graded schools and scientific methods of education has deprived the rising generation of many of the experiences, laughable, instructive, pathetic, which live in the memories of gray-headed men who once figured as the prototypes of Whittier's "Barefoot boy, with cheek of tan."

It was the hour for the spelling lesson in one of those fondly remembered red district school houses, and the boys and girls had taken their places on the floor.

"Toe the mark," commanded the teacher, and a rustling and shuffling indicated obedience.

The line stretched clear across the school room; now a pair of bare and dusty feet, next a couple of nicely blacked shoes, side by side with a pair of rawhide boots guiltless of the suggestion of blacking. The teacher inspected the line approvingly until his eye rested on one small urchin standing so far behind the others as to be almost out of sight.

"Nate," he asked, "why don't you toe the mark?"

"P-p-please, sir, I am," falters the boy, "but I've got on dad's boots."

Sure enough, the toes of the boots were all right, on the mark, two or three inches beyond the toes of the youthful wearer.

Accommodating Landlord.

A correspondent assures us that he never knew that it was possible for an innkeeper to be too accommodating to his guests until he went down to Nova Scotia recently, and put up at a pleasant little hotel in the country. The landlord of this hotel laid it down as one of his principles of action to give people a little more than they asked for—to be "extra accommodating," as he termed it.

The landlord brilliantly illustrated his adherence to this principle the very morning after our correspondent's arrival at the hotel. The guests had to go away on the seven o'clock train that morning, and asked the proprietor to call him at six. The guest went to sleep in the calm assurance that he should be aroused at the proper hour.

He seemed hardly to have fallen into a sound sleep when he heard a terrific pounding at his door. He sprang up, wide awake.

"What's the matter?" he called out.

"Four o'clock! Four o'clock!" came the landlord's voice the other side of the door; "two hours more to sleep!"

It is needless to say that the guest slept no more that morning. The landlord's anxiety to be "extra accommodating" failed of its mark that time.

Beautifying the Arm.

For the girl whose arm will not stand complete exposure in evening dress there is made a sleeve that fits close on the inside of the arm from the wrist to the hollow under the shoulder and on the outer side of the arm is loose and puffed to the elbow. This sleeve is made of transparent material, and is laced up the inside of the arm, the flesh showing between the cords, while the draping on the puffs soften the elbows, though the transparency of the material allows the general contour of the arm to show. The bodice is made with a pointed yoke, the yoke lacing along its edges to the rest of the dress and exposing slightly just that part of the neck which cannot help being smooth, no matter how thin the girl may be.

One-Hand Watches.

The first English watches had weights and were used as pocket clocks. They had only one hand, and required to be wound up twice a day. The dials were of silver and brass, while the cases were unglazed, but opened at the back and front, and were four or five inches in diameter—about the size of a common desert plate.

The State of Illinois is one of the wealthiest of the Western States, its valuation reaching $786,616,394.

CURIOUS CREATURES.

The Hedgehog of Great Britain and the Mataco of South America.

A very interesting creature, which, however, is not found in America, is the hedgehog, which is very common in Great Britain and Ireland and on the European continent. Its body is covered with sharp spines so that when the animal rolls itself into a ball, which it does when alarmed or threatened, they present an almost insuperable obstacle to any predaceous enemy that might attack it. The hedgehog is very readily tamed and not infrequently may it be found in kitchens in England, where it destroys cockroaches and other bugs. It readily kills snakes and eats them, commencing with the tail end first. Its spines are very elastic and rolling itself into a ball the creature often throws itself down steep precipices without sustaining any injury.

MATACO ROLLED UP.

THE MATACO.

Allied to the hedgehog in the sense of being capable of rolling into a ball is the mataco, an armadillo found everywhere in South America. This creature is covered with a bony coat of mail, hard yet flexible, and when attacked it curls into a ball, thereby resisting the attacks of its enemies. Unlike other species of armadillos, it does not burrow and has little powers of speed. Most of the armadillos in South America can outrun a man and are rapid and deep burrowers.

THE HEDGEHOG.

A NEW MEASURING DEVICE.

It Is Adapted Especially to the Use of Practical Tailors.

The man with these standards and straps all around him is not a recaptured lunatic, whose freedom of action the other man is seeking to restrain, but he looks like it. On the contrary, the illustration is intended to set forth the peculiar merits of a new and harmless device, by means of which a tailor may make accurate notes of your physical proportions and produce a coat that shall fit you like a glove. If we may judge by the appearance of the thing, the ordeal must be a trying one, but then, what will a man not undergo to have his coat fit well?

The honor of the invention belongs to a Philadelphian. It is illustrated in the Scientific American, which thus describes it: It consists of two upright telescopic standards, one to be placed at each side of the person to be measured, and forming supports for several other pliable measuring attachments adjustable on the standards, and conveniently arranged for taking the different measurements required. A sleeve hole measuring device is carried by one of the standards, there being a strip projecting horizontally therefrom, while also supported by the standards is a breast strip, a back strip being secured to the neck plate, breast strip, and the strip carried by the sleeve hold device. A shoulder tape is secured to the breast strip at the front and rear, the attachment at the rear being at the point where the back strip unites with the breast strip, and a shoulder strip is secured to the shoulder tape at the front and to the breast strip at the rear.

FOR THE USE OF TAILORS.

The Advice Was Late.

John F. Leighton, a prosperous farmer of Franklin, N. H., fell in with two apparently guileless innocents last week who turned out to be clever bunco men. They managed to relieve him of $3,500, and in return they gave him a box containing nothing more satisfactory than a long letter of advice. The letter said: "Keep the affair to yourself. If you tell any one they will laugh at you and say it served you right for trying to take advantage of a man you thought was a greenhorn, and your friends and neighbors, and also your enemies, will say that you are not the honest man you were always supposed to be. You know you told a lie to get the money and no banker will ever let you have money again, for they will think you want to take it and gamble again and lose it. Your credit will be ruined; so keep quiet, pocket the loss and never gamble again. As for my partner and I, we are going to reform and you will never see us again. You cannot make any excuse to your neighbors and acquaintances, for you gambled at cards and lost, and no honest man ever gambles." Mr. Leighton did not follow the advice. He at once notified the police and the Boston bureau of criminal investigation has already begun to trace the men from a point between Nashua and Worcester, where they mailed the letter to Mr. Leighton.—Boston Transcript.

Bow Legs and Divorce.

"Are bandy legs sufficient ground for divorce?" is a question that the courts will soon be called upon to decide. A few days ago a comely young woman not long married burst into a Sixth street lawyer's office and told her tale of woe. But eighteen months ago she had married. The man of her choice was a physical beauty and in every way fitted to make an excellent running mate for the lovely lady, but ere long a cloud came over her dream of matrimonial bliss. Her husband became addicted to the horseback habit, and before long this Apollo was transformed into a deformity. "I really won't be seen with him any more," she said, "because everyone says I must have married him for money. Please, Mr. Lawyer, get me a divorce."—Philadelphia Record.

A New Bronze.

Lemon juice applied to cast iron articles gives an excellent finish to the surface of the metal. It turns the portion of polished cast iron to which it is applied to a bronze black, and when touched over with shellac varnish will absorb a sufficient amount of the varnish to preserve it. To many lemon juice would seem to be a weak and ineffective acid for metal, but every one knows how quickly a knife blade of steel will blacken when used to cut a lemon, and the darkening of polished iron by the acid is very beautiful.

A Silent Appeal for Help.

When your kidneys and bladder are inactive they are making a silent appeal for help. Don't disregard it, but with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters safely impel them to activity. They are in immediate danger, and it is foolhardiness to shut one's eyes to the fact. Be wise in time, too, if you experience manifestations of dyspepsia, malaria, rheumatism, constipation or nerve trouble. The Bitters before a meal adds zest to it.

China Old in Art.

Besides the art of printing, in manufacture of paper, and even the issue of newspapers, the Chinese are credited with having made use of wrought iron and steel for 2,000 years, and it is recorded that they threw a bridge of cast iron over a ravine 1,000 feet deep in the first century of the Christian era.

Timely Warning.

The great success of the chocolate preparations of the house of Walter Baker & Co. (established in 1780) has led to the placing on the market many misleading and unscrupulous imitations of their name, labels, and wrappers. Walter Baker & Co. are the oldest and largest manufacturers of pure and high-grade Cocoas and Chocolates on this continent. No chemicals are used in their manufactures.

Consumers should ask for, and be sure that they get, the genuine Walter Baker & Co.'s goods.

germ-life

The doctors tell us, now-a-days, that disease germs are everywhere; in the air, in the water, in our food, clothes, money; that they get into our bodies, live there, thrive and grow, if they find anything to thrive on.

Consumption is the destruction of lung-tissue by germs where the lung is too weak to conquer them. The remedy is strength—vital force.

Scott's Emulsion, with hypophosphites, means the adjustment of lung strength to overcome germ-life. It is fighting the germ with the odds in our favor. These tiny little drops of fat-food make their way into the system and re-fresh and re-invigorate it. Whether you succeed with it or not depends on how good a start the germs had, and how carefully you can live. The shortest way to health is the patient one. The gain is often slow.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

TRIAL ESTATE DOCKET.

Thomas Wark. administrator of the Isaac Grate estate, has secured an order from court, the county clerk shall pay $218 to Royal J. Fisk, and the rest of the money belonging to the estate is to be paid to said administrator.

Sale of land by Mary E. McDowell, confirmed.

In the Jacob Lehner estate, Jas. W. Squires, administrator, reports sale of land to J. J. Lehner. Approved, and deed ordered made.

O, C. Clark vs. Baptist church reports sale to Mary McDowell. Sale confirmed.

Elmer E. Stamets administrator of the James Till estate, obtains a modified order for the sale of land.

John Potts gets a judgment of $1913 against the John Buchanan estate.

Mary A. Marks vs. Jacob Marks estate, has C. M. Phillips appointed to represent said estate.

In the matter of Myron Kutzner's administrator of the Jonas Eberly will, D. Y. Husselman is appointed guardian "ad litem" for the minor heirs, Victor. Mary and Rollin E. Eberly, with J. M. Stonebraker and W. H. Leas as sureties, and land ordered sold.

In Mary Curry estate, Dan. McClellan, administrator, J. H. Rose is appointed guardian "ad litem," for Forrest and Alfred Curry, and land ordered sold.

COURT HOUSE.

We forgot to say on Monday that the court room, and its belongings have been refitted, and tidied up wonderfully. There is new wall paper, some new lights, and new carpets. When we say "new carpets," we hope that everyone who attends court, whether as a spectator or on business will remember that tobacco spit works a rapid ruin on carpets, and adds quite an item to needless county expenses,

Monday's Daily.

Business began again going on at the old stand. One of the first things done, was the divorce case of M. P. Barker, a well known and prominent citizen of Smithfield. A few years ago he had the misfortune to lose his wife, a most worthy woman. About a year ago, or so he married again, this time a woman named Loutzenhiser, who lived in Franklin township. But they have not got along well and recently she sued for a divorce, and $1,000 alimony. To-day she settled the case by accepting a divorce without alimony. This is what Mr. Barker has all along been willing to allow her. She pays her own cost and he pays his. This is the end of the unfortunate affair.

The Garrett City suit is likely to prove "a celebrated case." As noted a few days ago, W. H. McIntyre, who owns the electric light plant at Garrett is bringing a suit against the city of Garret which is putting in a new light plant, although McIntyre's contract has two or three years yet to run. If Garrett adds over $19,000 to her debt, she will exceed the limit allowed by law. And if she puts in both electric lights and water works she will go far above $19,000. This suit is to restrain them from going into an illegal debt, and at the same time secure the old electric light plant from injury by a new competitor, or rather as we understand it to compel the city to fill out its contract with the old plant. There will also be a charge, that the city's officers have entered into a conspiracy to help destroy the value of the electric light plant of Mr. McIntyre. So he brings this action, through his attorney Judge McClellan. It is likely the books will be produced and Judge McClellan will examine them to see the condition of affairs fully. It will be a big fight and the books are needed in court so that a full knowledge of what action the board has taken may be secured.

ORIGINATORS OF LOW PRICES

BISHOP & LACKEY

AUBURN, INDIANA.

TO THE VICTORS BELONG THE SPOILS

ORIGINATORS OF LOW-PRICES.

BISHOP & LACKEY

AUBURN, INDIANA.

This maxim can be truly applied to this store. There is a cause for our continually getting the lion's share of DeKalb County's Cash trade. There's a reason for our constant, steady, uninterrupted growth. There's a MAGNET that draws the greater crowds here. THAT MAGNET IS PRICE. Never has our mastery been so complete as it is now. Never have our sales taken such a spurt as during the past two weeks. Our Immense Cash Purchases of Fall Merchandise at the lowest prices ever reached in Dry Goods History, are winning golden results. It's striking DeKalb county retailing with telling effect. No concern in northern Indiana is in a position to sell at the prices we can, and will. Never could we save you money as we can now.

YOU ARE GOING AGAINST YOUR OWN INTERESTS IF YOU BUY ELSEWHERE

Without attempting to supply your wants here—there is sure economy here—we'll prove it to you.

DRESS GOODS.

CATARRH DESCRIBED.

A Short History of a Bad Malady by an Eminent Medical Authority.

This is the way chronic catarrh usually begins: A person catches cold, which hangs on longer than usual. Then follows a semi-liveness of the air passages, which inclines to catch cold very easily. At last the person has a cold all the while seemingly. More or less discharge from the nose, hawking from the throat, nostrils stopped up, full feeling in the head, and cracking in the ears. The Pe-ru-na treatment for this disease is the only treatment that has withstood the test time. Pe-ru-na should be taken without interruption until every symptom disappears.

Send to The Pe-ru-na Drug Manufacturing Company of Columbus, Ohio, for a copy of their latest book on chronic catarrh. This book is a complete guide to the cure of all forms and stages of this dreadful disease.

Dr. Louis H. Cass.

Dr. Louis H Cass has located in Auburn and will practice medicine. He has been a resident of Chicago many years and later moved to Iowa. He has children in Chicago and Ohio who advised him to investigate the oil belt, so he shipped his goods to Ft. Wayne and looked over the territory, not being satisfied with that country he located here. He is a man of seventy three years of age and has considerable experience in his profession. His office is in the corner room on the second floor of the Gandy building. We hope he may receive a liberal share of patronage.

Fair Notes.

We should not forget some of the special features of the fair. O. S Moody, of New, Era, had some of the finest corn and potatoes, also popcorn, that we ever saw. We did not learn who got the premium. In drawing the numbers Friday to see who would get the wagon and the buggy offered by Brown, Culbertson & Boland, the Auburn dealers, a little boy was blindfolded and drew out of the box in which the ticket numbers were, fifty-one ticket numbers. It was announced that No. 50 would be the buggy, and No 51 for the wagon. No. 50 came up, and was found to contain the number, 4882, and that will draw the buggy. No. 51 was found to be No 9501, which gets the wagon. These numbers were called out over the grounds, but no one showed up while we were there. It is likely the number was held by someone who was on the ground the day before, when the attendance was much grater.

The young couple who were married on the grounds Thursday are spoken of as a very worthy young couple. Judge Penfield married them and the fortunate ones who were present say the ceremony was very impressive. They stood up in a wagon in front of the grand stand. The several valuable gifts they were entitled to will materially assist them in getting a good start in life. We hope their future may be bright. As noted yesterday, Will Francis gets the windmill. We will give the other prizes as soon as we are correctly informed.

J. E. Thompson had several fine specimens of the new forage plants. He had a vigorous bunch of alfalfa, a sort of clover, of which cattle are very fond, and on which they thrive greatly. It was of the third crop of this summer, for it yields three crops each season. Then he had a newer forage plant, the "Kaffir corn," The heads look like millet, but the stalks resemble short corn. This is a very abundant crop, yielding Mr. Thompson said, ten to twenty tons to the acre. Both these plants will be very welcome to farmers, especially if the hay crop becomes as uncertain as it has this year.

MARRIED.

David L. Carpenter, of Lamar, Kansas, and Viola J. Widney of St. Jos, Ind., were united in marriage at the home of the bride's parents, October 9, 1895, Rev W. W. Lineberry officiating. Among the friends in attendance, were Mr. and Mrs. A. Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Lodewick and Miss Arvilla Draggoo, of Auburn; John and Ella Moore, of Jackson township, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Hull, Mr. and Mrs. John Widney. Mr. and Mrs Oliver Widney, Mrs. Matilda Widney, Sylvester Widney, and Mrs. Lineberry, all of St. Joe., and immediate relative of the family. Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter expect to spend a few weeks among friends, and then go to Kansas, their future home. The bride has been one of the most active and earnest young ladies in all good works as well as in social circles and abundant good wishes follow her to her new home.

Helping The Poor.

SOME FACTS THAT OUR TRUSTEES SHOULD REMEMBER.

The Quarterly Bulletin of Indiana Charities and Corrections contains the folowing which is worthy of the attention of trustee in DeKalb county:

All over the United States intelligent people are debating whether it is wise to use public funds to help the poor in their homes. Many practical men who have given a great deal of attention to the subject believe that no public money whatever should be used to relieve the poor except except those who are in poor asylums or hospitals or other public institutions. We need not try to decide that question here, but there is no doubt whatever that a very large proportion of the public funds which township trustees give to the poor are wasted or worse than wasted. Whenever money is given to a person who could in some way manage to get along without help a great deal more evil than good is the result. It is one of the easiest things imaginable to manufacture paupers. As soon as people learn that they can get a living or a partial living from the county they will not make an honest effort to earn their own living. They will work just as little as possible. This is not true of all persons who receive help from the township trustees but it is true of a very large proportion of them.

It is a common thing to hear trustees or county commissioners say that it is cheaper to give a person a little help at his home than to send him to the county asylum to be kept entirely as a public charge. At first thought this might seem good policy, but the facts show that it is not good policy. If the county commissioners should issue an order that no person should receive continuous help outside the county asylum, what would be the result? Would all these people who have been getting help regularly, go to the poor asylum and there live off of the county? Not at all. A few would go to the poor asylum, possibly one-fourth or one-third of the entire number which had been receiving continuous help from the trustee. The others would discover that they could get along very well without assistance rather than go to the poor asylum to get it. The result would be then that the county would save a large sum of money every year and the people who had been getting help before would really be better off in every way when they make their own living.

Giving money to people in their homes has a bad influence in the community. If a poor family receives $2 a week from the township trustee, other poor families who are just barely able to make a living, naturally feel that they too should have some assistance from the public. The temptation is constantly before them to cease struggling so hard to make their own living and fall back upon the township trustees for help in the same way that their neighbors are doing. The influence of giving continuous help to a single family has been known to lead directly to the pauperizing of several additional families.

A little study of the amount of money given away by township trustees in different counties of Indiana in the last few years will show very clearly that the amount given is not much of an indication of the amount of poverty in a county. Henry and Randolph counties lie side by side. Both are prosperous agricultural communities, and neither should have a great deal of extreme poverty or want. The population of Randolph in 1890 was 28,085, and of Henry 23,897. In the year ending May 31, 1895, Randolph county trustees gave away $8,713 60, and Henry county trustees in the same year gave away $15,745.57. Does any sane man believe for a moment that it was necessary for the trustees in Henry county to give away almost twice as much money as those in Randolph? Knox county in 1890 had a population of 28,044, almost exactly the same as that of Randolph. Yet while Randolph trustees gave $8,713.70 to the poor, Knox trustees gave $16,594.16. In the same year Marion county with a population five times as large as that of Knox, gave away only $18,408.44 through its trustees. In the same year the trustees of Kosciuskoo county, which had a population in 1890 of 28,645, gave away only $5,998 50. Clark and Cass counties, both with larger populations than Knox, each gave away through its trustees little more than half the amount given in Knox. In the same year Vigo county, population 50,195, gave away through its trustees $15,138.24. There can be no sound reason for this wide variety in the amounts of money given in various counties.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

The Fair

Though the fair is over, a few notes will not come amiss. There were many new features this year, more so, than for many years, and had the weather been more pleasant there would have been thousands more to enjoy them.

THE OLD LOG CABIN

Is a new feature and crowds went to inspect it. Cyrus Bowman was in charge and was never tired of explaining the various articles to those who had never seen them. It almost seems strange that so many are not aware of the fact that such things were used by our fathers and grandfathers. Next year the Cabin will be full of such articles for many spoke to the COURIER about it, saying "we could have brought" such and such a thing had we known of this before now. They should all bring them next year. Among the things to be seen there was the "puncheon" door through which we entered. It was real "puncheon" made a week or two ago, however, split and hewed out by Uncle Geo. Dennison, now 80 years old. Not a nail was used, but as in olden times he had made them without nails so he did now, with the help of a small auger and wooden pins. We can't tell all the interesting things in the cabin. Next year everyone should put in a day to see it.

THE HIPPODROME.

This curious and exhibition is by the same company that gave it last year. All looked with intense interest on the running race, between a horse with a rider, and a horse without anything—not even a halter. It was strange to see how hard he worked for victory—which he gained over the horse with the rider to urge him on. The race between a trained running horse and the greyhounds was exciting. The long slender animals bowed low and ran as if for life and kept even with the swift running horse. And the "clown" dog, got up a big laugh as usual by cutting across lots to get ahead of the rest.

THE TROTTING.

While not much of a judge of trotting it is our impression that the best races ever had on those grounds were the races this year. But there was a good deal of discomfort from a fierce, cold wind from the south, that blew dust and sand in great clouds over about 6,000 people who had gathered around to see the trotting and hippodrome races.

THE HALLS.

They were mostly well filled. In the Floral Hall we found lovely needle work as good as was ever shown anywhere, and a good share of it the work of Auburn's skilled ladies. In the Agricultural Hall, there was a fine display of apples and a fair amount of other products, except grapes, of which there were only a few. All were in charge of Uncle George Denison. And here we found Uncle John Leas, another of the fathers of the fair, but missed seeing Dr. Chamberlain, who is another. In the Music Hall, there were excellent displays though not as abundant in quantity as in some other years. But here, was the grand display of agricultural and other farm products which Will Francis had raised. It was a wonderful display of choice grains of all kinds, and fruits, of the finest, and all arranged so well. Then there was his "farm" which would be hard to beat. He got the first premium on these, and this gives him the motor windmill which that company donates to go with the first premium on display of farm products.

The display of stock and agricultural implements was not as good as some other years, but altogether, the fair was a success.

Good For Dirrim.

W. H. Dirrim, who was taken to Ft. Wayne on Wednesday, has had a successful operation performed on his eyes by Dr. Wheelock. On reaching the city, he rested till next day when the doctor took him in charge and removed the cataract from one eye, the one that had troubled him first. The operation was painless and soon over. The substance removed resembles a small tablet or disk, about the size of a lentil, or the smaller of our common medical tablets. But it grows in such a spot in the eye as to shut off the sight. After this was removed, a hand was held up before him, and he was asked to say how many fingers were held open. He replied "two," which was correct. This shows that he could see, and for the first time in some months. He will probably remain there a week or ten days, when he will come home and will likely wait some time before the other eye is operated on. Geo. Quince, who was with him, came home yesterday and is very hopeful that at least a fair degree of sight may be restored. We sincerely hope so.

FRANK PARRETT,

SHERIFF STROH MAKES A SUCCESSFUL CHASE AND CAPTURE.

As briefly noted yesterday, Frank Parrett, the would be murderer of John Fretz, is safe behind the bars. The story of his capture is an interesting one. It will be remembered that the shooting was done on the evening of Friday, Sept. 13, and the last seen of Parrett was by Mr. Fretz as he turned to go into the house when he was shot. Not a word was heard from him by the public, at least, till Sheriff Stroh came in with him yesterday on the afternoon Wabash train which was, however, considerably behind time. The next day after the shooting, Sheriff Stroh got a clue, the nature of which we do not feel at liberty to state. But it did not pan out of value. Tuesday of next week, he struck the trail again, and again lost it. Other clues were found and lost till about ten days ago he heard that a man of that description was seeking work in lumber camps of the Northern Peninsula of Michigan. So, on Friday of last week he went up into that section and crossing the straits at St. Ignace on Saturday last plunged into the big woods of Mackinac county. Pictures of Parrett had been sent to officers up there, and they reported that a man of that descpription had been seen around there. The sheriff proceeded to Gladstone and got off, but not getting a clue came back to Corinne, then on to Cisco and then back to Corinne. The scent was getting warmer for the men he had on the lookout had partly located a man of that description who had been looking for work. Having made up his mind that his man was at a camp in the woods between Gladstone and Trout Lake, he got a rig and started. It was a wild country and rather a lonesome ride and so crooked was the road that it is not easy to tell just how far they did drive. It was about 12 miles from the nearest postoffice. His man was found at work and was taken into custody almost before he knew what was going on. Mr. Stroh had stood back out of sight till Parrett was arrested, knowing, and as Parrett afterward admitted, that if his man saw the familiar face of the sheriff, he would cause trouble, and perhaps get away. He told Stroh, "If I had seen you, you never would have got me," but he accepted service of the warrant, without putting the sheriff to the trouble of getting a requisition from the governor of Michigan. He said, "Well, I am caught, anyway, and I might as well go at once." And so they came back to St. Ignace and home. He asked about Fretz, and seemed relieved when he learned he was not killed. He had not heard a word from home and supposed Fretz was dead. He claimed he had been at Duluth and from there over into the Dominion, then down Lake Superior by boat to Mackinaw or some pointalong there and from there had worked his way into the woods and was at work when found. He had apparently been able to get a little money some way, but whether by selling Hidy's shot gun or in some other way does not appear. This afternoon he was brought into court and plead guilty. Judge Penfield will wait till next week before sentencing him as he wishes to call in Mr. Fretz and other witnesses so as to obtain a better knowledge of all phases of the case. The charge is assault with intent to kill, and the penalty two to fourteen years.

GOT HIS GUN,

It wasn't Johnny who got his gun, but Mr. Hidy the popular restaurant man. It will be remembered that Parrett borHidy's shot gun to "kill rabbits" the night of the attempted murder. It was this gun that he leaned up behind the willow tree, out of sight, before he called Mr. Fretz out, and with it he fired the shot into Fretz as the interview closed. After the shooting the gun was never heard of. Since he has been back in jail he told Hidy where the shot gun would be found and that an overcoat would be found wit h iYesterday afternoon Sheriff Stroh drove out to the place indicated and found both articles. They were in a clump of bushes in an obscure place between here and Butler both being found together as he had said they would. It would appear from this that that when he left town he struck east across the country, steering about midway between the Wabash and Lake Shore roads. It would appear that having made up his mind to leave the country, he hid the gun and coat, the moonlight enabling him to find a suitable place. Then it is supposed he boarded a Wabash freight at Butler and came back through Auburn Junction and later on got a train somewhere on the Grand Rapids road and so worked his way north. Or, of course, he might have gone by way of Chicago to get to Duluth where he claims to have been. At any rate Hidy has his gun.

BARN BURNED

Sam Weaver loses His Barn and Shed. No Insurance.

At about 1 p. m. today fire was discovered in the garret of the farm dwelling of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Weaver, one mile north of town. Their son Elmer and family were there, who had recently lost their property in Ohio by fire. Mrs. R. S. S. Reed was also there assisting them in making up some clothes as all had burned when their property was destroyed. One of the ladies had been up stairs and came rushing down stating that the garret was on fire. Mrs. Sam Weaver and Mrs. Reed went up and with a few pails of water put out the fire. They then went down stairs and noticed that the barn was all on fire, which stood directly west of the house about 100 feet. The alarm was then given. Two men who were husking corn nearly a half mile away said the fire started in the southwest corner of the barn. The barn stood east and west with a strawstack to the north. Geo. Weaver, who farms the place, was also in the house and ran out. He took off his coat and vest and laid them on the fence near the wagon shed which stood between the house and barn, but a little to the left. He then ran to the barn, his first thought being to get the binder out. But the wind was so strong that in a few minutes he could not get near the barn. The wagon shed also caught fire and among the contents of this building his coat and vest and gold watch burned up. The barn cantained about fifteen tons of hay, self binder, sleigh, bob sleds and three head of horses, one of them belonging to R. S. S. Reed. His wife had driven over. Also the harness and many smaller articles that usually are around the barns. In the wagon-shed, and in a pen connected to the shed, were fifteen head of hogs, a few of which were burned. Also a wagon, buck board and other smaller articles.

The reporter reached the scene about 1:30 and there were nothing left then but the charred ruins. A barn just across the road east came near catching fire. In fact fire did start in the straw stack. But men were there ready to put it out. The loss will run up into the thousands, and the worst of all there is not a cent of insurance.

Elmer Weaver.

It pains the COURIER to record the fact that Elmer Weaver is in jail. The queer circumstance of the house and barn, both getting on fire at the same time Saturday noon, led everybody to conclude something was wrong, and suspicion fell on him, as he had been burned out three times within a few years, at the places where he recently lived in Ohio. After his latest fire over there, in which they lost even their clothing, he had returned here and with his wife, they were staying at his father's when this fire occurred. It will also be noticed that Mrs. Reed lost her horse, by being there to help work on quilts, etc, they were fixing up for Elmer's family. At the fire, Elmer helped as much as anyone to save the property but the suspicion against him resulted in a warrant being sworn out that evening and Sheriff Stroh went out and brought him in. It is the opinion of the sheriff that his mind is affected, and the prisoner himself admitted that he was not always right in his mind. He has always been considered an honest and industrious man.

LATER: What directed attention to Elmer was that he went to the barn, got out his own horse and started off down the lane, just as the alarm of fire was given.

Strange Accident.

Dr. Swarts reports the strangest accident that ever occurred in his many years of practice as a surgeon. A little son of Mr. Manu who lives near Mooresville was Sunday evening playing with his little express wagon. He saw a big turkey gobbler coming his way and was scared and started to run when he struck a small iron at the end of his wagon tongue. The piece of iron struck him in the groin, tore away the muscle that holds the intestines in place at that point allowing them to fall and produce a genuine "rupture." The lad suffered greatly, but of course nothing could be done except by a skilled surgeon. Dr. Swarts was called next morning and he and Mrs. Swarts managed with considerable difficulty to get the parts into place, and he is now in a fair way to recover

Disastrous Fire,

MANDIS MYERS' HOUSE AND ALL CONTENTS ARE BURNED.

This forenoon at about 9 o'clock the farm home of Mandis Meyers who lives about three miles southeast of Auburn was burned to the ground with all its contents. The fire originated from a chimney, though our informant did not know whether the stove pipe ran through the roof or whether there was a chimney. The house was built out of logs. A good cellar was under it and contained about sixty bushels of potatoes, all the canned fruit and other articles which were laid away for winter. Mr. Myers and family are left without any clothing save what was on their backs. Nothing but an old rocking chair was saved. The strong wind kindled the fire so briskly that in less than five minutes what was once a comfortable home. The neighbors all gathered as well as many other people who were on their way to town.

It took some hard fighting on the part of those who had gathered to save the barn and its contents which stood just east of the house. The wind blew fire for nearly a half mile. Stumps and fences were afire in different places east of the house. Unfortunately Mr. Myers carried no insurance. This misfortune fell very heavy on him as we understand he is still in debt on his farm.

The Centennial.

Being so near to Ft. Wayne it is natural that we should take more than the ordinary amount of interest in the success of their celebration. Gen. Wayne, after defeating the Indians down the Maumee, at the battle of "Fallen Timber," soon after marched back up the river, and on Oct. 16, 1794, began the building of a stockade fort on the banks of the river, just where the St. Joseph and St Mary unite and form the Maumee. This is considered as the first actual settlement by white people. It certainly was the first settlement by Americans, but French traders from Canada had at times stopped there for a hundred years or nearly, and for some years the English had a military station near by.

Ft. Wayne people did not succeed in getting up a celebration in October of last year, so it was brought on now. The people have done nobly and left no effort untried to make it a brilliant success. Large crowds were present each day attracted by the unusual event of a "centennial" in this new country. The town was profusely decorated with flags, bunting and the city colors, yellow and black. Immense arches were made across the streets, thousands of electric and other lights were provided, fine bands and companies of troops came, and nearly every one of the great number of societies in the city took part in the great parade of Thursday. On Friday, the closing day, were the closing military drills and the great sham battle. It taxed to the utmost the very liberal facilities provided by the street car company to handle the great crowd that attended the sham battle Friday afternoon. But they succeeded at last in bringing the last stray visitor to the city, safe and sound. Then followed the rush for the fireworks in the evening and the same prolonged struggle to get back to the city in time for trains home. But as far as we know all got home in safety, though many were tired and glad it was over. It was a jolly crowd as well as a big one for it was plain to all that Ft. Wayne people were in earnest when they placarded the town, "The city is yours. If you don't see what you want ask for it." And the press were generously provided for by the city and under the friendly care of C. D. Tillo, of the Newspaper Union, were made to feel that the city's welcome was a living, breathing reality. May their next Centennial be as grand a success.

Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."
DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."
H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

SET FIRE TO A TREE.

During the Night It Fell on the Four Campers, Crushing Them To Pulp.

A special from Elkins, W. Va., says: James Carr, wife, and two sons, one of the latter being 17 and the other 20 years of age, went into the woods with a camping outfit, intending to stay a week digging for roots. They camped at the foot of a giant oak. They built their fire near the tree, and during the night it burned rapidly.

Some time before daylight the fire had eaten its way so far into the trunk of the tree that it toppled over on the tent in which the four persons were sound asleep. The tree was four and a half feet in diameter, and it crushed the tent as if the latter had been an egg shell. James Carr's body was flattened as if a roller had gone over him. His wife's head was crushed to pulp.

The eldest son was also mashed to a jelly, and like his father and mother, did not know what struck him. The other boy was bruised by the heavy branches, but crawled out, and on his hands and knees crept to the cabin of John Long, a mile away, where he told his story. He died two hours later. A rescuing party sent to the camp had difficulty getting the dead bodies out from under the tree.

A Town Sinking.

A circular strip of land 50 yards in diameter, through which passes Pennsylvania avenue, the principal thoroughfare of Wellston, Ohio, subsided at 10 o'clock Sunday morning about three feet. It is supposed the Jackson County Coal Company had removed the pillars in the mine, which caused the break. The subsiding is still going on, and houses are supported by jacks, which are changed to meet every sink. Strangely enough, all the subsidences so far have occurred either at night or before the men went to work in the morning. The street looks like a crescent, lowest in the middle point. The matter has caused alarm, and may result in litigation.

Four Men Killed at a Crossing.

A special from Steubenville, Ohio, says: East bound accommodation, No. 56, on the Panhandle railroad, crashed into a wagon at Miller's station crossing, demolishing the vehicle and killing the occupants. There names were:

Edward Cogan, a driver, 18 years of age.
Samuel Cogan, jr., a plasterer, aged 20.
Samuel Cogan, sr., a plasterer, aged 45.
John Campbell, a hod carrier, aged 26.

Their bodies were horribly mangled. There is a sharp curve near the crossing and the engineer claims he did not see the wagon until too late to stop the train. The victims were residents of Youngstown, near Latrobe, Pa.

Explosion at Anderson, Ind.

Eight men were seriously and two fatally injured by the explosion of a steam pipe in the American wire mills, at Anderson, Ind. The pipe which broke was a 12-inch one, connecting two boilers. Two hundred men were caught in a crowded room and all were more or less injured. The wildest excitement prevailed. All the surgeons in town were summoned. The seriously injured are I. Clamp, Tom Finan, James Rogers, John Jones, Mike McNear, Andrew Sheets, Henry Wykoff and Henry Myers. The mill was badly damaged.

Five People will Die.

During a row which occurred at a colored cake walk near Moorestown, N. J., James Haggerty, a North Carolina negro, drew a revolver and shot Charles McKim, Mrs. Silas Wessels, George Whittaker, and Charles Wiman, none of whom are expected to recover. Some one then shot Haggerty in the back. His wounds are considered mortal.

A Tramp Cremated.

The barn of William Hansford, near Valparaiso, Ind., was totally destroyed by fire together with its contents. The fire was of incendiary origin. A tramp who was seen near the barn is supposed to have perished, as he cannot be found. George Glancy, a farm hand, was seriously burned in trying to save three horses. The loss is $3,000.

Epidemic in Chicago.

The health department has declared both diphtheria and typhoid fever epidemic in Chicago. The department reported 330 new cases of diphtheria last week, one-half of which were fatal. The epidemics are charged to impure water, and the health commissioner has issued warning against drinking unboiled water.

A Bloody Battle.

Dan Benton, Town Marshal, was killed and Andy Coyle, Frank Stevens and Frank Smith were seriously wounded in a spirited battle in the little town of Goldfield, Col., at the foot of Bull Hill, in which revolvers, shot guns and rifles were called into play.

Trampled to Death.

Henry Huffman of Elizabeth, W. Va., was driving down a hill when his team ran away. Huffman was thrown out and trampled to death by his horses.

Declared Off.

The Corbett-Fitzsimmons fight has been declared off by the Florida Athletic club. Corbett and Brady were willing to postpone the fight to November 11, but Julian, as Fitzsimmons' representative, was not, and the club then declared the match off.

Village Burned.

The hamlet of New Bellville, in Brown County, Ind., consisting of a general store, postoffice and a dozen dwellings were destroyed by fire. The store was owned by J. W. Cook, who was also the village Postmaster. The total loss is about $20,000.

Reception to Gen. Miles.

Maj. Gen. Nelson A. Miles, commanding the army, was given a reception in Washington by the army and navy club. The guests invited to meet the Major General were the President, members of the Cabinet, Supreme Court officials, visiting members of the Grand Commandery Loyal Legion, military attaches of foreign legations, etc.

Turkey Yields.

The London Chronicle publishes a dispatch from its Constantinople correspondent, who asserts that he is in a position to announce that all the questions between Turkey and the powers relative to the Armenians have been finally settled.

THREE MEN

Asphyxiated By Gasses in a Well Caused By an Explosion of Dynamite.

A thirty-foot water well on the farm of Claymeyer Wegman, living near Pemberville, Ohio, was shot with dynamite to increase the flow of water. Two hours after the charge of dynamite had been shot off Henry Fahle went down in the well to see what effect the explosion had had. Those at the top of the well waited anxiously for some word from Fahle, but none came. Lewis Wegman then decided to descend into the well and see what was the matter with Fahle. Mr. Wegman in turn was not heard from, and his brother, Charley Wegman, nothing daunted by the experiences of the other two men, descended into the well, and he, too, failed to return or indicate that he was alive.

The workmen then got ropes and tackle and very carefully began to explore the engulfing depths. The three men were found together at the bottom of the well, all dead. They had been asphyxiated by the gasses caused by the explosion of dynamite. Fahle and Charley Wegman were married and Lewis Wegman was single.

FATAL WRECK.

A Water Train Collides with a Milk Train.

Altoona (Pa.) special: Two men were killed and one was fatally and several slightly injured in a wreck on the Martinsburg branch of the Pennsylvania railroad. The dead are: W. F. Good, of Henrietta, fireman of the Martinsburg train, killed instantly. J. Q. Woodring, of Tyrone, front brakeman of water train, both legs cut and head crushed.

The wreck occurred between the Martinsburg mixed train, hauling milk and Altoona shop workmen, and a water train a mile west of this city. The water train, consisting of several tank cars had been ordered to proceed to the "Y" switches near Holidaysburg to get water for the Altoona shops and was just pulling from a siding to the main track when the Martinsburg train came around the curve at full speed. The collision completely demolished both locomotives and derailed several tank cars. The passenger car kept the track.

Dynamite Explosion.

A terrific explosion of dynamite occurred at the government building on the old world's fair grounds, Chicago, killing one man, fatally injuring three more and seriously injuring three others. Samuel Hobart, of 63 Halstead street, had his head blown off by a piece of flying iron. He was five blocks from the scene of the explosion. The names of the injured have not yet been ascertained. The government building was being torn down and dynamite was used for blasting purpose. The dynamite exploded prematurely, from some unknown cause, hurling pieces of broken iron in every direction. Of the six men who were sitting around the building eating their lunch when the explosion occurred, six were injured, three of them fatally.

Vessels Probably Lost.

San Francisco special: It is just 190 days since the British ship Lord Spencer left this port for Queenstown, and not a word has been heard from her. That the English underwriters have fears for her safety is evidenced by the fact that reinsurance has gone steadily up from 10 per cent. to 70 per cent. Much concern is also expressed for the British bark Achilles, bound from the west coast to South America for Hamburg. This is the vessel which picked up Capt. McClune and wife and the crew of the wrecked American ship Arabia in midocean. The castaways were landed at Montevideo, and the Achilles set sail from that port on July 1, and has not since been heard from.

A Trolley Car Collision.

Two crowded trolley cars came together with a crash at Spring Garden street, Philadelphia, badly injuring five persons on one car and giving a dozen others ugly bruises. Those injured severely, all of whom are residents of Philadelphia, are: Alfred Barry, legs badly bruised and cut; John Henry, legs and hips hurt; W. E. Clippe, hand cut and left side hurt; M. A. Miller, injured internally and badly bruised; a woman said to be Mrs. B. F. Hart, face badly cut.

A car was proceeding down Twenty-first street, when a Spring Garden street car crashed into its rear end. The brake of the latter car failed to hold and this caused the accident.

Unfounded.

The Spanish Minister at Washington, Senor de Lome, has received an official cable dispatch from Madrid announcing the statement that the Brazilian Government had taken action granting belligerent rights to the Cuban insurgents to be entirely without foundation. Senor de Lome states that the Government of Brazil has recently given proof of its friendship for Spain by according every facility for the embarkation at Rio de Janeiro in the Spanish transport San Fernando of over 300 Spanish volunteers enlisted to fight in Cuba against the insurgents.

Fort Wayne's Centennial.

Fort Wayne, Ind., celebrated the 100th anniversary of the establishment of a fort at that point, on Oct. 15, 16, 17 and 18. There were thousands of visitors in attendance who were entertained with a sham battle, fire works, old settlers' meetings, band contests, bicycle races, base ball, athletic field sports, etc. The military and civic parade was the largest in the history of the city. The decorations were just simply immense, and all seemed to think that Fort Wayne outdid herself.

Hunted to Death.

An exciting man-hunt near Newmarket, Ind., resulted in the death of John Jones a prominent saw-mill man, but whether the death was caused by suicide or by his pursuers is not known as yet. Jones drank raw alcohol on a wager and went insane. Heavily armed, he started out to terrorize the country, and shot at several farmers. The people rose up in arms to hunt him down, and his body was found in a thicket, he having been shot through the heart. The Coroner is investigating.

Hanging Bee Spoiled.

Mount Pleasant (Ky.) special: Budford Overton was to have been hung Friday for the double murder of Gus Leod, an old pedler, and his wife. As it was to be the first legal hanging that ever took place in Harlan County, the event was anticipated with great expectation by thousands, who expected to witness the execution. Orders have come in fast for reports of the execution, but the event was indefinitely postponed by the escape of Overton, and there is still no clue to his whereabouts.

Pounded to Death.

Frank Kaatwitz pounded and kicked his wife to death on his farm near Ortonville, Minn. The murder was a tragical sequel to a sensational event of ten years ago. Kaatwitz was then a guest at the wedding of a young neighbor. A few days later the young woman deserted her husband and joined Kaatwitz. Upon learning of his wife's perfidy the husband blew his brains out. The widow, with cruel haste, married the man who so brutally murdered her.

$15,000 for Stealing a Wife's Affections.

A jury in Judge Baker's court, Chicago, awarded ex-Congressman R. W. Dunham $15,000 damages for the alienation of his wife's affections by Major E. L. Allyn. The former Mrs. Dunham is now Mrs. Allyn, the ex-Congressman having obtained a divorce after a fierce legal fight in South Dakota and in this State. Mr. Dunham asked $50,000, but the jury cut the amount down to the sum named.

Adrift Sixty Days.

Guaymas (Mexico) special: The British bark Sharpshooter, Capt. Watts, which left Kanin, Chile, July 1 for San Francisco, with 700 tons of nitrate, struck a hurricane August 9 in latitude 11 degrees north. She was partly dismantled and drifted for sixty days. She was towed into this port by the Mexican steamer Oaxica, just as she was about to strike on the rocks. The captain and his wife, three children and eleven men are well, though they suffered severely from lack of water.

Kessler Train Robbers.

Alvin Proctor, suspected of being implicated in the great train robbery on the Lake Shore railroad at Kessler Siding, Ind., two years ago, has been arrested in Nebraska and will be brought to Elkhart, Ind. Proctor disappeared at the time of the robbery. Should it be shown that Proctor was implicated in that memorable train robbery there is little doubt that the case, which has so long remained a mystery to the express and railway companies, will be cleared up.

Escaped from Jail.

Seven prisoners, charged with serious offenses, escaped from the Coshocton County, Ohio, jail recently. The escape was effected by the prisoners securing admission to the female department of the jail. By this they were enabled to get on top of the cells and with an iron poker dug a hole through the brick ceiling. They then ascended to the roof and the ground by means of ladders which had been left against the walls by carpenters who had been repairing the building.

They Blew Out the Gas.

St. Louis special: Meredith Mahan, a prominent stock raiser of Shannon County was found dead in his room at the Ridgeway hotel the other morning, and his room companion, Francis M. Chilton, also a stock raiser from the same county, was found unconscious and dying from the same cause, asphyxiation. They came here with cattle to sell and it is supposed blew out the gas in ignorance.

Preparations for a Bond Issue.

The Cincinnati Enquirer's Washington correspondent sends the following to his paper: It looks as if another issue of bonds is about to be made. If you make inquiry at the treasury department a denial is met. Still the fact is that the bureau of engraving and printing has been preparing for a new installment, and the plates for a new series are nearly ready.

Cut Their Throats.

At Hancock, Mich., the bodies of Chris Kramer and wife, aged people, were found in the cellar of their house with their throats cut from ear to ear. It is quite certain that the double murder was committed for the purpose of robbery, as the old couple were commonly believed to have kept large sums of money secreted in the house.

A Silver Cup to a Gallant Captain.

Berlin special: President Cleveland has sent a valuable silver cup to Ambassador Runyon, to be presented to Captain Alfred Krech, commander of the Hamburg-American line steamer Suevia, in recognition of Capt. Krech's act in saving the crew of eight men of the American schooner Mary E. Amesden, on Feb. 26 last.

The Soap Exploded.

Mrs. William McClelland of Burnet, Ind., was boiling soap, and took a bucketful of it and poured it into the hot grease. There was an explosion that threw the hot lye and tallow in every direction, very seriously burning both arms up to the elbows, as well as her face. She is in a critical condition.

Crushed to Death.

The 3-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David Powell, of Marion, Ohio, while attempting to climb into a heavy gravel wagon, driven by her father, fell beneath the wheel, and was instantly killed. The little one's head was crushed, while her body was not scratched.

A Town Burned.

Blanchester, Ohio, a town of 2,000 inhabitants, is almost wiped out of existence by fire. Forty business houses, the churches, the postoffice, and all the business portion of the city are in ashes. Only twenty dwellings were burned. The loss is over $200,000.

He is a Prince.

The Hon. Charles S. Hackley, president of the board of education of Muskegan, Mich., and regent of the University of Michigan, has presented to the board of education the magnificent sum of $135,000 and $5,000 yearly, while he lives.

Smashed to Atoms.

A Kansas and Arkansas Valley freight train of 13 cars fell through a trestle eight miles east of Kiowa, I. T. The trestle was 144 feet high, and the train was literally smashed into atoms. Thirteen cars of live stock were killed.

A Fatal Error.

Elbert Cass, living near Kokomo, Ind., was placing stone in a well. His father dumped a wheelbarrow load of stone too near the well. One stone rolled into the well and crushed the skull of young Cass, causing death.

Grist Mill Burned.

The elevator and grist mill of F. Dwight & Co., near Montpelier, O., were destroyed by fire. Loss about $28,000, with an insurance of $15,000.

BREAKS THE RECORD.

EXPORTS OF AMERICAN MANUFACTURES INCREASING.

Increases $11,000,000 in Eight Months—Double-Dealing of the Protectionists—Conjuring with Lincoln's Name—General Notes.

Under the Wilson Law.

Democrats advocated tariff reform partly in the interests of wider markets for our manufactures. They knew that with the restricted home market overproduction, so-called, and consequent business depression were inevitable, and that the only way to give steady employment to American workmen, and to create a demand for more manufactured goods, was through a tariff policy which encouraged foreign trade. The Wilson tariff made the raw materials of a number of important industries free, and greatly reduced the duties on others. The result as shown by the Government statistics of the exports of manufactured products is a triumphant indication of the Democratic policy. The following editorial from the New York Herald, a paper which is independent in politics, gives the proofs of the remarkable growth of our export trade:

During the eight months ending with the 31st of August last, the exports of American manufactures exceeded in value the exports for the corresponding eight months of 1894 by 11 1-3 millions of dollars. At this rate the gain for the whole of the present calendar year will be more than $17,000,000, and the total will be decidedly greater than in any year of our national existence.

It is noteworthy that since July 1 the exports of our manufactures have increased even more rapidly than the preceding figures indicate. In July, 1894, they amounted to $14,532,152, but in July, 1895, they were $17,306,192. In August, 1894, the total of manufactured exports was $16,222,384; but in August, 1895 (the last month for which returns have been received), it rose to $19,050,924. This result is most cheering and most remarkable.

At no period in American history have the exports of our manufactured products in a single year gone over $183,718,484. But if the high rate of exportation of this class of American products reported for August, 1895, tinues a twelvemonth, the annual total would be $228,611,000.

The statistics just finished by the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department show conclusively that foreigners are buying many articles manufactured in American mills and workshops more and more freely. In 1894 the July exports of manufactures of wool amounted to only $41,052, and in August to $55,335, but in July and August last they were respectively $52,253 and $76,289—improvements which may be fairly credited to the new fiscal law giving manufacturers of woollens "free wool." In July last our exports of chemicals, drugs, dyes and medicines exceeded by $182,355 those of July, 1894, and the exports of August last exceeded those of August, 1894, by $35,702. Our exports of leather and manufactures of leather in July, 1894, were 1,289,623, but in July, 1859, they were $1,591,338; in August, 1894, they were $1,529,403, but in August, 1895, the amount rose to $2,622,381. The celerity with which our exports of iron and steel and manufactures of iron and steel have been of late increasing may be seen from the following table:

	July, 1894.	July, 1895.
Iron and steel and manufactures of exported	$2,088,464	$2,670,721
	Aug., 1894.	Aug., 1895.
Iron and steel and manufactures of exported	$2,758,029	$3,410,695

In a single month (August last) the exports of American machinery and engines were $2,765,340, against an export in August, 1894, of only $1,205,595.

These are exceedingly encouraging facts for every branch of American mechanical industry. They show that foreign markets can be found for the products of our looms and workshops. A new era has evidently dawned upon American manufactures, and this cannot be gainsaid when the official statistics show (as they now do) an unprecedented volume in the exports of our home-made goods.

"By a Similar Process of Reasoning."

Town Talk notes a tendency of Republican editors on the Pacific coast to re-discuss the tariff and an attempt to make it the leading issue in 1896. It thinks this question has its disadvantages and adds:

"There is nothing that could possibly suit the Democracy better than a rediscussion of the tariff issue in the face of the returning prosperity and confidence that has come to us under the Wilson tariff bill. The Republicans have asserted as an immutable principle that the tariff controls everything; that it is entirely responsible for the prosperity or adversity which prevails under it. Their strongest argument in the campaigns of 1888 and 1892 was to point to the general prosperity and development of the country under the high tariff that prevailed between 1861 and 1890. All this prosperity and development was, they claimed and still claim, the direct logical result of the tariff. By a similar process of reasoning they must be led to the admission that the depression which began with the passage of the McKinley bill and culminated in the panic of 1893 was the result of the tariff then in force; and that the resuscitation of prosperity which began with the passage of the Wilson bill and is still in progress is the result of the beneficial operation of that measure."

Double-Dealing Protectionists.

Finding that the Wilson tariff is likely to yield abundant revenues this year the Republican organs which a short time ago denounced it on the ground that in the first year of its operation there was a small deficit, are now charging that it takes from the people more taxes than did the McKinley tariff. The New York Tribune publishes statistics to show that while in the last year of the tariff of 1890 the amount of duty per capita was $1.90 for the first year of the present tariff the amount was $2.36 per capita.

This typical protection trick will not deceive any citizen who knows why the Tribune selected 1894 as the year for estimating the average taxation under the McKinley tariff. In that year the boasted Republican revenue-producing tariff yielded over $70,000,000 less of revenue than in the previous year, and over $85,000,000 less than in 1891. To be fair the Tribune should have compared the revenue during the first year of the McKinley law with the first year of the Wilson tariff. This would have shown that the per capita tax on each man, woman and child was far higher under protection than under tariff reform.

First the Republicans blamed the Wilson tariff because it did not raise enough revenue. When that argument failed them they turned around and complained that it is raising more revenue than the last year of the McKinley tariff. And yet they seriously claim to be a party of principle.

McKinley's Exploded Idea.

Gov. McKinley's opening speech is intended to show, among other things, that wages were higher under his tariff than under any other.

It is not true; but what if it were? We can show McKinley that wages under his tariff were 50 per cent. higher in some States of the Union than in others. If the tariff regulated wages why were they not equally high all through the country?

Furthermore, it can easily be shown that wages were higher in the non-protected than in the protected industries.

While Gov. McKinley is about it will he tell why his party in Congress voted down, under his lead, a proposition providing that no increase of duties should take effect unless accompanied with a corresponding increase in wages? Will he explain how it was that though he increased the duties in every schedule save two—an average of over 10 per cent. in bounties to manufacturers—there was hardly a single instance of an increase of wages under his tariff.

Gov. McKinley can be counted on to fight shy of all these facts and inquiries. But there is one fact that will outweigh all of his twisted figures and limping logic. This fact is that the wages of 1,000,000 workingmen have been increased under a Democratic tariff that cannot be disturbed for two years to come. Juggle with figures as he may, this fact puts him down.—New York World.

200,000 Tons Per Week.

With the duties on pig iron reduced 17 per cent. by the Wilson tariff the weekly production of all the furnaces now working has reached the tremendous figure for Oct. 1 of 201,414 tons. This is the largest production in the history of the country or of any other country, and is a complete answer to the false prophets of protection who claimed that the iron industry would be injured by lower duties. At this rate the total output for the next year will amount to 10,000,000 tons, nearly a million tons more than in any previous year.

That the present unprecedented prosperity in the iron industry is not merely a temporary boom, is shown by the large orders, already amounting to 150,000 tons, given for steel rails by leading railways for delivery in 1896. The demand for all kinds of steel, especially for building purposes, continues in excess of the supply, and there is no indication of a falling off in orders. The McKinleyites will not receive much support from the centers of the iron industry this year.

That Awful Cobden Club.

"If the woolen mills are being 'totally ruinated,' as the McKinleyites assert they are, by the new tariff," asks the Chattanooga Times, "how comes it about that these same mills have consumed about 100,000,000 pounds more wool, in the last six months, than they ever consumed in an equal period before?" We cannot answer certainly, but probably the Cobden Club is supplying consumers with money to buy more woolen goods than they ever bought before just to hurt "the cause of American protection." Sallie Lewman's Gold.

When administrator J. C. Lewman and the appraisers visited the house of Sallie Lewman, the eccentric spinster who left $50,000 and no will, at Jeffersonville, they found $5,700 in gold and paper money sticking in the cracks, under the carpet, in old fruit cans, and $1,000 in the cellar. A nine-years-old check on a local bank was found between the leaves of a book. The house had been ransacked and hundreds of dollars doubtless taken. Much of the money was found lying on the floor, three packages having been torn open. Everyone in the neighborhood knew Miss Lewman's eccentricities, and were aware that she had money hidden about the place. The searchers are worked up to a frenzy, and every inch of space about the house is being carefully scrutinized. So great is the excitement in the surrounding country that guards have to be placed around the premises to prevent the place being invaded and torn down by persons eager to get some of the money.

Minor State Items.

The postoffice at Berlington has been discontinued.

Danville has contracted for an electric light plant.

Michigan City's sand mountain is about to be sold to a brick manufactory.

Henry Huntington, aged 72, of Shelbyville, was fatally stricken with paralysis.

James Humphrey fell into a fire cistern at Wabash, and was dangerously injured.

The Odd-fellows of Logansport are forming a company to build a $30,000 temple.

A new Sunday paper was sprung at Richmond, Sunday, called "The Day Betwixt."

John Ward, an old resident of Edinburg, committed suicide by drowning himself in Blue River.

Charles Morris, aged 23, fell from a tree near Lafayette, Sunday, and was almost instantly killed.

Connersville wants a street railroad. It will cost $300,000 to build it and $5,000 of the amount has been subscribed.

Frank Crawley, aged 15, of Mt. Carmel, Ill., attempted to jump on a train at Vincennes. He fell and his head was cut off.

Farmers about Elwood say they will continue to burn flambeaux on their farms and will fight the State gas inspector in the courts.

Vital statistics of Wayne County for the three months show that there were a total of 146 deaths, 193 births, 64 marriages and 172 cases of contagious diseases.

At Hagerstown, Wayne County, another gas well has been drilled in by the local gas company. Its capacity is about equal to the several others drilled there.

The laying of the gas line by the Chicago pipe line company has been stopped in Grant County by the Sheriff. He says the company has no franchies in that County.

The attempt to raise $100,000 to be added to the endowment fund of Earlham College is meeting with success, and over $50,000 of the amount has already been received.

Natural gas from the Indiana field has been brought through the new pipe line of the Wabash Fuel Company to Wabash. This gives Wabash competition with the Dietrich syndicate, and as long as the supply holds out will insure low rates.

M. C. McWhinney, superintendent of the Marion Street Railway, was fatally injured recently. He was holding a chisel for a workman as the latter struck it with a sledgehammer. A chip was broken from the hammer piercing McWhinney's neck.

Otto Myer, while hunting in the country near Fort Wayne, was shot by the accidental discharge of his gun. He reached up to knock an apple off a tree with the butt end of his gun. The hammer encountered a limb and the charge entered his abdomen. He lingered through the night in agony.

Government Surveyor Shanks and a force of men are surveying White River in Daviess County, with a view to cleaning out the river and making it a navigable stream. The river will be cleaned from Shoals to Indianapolis, by way of Maysville, four miles south, and locks will be built to force the water where there is a fall.

Work has progressed quite rapidly on the addition to the Eastern Indiana Hospital for the Insane, located at Richmond, and it is expected that it will be ready for occupancy by Jan. 1 and that it will enable the management to remedy the overcrowded condition of the institution. The new addition will be used as an assembly hall, general-dining-room and kitchens.

THE Humane Society at Richmond some months ago asked the Board of Metropolitan Police Commissioners to appoint a Human Inspector, but they declined to do so. The case was then appealed to the Circuit Court, and Judge Comstock decided against the society, on the ground that the law governing the case applied only to cities of 29,000 inhabitants or over.

The Supreme Court has overruled the petition for a rehearing in the fee and salary law case. The cause referred to the compensation of County Treasurers, and was brought by the Treasurer of Vigo County. The petition was based upon alleged errors of the Court in making its former ruling the effect of which was to uphold the legality of the fee and salary law.

Magistrate Eph Keigwin of Jeffersonville has been buncoed out of $75 by a confidence woman claiming to be Mrs. Joseph Bullah of Wilmington, Del., and a member of the First Presbyterian Church of that city, of which Rev. Albert Keigwin, brother of the 'squire, is pastor. She induced the magistrate to identify her at the bank, and cashed a check drawn on a Wilmington bank, which came back unhonored.

The heirs to the famous Antrim estate in Ireland, of which there are about twenty-five in this State, have received word that the alleged $60,000,000 estate never existed and that the supposed heirs in this country have no show whatever of securing any part of the small estate left.

A clerk in a Fort Wayne music store known as John Smith has received official notice that his brother, Baron Von Seckendorf, had died in Pommen, Prussia, and the title and estate, which is worth millions, goes to him. Smith will leave for Germany at once. He states that he left home because his brother took a dislike to him.

CHAPTER IV.—(Continued.)

"Of course I might have seen the ridiculousness of the whole affair at once. Fancy my being jealous of the Colonel! Ha, ha, ha!"

At the sound of his rough merriment Jane winced, and held up her hand.

"I cannot bear any more now," she exclaimed, in a shrill voice that startled herself as much as it did him.

"You are in pain?"

"Yes, I am in pain," she answered, truthfully, though just then she had no thought of her broken arm.

He took her hand in his to say "good-by." Some idea had been in his mind of a warmer farewell, but he had never kissed her yet, and the pale, proud face she turned toward him was no encouragement to begin. Then somewhat shamefacedly he withdrew.

The interview had not been a successful one, he felt. He had wounded her and frightened her by the brusqueness of his ways and speech, and had won from her no ratification of her former promise. It struck him ruefully that he must have lost the knack of wooing a pretty girl—that his tongue had forgotten its ancient cunning.

His conclusions were correct. Jane had thought him more boorish than she had known him to be before, and more than ever regretted that she had not listened to her mother's warning.

CHAPTER V.

Mrs. Dene had been very constant in her visits to Jane during her convalescence. Independently of her desire to gratify the Colonel by showing his protege any kindness in her power, she liked the girl for her own sake, and was zealous for her social success.

"You are so pretty you are sure to please," she told her candidly one day.

"Don't you think"—hesitatingly—"that it is rather vulgar to be pretty?"

"If so, it is a vulgarity that many would be glad to share"—laughing.

"Very likely, but that does not alter the fact. In England they say every milkmaid and fisher-girl you meet has a trim figure and pretty face. Good looks are only another name for good health. Now, to be well educated——"

"You are as well educated as many of the women who move in good society, and you have very charming manners, which you will find more useful still. What else do you want?"

"I wish I could dress as well as you," complained Jane, who, like a very woman, was inclined to set a high value upon that branch of feminine industry.

She sat now smoothing down the folds of her pale-blue gown, and pondering what had been said; and as Mrs. Dene watched her in some amusement, trying to divine her thoughts, she saw her hands meet suddenly in a tight clasp, and a warm blush suffuse her face. Curious as to who or what could have caused this agitation, Mrs. Dene turned her head sharply, and to her surprise saw Colonel Prinsep standing in the veranda behind her.

The Colonel met her unconsciously scornful glance with a defiant if somewhat embarrassed gaze; but, though he took her hand in greeting, he addressed himself exclusively to Jane.

"I came to ask if you were better," he said.

"You are always so thoughtful," murmured Mrs. Dene, with malicious sweetness.

"I am quite well now, thank you," answered unsuspecting Jane.

She would have been aghast had she known that the love of which she was herself scarcely aware had been so easily discovered. As it was, she went on talking so calmly that the Colonel felt ashamed of his own want of self-possession, and exerted himself to join in the conversation. But in spite of every effort he felt disconcerted still, and rose very soon to go.

A little to his dismay, Mrs. Dene expressed her intention of accompanying him.

"Would it be troubling you too much to drive me to my bungalow?" she asked. "My own carriage was not ordered until seven o'clock, and I remember there is something I must do."

"It will give me the greatest pleasure," he assured her, gravely.

Smiling her thanks, she kissed Jane affectionately, and went out, while the Colonel followed, nervously twitching his mustache.

That his suspicion was not entirely unjustified the lady's opening words seemed to testify, for it is notorious that an appeal to "auld lang syne" is generally the preamble to something disagreeable.

"We have always been friends, have we not, Colonel, Prinsep?" she began, as, settled comfortably in his dog-cart, they drove quickly toward her home.

"Always, Mrs. Dene. I hope there is no reason we should not remain so still."

"Of course not. But I want to take advantage of our friendship to ask you a favor—the first."

"You may be sure I shall not refuse it unless obliged," he said, politely.

"Then don't flirt with Jane Knox. It is not fair. She is so young and inexperienced in society's ways, and you—I can't pay you compliments to your face," she finished, laughing.

"Indeed, I have no thought of flirting."

"But you may be drawn into it. Men are so weak where a pretty girl is concerned. And you will not deny that she is already evidently attracted by you."

"You would think me a dreadful coxcomb if I admitted the soft impeachment," he retorted, smiling.

"Whether you admit it or not, it is a fact. I think it was unmistakably written on her face to-day."

"And have you decided whether this very patent affection is returned?" he asked, rallying, partly to carry off a certain sheepishness which all men feeel on being told they have won a woman's love.

"Certainly not yet; and it is extremely unlikely that you ever will return it. That is why I want you to keep away and let her get over this infatuation."

They were nearing her bungalow now, and she drew her white shawl close, and picked up her umbrella which had fallen down.

"You are not angry with me?" she asked him presently.

"Angry with you? No."

"And you don't think I have meddled with matters that do not concern me?"

"I think it is like your sweet womanliness to speak as you have done. I respect you for it, and thank you."

They had stopped before her door, and jumping to the ground, he assisted her to alight.

"Good-by; and, Mrs. Dene, I shall remember what you have said, and I won't——"

He stopped, in half-amused embarrassment.

"Won't what?" she persisted, mercilessly.

"I won't flirt with your little friend, I promise."

Laughing at his comical confusion, she shook hands with him, and wished him good-by, and stood for a moment looking after him as he drove away. Then, with a smile still hovering upon her lips, she went into the bungalow.

Smiling still, she sauntered into the drawing-room, slowly taking off her gloves; but her face became expressionless in a moment when she saw her husband seated at the open window. How was it that his presence seemed to drive every feeling from her heart except—except—was it only fear?"

"Gerald, if I had known you were here I would have come home earlier."

"Then I am glad you did not know, for I never wish to deprive you of any pleasure."

He had noticed how quickly the smile had faded from her face on seeing him, and was hurt that it should be so. Was he always to be a restraint upon her? Could he not even share her simple every-day thoughts, though he were forever shut out from participating in her deeper joys and sorrows?

"My pleasure is with you," she said, gently, as though conscious of what was in his mind.

"Your duty, perhaps. I wish the words were synonymous."

Her lips quivered, and the tears came into her eyes, but before they could fall he was at her side, holding her ungloved hand between his own.

"Nora, don't cry. I am a brute. I did not mean anything I said. I was only vexed for a moment that I had not succeeded in making your life happier than it is."

She looked up at him sweetly, if gravely still, through a mist of unshed tears.

"Indeed," she said, "I think I am happier than I know," and she left him puzzling over the words.

CHAPTER VI.

When Captain and Mrs. Dene met again at dinner neither made reference to what had passed between them. It was the first time that there had been even an approach to a quarrel, yet it had seemed to draw them nearer to each other and bring some warmth into their relations. Anything was better than that cool politeness.

But, though in their hearts there was no appreciable change, a difference was felt in their manner to each other. He talked a little faster than usual, but she was quieter, for her head was full of a new plan that she wanted her husband's assistance to mature.

She opened the subject directly they repaired to the drawing-room.

"Gerald, have you answered that invitation yet from the Tent Club for the pig-sticking at Cawnpore?"

"No, by Jove! I quite forgot. Just remind me again to-morrow morning. I feel too lazy to write now."

"And about that pig-sticking—you would enjoy it, would you not?"

"I dare say I might—if I went."

"And why should you not go?"

"Do you wish me to do so?"

"Yes."

He drew himself up impatiently as he rose from his seat.

"Very well; I will go," he said, and thought the discussion ended.

But she looked up blankly into his face.

"I want to take Jane Knox with us, if you won't mind," she said.

His countenance fell; but he would not show that he was disappointed that the tete-a-tete was to be broken.

"Let us make a party of it," he said, cheerfully, after a few moments of silence. "'Three is trumpery, four is company,' and young ladies always want some one to flirt with."

"The very thing! Gerald, how clever you are! Let us ask Major Larron."

"Why him, of all others?" frowning.

"Why, because he is the richest, of course." She stopped short, remembering how strange it must seem that she should recommend as a husband for another the man who had refused herself. How true it is that time heals all wounds! That episode in her life seemed very distant now, and all the feelings it had awakened had died a natural death.

"If you are intent upon match-making, there are others nearly as rich as he. This is too expensive a regiment for a poor man."

"Which is lucky," replied his wife, dryly, "for girls seem to have a knack of setting their affections on the wrong man."

He looked at her keenly Was she speaking from her own experience or another's?

"I am afraid the task you have set yourself will prove an arduous one. Now, there is Val Graeme, who, besides the wealth which you seem to consider indispensable, possesses good looks and a winning manner. Why not choose him?"

"I was thinking of the title," replied Mrs. Dene, thoughtfully. "Have you forgotten that Major Larron will be Lord Larronmore some day, while Mr. Graeme's money was gained in trade?"

"You seem to expect great things for your friend I should have thought the latter match a more suitable one, supposing that either cared 'to play to win.'"

He spoke savagely, for the doubt had assailed him whether perhaps she regretted the title which once she might have shared, and he invariably grew bitter when the circumstances of his marriage were recalled to him.

But his wife, who had started at his tone, guessed what was passing through his mind, and with a gesture succeeded in clearing the cloud from his brow.

CHAPTER VII.

Unaware of the schemes that had been made for her settlement in life, Jane was charmed when the invitation came for her to go to Cawnpore. Independently of a natural love of change and gayety, she was full of nervous delight at the idea of entering society—the society of which she had so often thought and dreamed.

And her mother was no less pleased. She realized at once the advantage it would be to her daughter to make her first appearance under other auspices than her own, and where her former circumstances were not known.

"It is giving the girl a fair chance," she said, complacently, to her husband.

"And it is particularly kind of Captain and Mrs. Dene," he replied. For the quartermaster was more sensible of the condescension than was Mrs. Knox, who, flattered though she was at the attention, did not share the soldier's natural reverence for his officer. Then he added, doubtfully: "I wonder what Jacob Lynn will say?"

"What has he to do with it?" asked Mrs. Knox, sharply.

"Everything, seeing that he is to be the girl's husband."

She looked at him in utter scorn.

"Do you really think that that will ever be?"

"Why not? A promise is a promise; and I don't want Jane to be such a fine lady as to forget her first friends," he answered, doggedly.

"Is it true, John, that the sergeant has taken to drinking lately?" Mrs. Knox asked, presently.

"I heard something about it, but one does not believe everything one hears."

"He was always wild!"—shaking her head.

It so happened that Jacob Lynn heard nothing of Jane's projected visit until she had already left. Then he came to Mrs. Knox and reproached her bitterly for what he called her unfair reticence.

"You have owed me a grudge ever since Jane promised to be my wife. But she promised of her own free will, so it is unjust to use your influence against me," he said, sulkily, at the end of the tirade. "Everything is against me. Be on my side!" he pleaded.

"I have given you my advice already, and can do no more," she answered, coldly.

That same evening Mrs. Knox wrote to her daughter, telling her all home news and outside gossip, but intentionally refraining from saying a word, good or ill, of Jacob Lynn.

Subtract Foskett.

"Peter Gannett's boy Eben is real smart at his books, I hear," said Grandfather Rollins, as he and his grandson Rob were out at the barn milking the cows one night. "Ain't that so, bub?" "Why, yes, he's a good hand at 'rithmetic and spellin', and so on," returned Rob, without evincing much enthusiasm. "But he's awful slow at games," he added, after a moment's pause.

"Rob," said Grandfather Rollins, turning a sharp gaze on the boy, and speaking with a good deal of severity, "once or twice lately you've put me in mind of a feller that used to live over in Rickville when I was a boy. I don't rightly recall what his Christian name was, fer the boys at school all called him 'Subtract' Foskett, an' that was the name he went by.

"You'd ask him about anybody, an' fust off he'd appear to be speakin' of 'em fair an' square; but before he got through there was allus somethin' to take the juice out of whatever he'd told ye that was pleasant.

"He'd say, 'Aleck Stevens is a real smart boy, smart as a steel trap; he's such a boy for books, though, that I don't b'lieve he does much round the house; I guess they don't depend on him to help much.'

"'Yes, Molly Spears is a pooty gal, that's a fact. There ain't many pootier round here. I wish she didn't set quite so much by her looks, though. Folks can see that she knows jest about how pooty she is.'

"'Did I hev a good time down to my Cousin Frank's house? Oh, yes, splendid. Frank's a real jolly boy; he knows how to make folks laugh. If he hadn't got such an awful quick temper, there wouldn't be much better comp'ny anywhere than Frank is.'

"An' so it went. It didn't make no matter what you asked him, you'd get jest that kind of an answer every time. n' there wa'n't anybody in Rickville that had a tongue folks was so sca't of as they was of Subtract Foskett's.

"You're nothin' but a yearlin', Rob, an' I hev hopes of ye, fer I don't think the habit's settled onter ye, yet," concluded Grandfather Rollins, as he rose stiffly from the milking stool. "If I thought it was, I sh'd be clean diskerridged; fer I sh'd ruther any relation o' mine would be sleepin' out in the buryin'-ground than livin' t' be like Subtract Foskett!"

A Traveling Prison.

L. McDaniels, of this city, states that on a recent trip to Mount Leonard, Saline County, 73 miles east of here on the Chicago and Alton Railway, he learned that the officials of that place were pondering over a legal case without precedent in the annals of the Supreme Court. A negro was arrested there recently for "shooting craps." As Mount Leonard is a very orderly town and has no calaboose, the negro was placed over night in a box car on the side track, locked in and left without a guard. When they went for him next morning, the prisoner, as well as the calaboose on wheels, was gone. The prison car had been made part of a train that came along in the night, and the negro was soon speeding away from Mount Leonard at the rate of about 25 miles an hour. For some time it was not known which way he had gone, but it was afterward learned that the train was east-bound. The man is an involuntary fugitive from justice at some place not yet ascertained. Some Mount Leonard people think that instead of the negro being the one who is in trouble, it is they, as a trespass was committed when they forced him into the railway company's property, and they are liable for damages. The negro, however, had no business that suffered by his absence and uneasiness has partially subsided.—Kansas City Star.

Great Swimming Feat.

Martin Sullivan, a white sailor on the cruiser Minneapolis, now at the Norfolk navy yard, was ironed recently for desertion. He escaped frim his cell last night and while handcuffed leaped overboard and swam across the river to Berkley, half a mile away. He hid under a raft while the cruiser swept the water with her search lights. When they were turned off he made his way to Berkley, where some negroes filed his handcuffs off. He then exchanged his uniform for citizen's clothes and engaged to work his passage to New York on a barge. When a launch from the yard passed the barge to-day he hid in a boiler, but was subsequently captured.

"I'll Hang My Harp on a Willow Tree" has attached to it a bit of royal romance. It was written by a young nobleman, who became deeply enamored of Queen Victoria a year or so before she ascended the English throne, which event destroyed his hopes of winning her hand. The words first appeared in an English magazine, and were set to music by Wellington Guernsey.

THE AMERICAN TRAMP

SOME CHARACTERISTIC TYPES OF THESE VAGABONDS.

Combination of Circumstances that Is Evolving Novel Varieties of American Nomads—Wandering Willie Meandering Mike and Plodding Pete.

Trampus Americanus.

Our North American tramp nuisance has more than once been ascribed to the climatic influences of a continent which, for ages, remained a haunt of nomadic hunters, but the truth seems to be that the industrial classes of all ages and all countries have been annoyed by the manifestations of an instinct which, in the United States, has been developed by an unparalleled combination of propitious circumstances. As a matter of mere climatic predilection, writes F. L. Oswald in the Globe-Democrat, professional tramps would probably prefer the almost perpetual spring of Southern France, but the thrifty citizens of that truck-farm Eden have repressed vagrancy by a code of by-laws that could never be enforced upon the easy-going natives of republican America.

THE HANG-OUT.

THE PEDDLER TRAMP.

In France, and, indeed, all over Central and Southern Europe, people live in towns or villages, and the farmsteads that hear no chickens crow but their own, as they express it in Tennessee, are known only in the Austrian Alps and in the highlands of Norway. The lowland roads, from Havre to Moscow, are patrolled by gendarmes, or mounted constables, apt to stop every suspicious pedestrian and ask more questions than an American tramp would have to answer after an attempt at highway robbery. Even the grumbling good wife who contrives to butter another "handout" after satisfying half a dozen similar demands in about as many hours, is not given to cross-examination. The ups and downs of her own ancestors may have something to do with that tolerance, as well as her democratic principle of giving a suspect the benefit of every doubt, and rather assist twenty fugitives from justice than turn the bulldog upon one deserving applicant for charity. The gold hunters who, a few months ago, traversed the sandhills of Western Australia, reported that on a journey of 1,800 English miles they found only three pools of drinkable water, one rain a year being about the average of that discouraging climate. Drouths of that sort are almost unknown on the continent of Columbus. In East America, at least, perennial springs can be found in every wooded hollow, and the entire mountain system of the Alleghenies, with all their spurs and ramifications, abounds in attractive camping grounds. "Hang outs," as the knights of the pike call their bivouacs, are found near every principal city of the Union—generally in some shady dell just beyond the limit of the corporation lines. Occasional rainy spells do not damp the spirits of the expert vagrant. He knows weather sheds and isolated barns, and further south hundreds of abandoned homesteads, often with snug, weather-proof buildings and good orchards. One must have traveled in Georgia and the Carolinas to credit the multitude of these monuments of our North American migration mania. "Gone West," "Moved to the city," says your guide, as you pass farm after farm, with the fences down and the flower path covered with rank grass. "Lots of good apples in there," he often adds, "but there is no sale for them, and the folks round here have more than they can use themselves. It looks like a sin to let all that fruit spoil."

The Commonwealer's Audacity.

Brother Commonwealer relieves the community of such scruples. In wet summers a whole gang of his brethren will establish their headquarters in a desirable ruin, keeping the tin can boiling with the produce of extensive raids and fuel from the pile of molding fence rails. In stress of circumstances a belated veteran of the cold lunch brigade will not hesitate to avail himself of the temporary desertion of a comfortable dwelling house, and a Kentucky grass widow, on her return from a few days' visit to a sick sister, was horrified to find a 6-foot tramp in her bed and a well-selected assortment of her comestibles in the usurper's capacious gripsack.

Flight from the scene of such exploits is facilitated by the free and easy methods of our railway employes. In Pennsylvania and all over the South freight trains with dozens of visibly empty cars can be seen trundling by, or stopping on a sidetrack where nobody tries or cares to prevent a surreptitious addition to the cargo of live stock. A reporter of a Chattanooga paper found "six hoboes on one freight, south-bound, and four on another that had just come in from the West. He called a brakeman's attention to the result of his investigation, but was told that the evil was irremediable, and must be connived at to avoid worse things—midnight volleys of stones and malicious destruction of freight and rolling stock. En passant the railroader, however, did take a peep into one of the misused box cars. "Get a move on yourselves, now," he growled. "D'ye suppose the railways have nothing to do but carry bums? Get out there, I say!" But then went on without caring to ascertain the effect of his protest.

In dark nights passenger trains, too, have to carry such travelers. Joe Krieger, the "King of Tramps," as he called himself, a year ago offered to bet that he could make the trip from Boston to Los Angeles in two weeks, without troubling a ticket agent, and laughed at the idea of extra vigilance on the part of the Southern Pacific railroader availing to baffle a tourist of his experience. Cinder showers do not dislodge the incubus who crouches on the platform between the baggage car and the tender of the locomotive, and only at long intervals his enterprise leads to events like that reported from Pulaski, Tenn., where a few weeks ago a contraband passenger was riddled with bullets in a fight with a gang of train robbers. River steamers not only permit, but often invite impecunious travelers to accept a temporary berth on the roustabout deck in consideration of their assistance at woodpile work, and the crew rarely grudges the volunteer a share of their pot luck.

DOWN TO BUSINESS.

THE TRAMP TRAGEDIAN.

Thus encouraged, the army of unkempt peripatetics has multiplied like the rabbit population of New Zealand, and blossomed out into types adapted to every virtue and every foible of the charitable public. There is the tragedy tramp, who harrows the souls of sympathetic servant girls with tales of woe, and spices his jeremiads with graphic accounts of recent railway horrors, shipwreck and cyclones, often vindicating his habit of veridiction with bundles of greasy testimonials. He can sigh, too, but refrains from tears, since his experience with the Detroit apple woman: "Madam, may I sit down here and weep?" "No, you don't. Police! quick! police!"

Artful Dodgers.

The peddler tramp's application for cold viands are always preceded by an attempt at commercial transactions. "Need any needles, madam?" "No, sir." "Any pins?" "Don't want them." "Buy some matches, please; only 3c a box." "Oh, pshaw—they're a nickel for three boxes at the next-door grocery." "All right" (closing his satchel with a look of saintly resignation). "Never saw such hard times; oh, madam—say, couldn't you spare a fellow a scrap of anything to eat?" The Chesterfield tramp introduces himself with a bow and a paragraph of classic English, seasoned, perhaps, with a flavor of foreign accent; evidently a gentleman in reduced circumstances; or, who knows, perhaps a French count, or poet, fortune-wrecked in a struggle with the prosaic realities of the New World. Is he going to negotiate a loan? What! only 7c, for paper and envelope and foreign postage? Why, of course; give him a dime, to make it a round sum. Then there is the proxy tramp, who lurks around the corner, while a runaway youngster does the begging for him; the gregarious tramp, who travels in gangs, trusting to the strength-in-union principle, and, worst of all, the blackguard tramp, who terrorizes unprotected housekeepers with scowls and hints at his talent for brutal invectives and inuendoes. "Tell the old woman to come down here." Little girl (after a brief interview with the materfamalias)—"My mother says she is sorry she can't see you." "Can't see me—what's the reason? Is she blind?" Then next door, where he is met by a silver-haired clergyman: "Can you give a man a cold snack?" "Why, now, that's too bad; all my folks are out, and there's nothing left from dinner." "Hand's a nickel, then." "Well, that's just the trouble—my wife took my purse along." "Can't you find a scrap of cold lunch?" "No, I told you there's nothing left over from dinner." "Any apples?" "Our cellar is so wet we can't keep them in this warm weather." "Oh, that's it? Now, look here, old man; I would ask ye for a drink of water, if I wasn't sure you'd swear on a stack of Bibles that your cistern froze up last night."

But the most characteristically American variety of the species is the professional tramp, who has firmly made up his mind to die behind a hedge rather than accept a chance for any kind of work, under any circumstances. The gypsies, the representative vagrants of Southern Europe, have half a dozen by-trades. They tinker, they tell fortunes, they buy and sell horses. The journeymen artisans of France and Germany are compelled by law to work a month steady, even at a minimum compensation, before applying for another week's wander license; they may abuse that license by confidence tricks and petit larceny, but the American thoroughbred rejects by-trades even in that form. He loves the art of uncompromising vagrancy for art's sake; and as long as he can walk and beg, neither stimulates his appetite with manual labor nor lets the peace of his digestion be troubled by the Nemesis of crime.

Tortured by Mosquitoes.

A "combination atlas and map of Trumbull County," published at Chicago, Ill., under the supervision of L. H. Evans, in the year 1874, tells a queer story of early frontier justice.

"The first trial tribunal was composed of a self-organized body of men, who tried and convicted a man for stealing from a fellow boarder. He was convicted, and sentenced to be divested of his apparel, tied to a tree, and subjected to the bites of mosquitoes for the period of an hour. It was soon discovered, however, that the man would have little or no blood left at the expiration of his term of punishment, and he was released at the end of the first half hour. He was never known to steal again.—Columbus Journal.

Why Denver's Houses Are So Fine.

Kate Field, who is out in Denver, is very much impressed with its lovely characteristics, especially as manifested in its fine houses. Every miner who strikes it rich, she says, comes to Denver, seeks an architect and orders a house built, merely saying, "Beat all creation and d—n the expense." Thus she accounts for the beautiful homes of the city of the great divide.

LAFAYETTE, IND., May 2, 1894.

Lyon Medicine Co., Indianapolis, Ind.:

GENTLEMEN—It is with pleasure that I can conscientiously say a good word for LYON'S SEVEN WONDERS. For more than a year I was troubled with indigestion and stomach disorders. Various remedies which I tried gave me no relief, until one day last summer I was told by a brother drummer of the virtues of LYON'S SEVEN WONDERS. I concluded to try it, and am happy to say one box, costing only one dollar, entirely cured me. To those who suffer as I did I would strongly advise them to use LYON'S SEVEN WONDERS.

Yours truly,

Two After One.

WILSON EDINGER ELOPES WITH HIS BROTHER'S WIFE.

Arrested By Marshal West and Taken Before Squire Walters.

Mrs. Howard Edinger, who has been stopping at the Central House since Saturday morning, seems to have two lovers A brother of her husband, Wilson Edinger, was a visitor at their home near Summit, Friday evening, and gave her $15 to elope with. She reached Auburn Saturday morning with her trunk well packed and registered at the Central House. Monday morning she went to the 9:34 Lake Shore train and met Wilson. Mrs Edinger is the mother of three children, one of whom was born before her marriage. This child she brought to Auburn Junction and sent it into Ohio to its grandparents. The other two children were left at home for the father to care for. After the arrival of the would be masher yesterday the couple did not appear at the Central House. It is not known where they staid last night, but this morning they were promenading the streets of Auburn when the woman's husband arrived and had Marshal West take his brother to the calaboose. Later on they were all three brought before Squire Walters. But a recent decision of the Supreme Court holds that no charges can be made unless it is proven that they habitually cohabited together. They finally compromised and left on the noon train for home, the husband and wife taking a coach and Wilson the first step on the front end of the baggage car.

Mixed Drinks.

It is good old democratic doctrine that "mixed drinks" are an abomination, that "straight drinks" are the only proper things. True enough. Henry Shull has a couple of orchards and for a week or so had a barrel of cider lying in his yard and as he is always liberal hearted the neighbors have helped him to enjoy it. Sunday night, however, some one stole a lot of it and what was worse, took from under the leach tub a crock partly filled with lye, put it under the cider barrel faucet, let some cider in and there left it —a very careless thing to do. Yesterday a neighbor, Mrs. Shoemaker came in and seeing the crock full of red liquid asked Shull's little boy if they had boiled he cider. He replied that they had not and telling her to drink some, for he did not know it had been tampered with. She took a swallow and the fiery stuff took the skin off her mouth and she suffered a good deal by it. Mr. Shull, himself, when he learned how matters stood, also tried it, very gently, and found it to be mainly lye. Moral.—Take your drinks straight.

The Fire Fiend.

We have been receiving the fire record for the past year and find quite a number of disastrous fires have occurred The bulk of the losses has been paid by companies in Walter Hartman's agency The destruction of the Foundry was the principal loss. Here the money was paid before the time allowed for the settlement had expired, Mr. Hartman is commissioned to adjust losses and pay claims. His companies have paid a larger amount for losses this year in Auburn than all other companies companies combined. One reason for this is that he has nine old line companies, fire tested and reliable. They are:

Franklin, of Philadelphia.
German American, of New York.
Pennsylvania, of Philadelphia.
Insurance Co. of North America.
Hamburg Bremen of United States and Germany,
Western, of Toronto.
Continental, of New York.
Manchester, of United States England
North British & Mercantile, of United States and England.

The total assets of these is $38,508,387; the strongest combination in Auburn and probably in this part of the state.

Mr. Hartman is now making a business of fire insurance and real estate and his business is increasing. He makes a specialty of writing fire insurance on business risks, public buildings, factories and will write large and small residences, farm property and outside business. His standing advertisements in Daily and Weekly COURIER will tell you what he has to sell and what absolutely safe fire protection he can furnish you.

A felt want is that gnawing at the stomach after you have eaten a full meal and can't eat any more, and yet there is that feeling as though you had eaten nothing. What is wanted then is a dose of Simmons Liver Regulator, the best Dyspepsia cure, for that is what that gnawing means. "Simmons Liver Regulator is all that is recommended for Indigestion."—A. R. Dyche, London, Ky.

CORUNNA.

Married: At Hudson, Oct. 10, William Stom n and Emma Dellenbaugh. Both are of Fairfield township. They left for Garrett on a short visit.

Isaiah Wert of Fairfield Center has quit school on account of sickness. He will be at work again this week.

Mrs. S. C Ure left Corunna for California last Saturday.

Why Not Organize?

Factories Are Looking for Locations Every Day.

We can see no good reason why the business men and citizens of Auburn should not get together and organize a board of trade or some similar organization. Nearly every day we hear of some factory that is located in some small town with scarcely any shipping facilities, that is looking for a new location. Mr. Geo. W. Fairman, who is now manufacturing buggy boxes at Avilla, desires to locate in a town with better shipping facilities He is now employing thirteen men and will double his capacity.

Auburn needs an exchange and needsit badly and as we have said before we can see no reason why we should not organize. We have plenty of good buildings already erected, and could in a short time double our manufacturing industries, if the right steps would be taken.

Froze Over.

Cedar Creek did this for the first time it ever happened in October. Sunday morning the creek had ice on its surface from side to side and of course it was some thicker this morning. Of course it would not have happened, but the water was so low that there was no current to prevent easy freezing and it was very shallow. Had there been a current there would have been no ice formed at all except near shore and in the eddies.

JOLLIFIED.

When the Rifles reached Auburn last Friday night on the Lake Shore special they were feeling at their best, for the grand prize was theirs. They had contended against crack companies from three states, and won the first honors and $300. So they had a right to feel good. They formed on the walk beside the train and as it moved from in front of them, they began firing, and sent several sharp volleys off into the night air awakening echoes of the near by woods, as well as hundreds of sleeping citizens, some of whom jumped bolt upright and called out to know what had broke loose When the boys had satisfied themselves partly, they marched up town to the music of about a score of their own whistlers, and every now and then a shot rang out from such as couldn't whistle. In front of the Armory, several more volleys were fired, and we suspect they stopped at last, because the ammunition was exhausted. And everybody is glad with them, and only good words are heard for officers and men. We have always said a good company was a thing to be proud of and we have the good company. We have no gun here to shoot with, so we write: "Three Cheers for Company K!"

An education is the best capital. Without it we miss most of life's happiness. Youth is the seed time Don't delay but start at once for some good school, such as the Fayette Normal University of Fayette, O., and prepare for an active, successful life.

BUTLER.

John Madden, son of Hiram Madden, is reported sick with Typhoid Fever.

Mrs. Flowers on the southside is reported dangerously ill.

A dwelling owned by Clyde Oberlin on east north street, burned last Tuesday morning together with about everything in it and came near cremating the inmates. No alarm was made until the was nearly burned down.

The writer with his son attended the Ft. Wayne centennial and was very well repaid for the ride of seventy miles on a wheel by the grand civil and military display. Fort Wayne left Defiance far in the shade in comparing the two centennials.

Considerable change has been made in the bicycle factory preperatory to increasing its output to nearly double its present capacity.

$500 REWARD.

Three days before Noah left the ark, a balloon was cut loose from Pike's Peak, containing a pair of twins, one a boy of 36 summers, the other a girl of 40 winters. He wore a North Pole linen duster and a cream colored plug hat; she wore a penitentiary suit, with one of the "Farmer's Handy Patient Gates" for a bustle, and a sunshade made of cherry by the boy who never told a jib. Anyone knowing their present whereabouts will confer a favor on the bereaved parents by keeping quiet, or by calling on F. L. Pyle, agent for the Farmer's Handy Gate, Auburn, Ind. The ascension was made, in order to paint an advertisement on the celebrated gate now on exhibition at the northeast corner of the public square. F. L. PYLE, Agent.

The Postal Telegraph company are to-day putting up a pony wire from their office to the office of the Kiblinger Carriage Co. Will Buckley, who is employed in the latter office, is quite handy in manipulating the machine, and hence considerable work will be saved saved in sending and delivering messages. Auburn is gradually coming to the front. We need a telephone system yet.

Good Reasons For It.

It is to be hoped that we are all actuated by a spirit of enlightened selfishness. "Self preservation is the first law of nature." The cause for the big business we are new doing is simply and solely this: We are saving every customer who spends five dollars with us a nice, crisp, new one dollar bill. May be you don't believe it. That's your misfortune, not our fault. We can convince you in but one way. "Seeing is beli v ng." Suppose, now, you

COME AND SEE.

Furs and Cloaks.

Our stock (except a recent purchase) was all contracted for last spring when manufacturers were nearly idle, and raw material was cheap. This enables us to retail Stylish Garments at about the priee merchants are now paying. We also get better and more perfect goods as the raw material was then plenty and the best is naturally worked up first.

Last week we found a manufacturer who had to have money. We bought a l the best wraps he had at about 50 cents on the dollar. We are giving our customers the benefit of this most fortunate purchase

Is It Fate?

Did you ever stop and think how our lives are affected by some seemingly trifling circumstances? It is amusing to think what might have occurred but for some more or less trifling circumstance If the nose of Cleopatra had been shorter the whole face of the earth would have been different. It is said that a glass of wine too much changed the course of French history; many persons who have carelessly picked up a scrap of literature on Dr Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer have been cured of what they considered an incurable disease by its use C. S. Chambers, Atlanta, Ill, was a sufferer from nervous prostration. A friend, who had knowledge of Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer, gave him a small sample. Its use stirred up new hope in his mind; he used two full sized bottles and was cured—fate directed this wonderful medicine to his notice. Your fate may be urging your attention to the same remedy. If you are troubled with nervous prostration, spasms, fits, sleeplessness, mental depression, exhausted vitality, despondency, sexual and general debility. For sale by F. E. Davenport. 40 44

Stops Inflammation.

There is no medicine so often needed in every home and so admirably adapted to the purposes for which it is intended, as Chamberlain's Pain Balm. Hardly a week passes but some member of the family has need of it, A toothache or headache may be cured by it. A touch of rheumatism or neuralgia quieted The severe pain of a burn or scald promptly relieved and the sore healed in much less time than when medicine has to be sent for. A sprain may be promptly treated before inflammaton sets in, which insures a cure in about one-third of the time otherwise required. Cuts and bruises should receive immediate treatment before the parts become swollen, which can only be done when Pain Balm is kept at hand A sore throat may be cured before it becomes serious. A troublesome corn may be removed by applying it twice a day for a week or two. A lame back may be cured and several days of valuable time saved or pain in the side or chest relieved without paying a doctor bill. Procure a 50 cent bottle at once and you will never regret it. For sale by Robbins & McCord. 40 44

Wednesday's Daily.

Pain has no show with Dr. Miles' Pain Pills.

A few loads of wood will be taken on subscription from those who are to bring it.

Milwaukee, Wis., is this week celebrating its semi-centenial and Fort Wayne its first centennial.

Mell Bishop, of St, Joe. was in town a few hours this morning. He took the Wabash west for Frankfort.

John Baird has purchased the Milo Thomas property on North VanBuren street and will occupy it within a short time.

It is truth in medicine that the smallest dose, that preforms a cure is the best. De Witt's Little Early Riser are the smallest pills, will preform a cure, and are the best.

There was a surprise on Mrs. Joe Prosser in McIntyre's addition last evening. About twenty-five were present and there was a jolly time as well as a good supper.

Dr. Ford came near having an accident this morning. As he got up he was sitting on the bed stooping over and putting on his stockings. He became dizzy headed and fell forward striking his head.

S. Z Dickinson was down from Waterloo yesterday. The latest news he has of the prizes given at the fair, is the $3 rubber boots given him as as a prize for having the "biggest feet on earth." They are a nice pair and he is proud of them.

Blanch Penfield came home last evening for a brief vacation as there is no school at Westminster during the centenial celebration. She is well pleased with the school. Pearl Kelley expects to be home Friday and Saturday but Maggie Ford prefers to remain till the vacation at Thanksgiving.

The ladies of the W. R. C. were given quite a surprise last night by a number of the W. R. C. ladies of Garrett dropping in on them. After the business of of the evening was done the Auburn ladies served light refreshments which was enjoyed by all. These visits are quite profitable to both organizations. They assist in keeping up the interests of the meeting. The Garrett ladies were given a cordial welcome.

Mrs, Mary V. Failing from Baldwinville, Onondaga county, New York and Mrs. Ann Gott, from Lorain county, O, the only sisters of T. J. Sexton, arrived here yesterday afternoon over the Lake Shore railway, for a general visit with the latter and their many other relatives living in this county. Mrs. Gott and her family were residents of Butler township thirty-five or more years ago. She will hardly recognize Auburn or her old neighborhood either, they are so much changed and improved.

Thursday's Daily.

Miss Mary Sawvel, of Butler is the guest of her sister, Laura.

Two of our Fairfield friends, John Gardner and Frank Beuchat called on us yesterday forenoon.

There are many good reasons why you should use One Minute Cough Cure. There are no reasons why you should not, if in need of help The only harmless remedy that produces immediate results.

Sam Weaver brought in a pretty forest shrub yesterday. It is the medicinal shrub called "wahoo," a handsome little tree when full of scarlet seed pods as it is now.

Fred Huelsenbeck has put in the stone gutter in front of his building and now the entire work is in. This is very desirable so that it may be settled well before winter sets in.

Squire M. L. Hoffman has moved up from Butler township to Jackson township and will live just below the Junction. on Wm. Grube's farm. We believe Mr. Grube is his father-in-law.

Hon. Nicholas Ensley has been granted an increase in pension. This was no doubt proper. But how in the world did he get it under this administration if we are to believe all that politicians are telling the old soldier.

A. J. Ralston has moved his grocery from the room he has had so long, to the room lately vacated by Mr. Lung's restaurant two doors north of John Kruger's. It will seem strange to find him in a new place, but he will sell good groceries as usual.

The Lake Shore road sold 458 tickets for the 10 a. m. train south to-day, and 16 on the special that went about noon, 474 for the two trains. The regular train had twelve coaches, all loaded, and the special had five.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Many subscribers to the Weekly COURIER, are reminded that they are allowing their subscriptions to run far behind. We again urge them to call and settle, or send in, before it gets larger and becomes a greater burden.

RESIDENCE FOR SALE.

Owing to my late misfortunes, I wish to sell my home residence on South Main street. Call and examine property and get terms. It is a desirable property.

Send With The Order.

The C. F. Risley Co, Wholesale Druggist, 62 Cortlandt St, New York ordered a large supply of Drummond's Lightning Remedy for Rheumatism, and sent this with the order: "It is strange that your remedy is not more generally known as its effects on rheumatism are simply marvelous—superior to any rheumatic medicine we have ever sold." This is high praise but the remedy fully deserves it. If you have the rheumatism send $5 to the Drummond Medicine Co, 48 Maiden Lane New York, and they will ship to your express address two large bottles—enough for a month's treatment Agents Wanted. 42-43

Joe Anderson and the "Gypsy Ward Co." have been playing "Jane" at LaGrange.

Pearl Kelley came up from Ft. Wayne last evening for a three day's vacation, as she returns to school Saturday.

F. M. Boyer, of the firm of Boyer & Kandel, Muncie, was here yesterday, and went to Elkhart.

John Weaver is having trouble with one of his feet. He stepped onto a nail Thursday.

Say, why don't you try De Witt's Little Early Risers? These little pills cure headache, indigestion and constipation. They're small, but do the work.

"I would rather trust that medicine than any doctor I know of," says Mrs Hattie Mason of Chilton, Carter Co., Mo., in speaking of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. For sale by Robbins & McCord. 40 44

Mrs. Minnie Wilkinson sister and two children, and Mrs. Jeff. Boyle were over from Butler Thursday and spent the day with Mrs. Boyle's sister, Mrs. Dessie Lockwood.

Brown, Culbertson & Boland have promised an Auburn lady a coal stove for a wedding present. The wedding is to occur in their show window. They refuse to give her name at present. They will announce it later. In the meantime buy all other hardware of them.

All diseases of the air passages especially catarrah and chronic, Bronchitis as well as first stages of consumption can be cured. I am treating these diseases with great success by the use of the latest and most improved medicines and instruments. Dr. W H. Nusbaum, Auburn, Ind. 42tf

Last night several boys were hid in the street south of W. B. Brown's residence and when teams would pass on Main street they would throw apples at them. This was kept up quite awhile and finally a gentleman drove by and they began their fun when he stopped. He has the names of several of the boys and they are also known to the COURIER. The gentleman came back down town and will probably have the boys arrested. Some of the boys who were in the gang are also in the habit of stealing apples as they go through the alley on West Eighth street. They should take warning and stop their smartness before they get into trouble.

At the Driving Park in Ft. Wayne yesterday several of the gambling devices, same as were at the Waterloo fair, were in operation. Those who were running them were successful in getting considerable money from some of the militia boys. At about noon the men got bold and actually tried to take money before they had won it. This did not suit the boys who wore the uniforms and trouble began at once The gambler saw that he had no friends and he folded up his grip and ran out of the park. More than a hundred of the boys followed him and just as he passed out of the gate, one of them struck him back of the neck. He soon straightened up and lost no time in leaving the park. The men who were operating the other devices thought that they had better go too, and they sneaked up into the woods. They met a farmer and gave him $1 to drive them off. The militia boys were determined to make them trouble and caught the team and made the gambler pay the driver $2 and 25 cents apiece to a few of the boys. This he did and they let him go on his way. Up town on Calhoun street the "College Anatomy" "For Men Only" was running. This is the same concern that was at Butler during the fair. From what we heard a police say that men who paid ten cents to enter the building, were then roped in a gambling device inside. This was discovered by the police at about five o'clock last evening, and they at once locked up the building and that ended the College Anatomy.

Sheriff Stroh went over to Garrett last night and got a young man who was employed there by a doctor. He was wanted at Wauseon, O., for burglary. Sheriff A. F. Shaffer, of Wauseon, came up this forenoon and got his man. They left on the 12:29 Lake Shore train.

Taxpaying is quite active now as the time for closing draws near. We are pleased to note that a number of our distant friends remember and bring in the subscription to the COURIER at the same time. This wise plan keeps the bill from getting too big and besides greatly assists the printer.

Sad news came from Cleveland this morning A letter from Eli Coder to Geo. M. Ralston contains news of the death of Fred Mc Broom, who married Isa Coder. He had been ill some time the disease being consumption. He had gone to Colorado in July, and about six weeks ago, went to Denver, and there he died He will be brought back to Cleveland, the funeral to be Sunday afternoon and the interment in Lake View Cemetery all under charge of the Knights Templars. Mrs. Mc Broom, herself has been seriously ill for some time.

It's just as easy to try One Minute Cough Cure as anything else. It's easier to cure a severe cough or cold with it. Let your next purchase for a cough be One Minute Cure. Better medicine; better results; better try it.

Judge Powers was a caller on the COURIER to-day, after having completed the law matters that had brought him down to court. The judge is rather a "coming man" and we are glad to see him keep in line.

Lucien Provines will have a public sale of personal property at his home one mile north of Jackson Center, on Thursday Nov. 7, beginning at 10 a. m. There will a lot of farm implements, horses, sheep, etc. 43 44

Adams Ale is not more wholesome than fresh, crisp, well-browned Crackers made from the best flour. Such as FOX'S XXXX SQUARE WAFER BUTTER CRACKERS. They are delicious and as clean, and wholesome as anything you can put on the table.

Frank Sylvester, of Jackson, Mich, is now employed by Scott & Baker as blacksmith. He has had many years experience in the best shops of Michigan and Messrs. Scott & Baker are to be congratulated on securing the service of so good a workman.

There came near being a wreck on the Lake Shore Friday evening. When the south bound local was about two miles on this side of Summit running at about thirty five miles an hour, a piling rolled off of a flat car just in front of the caboose. One end struck the ground and the other end flew around and struck the caboose. Considerable damage was done to the latter.

COWS FOR SALE:—We have two good Jersey cows for sale cheap. Brown, Culbertson and Boland.

Schaab Bros. have over $1000 worth of furs on the road and will be on exhibition at thir store the last three days of this week.

The South Bend Times writes a nice article eulogizing a citizen of that county lately deceased, because he furnished maple syrup known to be pure, and still more remarkable, the amount he had to sell was much less in a poor season than in a good one. Such a man should have been honored earlier. Why wait till a man is dead before we let him know his honesty is known and appreciated?

Mrs, Lamport fails to get her damages against the Lake Shore road. It will be remembered that Mr. Lamport and a brother-in-law were killed while walking on a sidetrack from the latter's farm home at Osceola, to the station, A train with a work gang just then ran onto the sidetrack and it is supposed struck them before they noticed its approach as it was just after dark. Mrs. Lamport brought suit against the road for $10,000, and we believe obtained judgement for $4,000 in the circuit court. But it was appealed to the Supreme court, which now decides that the railroad was not to blame, nor negligent, for people are not allowed to walk on the tracks. So, Mrs. Lamport gets nothing.

You can't tell a nut till you crack it. Neither can you tell a good Cracker 'till you try it. Most all Crackers look alike but when FOX'S XXXX SQUARE WAFER BUTTER CRACKERS tell their story through your taste you'll know in a jiffy that you've found what you want.

Latest advices from Cuba state that the Spanish troops are fighting desperately to get possession of a pass held by a small band of insurgents. Perhaps it is a steamship pass to Spain.

The announcement that some college foot-ball players have been retired because they were not up in their studies seems truly incomprehensible. There is nothing to indicate that the young men did not stand very high in their foot-ball practice.

Old people never pretend to stay in bed all night. They get up fully a half-dozen times and go wandering around with lights in their hands, looking for the origin of noises, to see what time it is and on a half-dozen other pretexts. If you feel like wandering around the house at night with your night clothes flapping around your knees, it is an indication you are not as young as you used to be.

The new press, which makes a cylindrical bale of cotton, puts 32 pounds into the cubic foot, while 22 pounds to the foot is all that is required of the compresses hitherto employed. So the new process effects a great saving in room on board of car or vessel. In addition to that it saves the expense of shipping 24 pounds of dead weight in bagging and ties from India and Egypt to this country and then back to Liverpool. Also it is said that the process of packing so distributes the cotton that a fair sample always can be obtained from either end of the bale. These are important advantages in favor of its wide adoption.

The death of Hjalmar Hjorth Boyesen in the prime of his powers must awaken regret among all who are truly interested in the development of American literature. A native of Norway, Prof. Boyesen had done the greater part of his work and won his fame in this country, and his successes are a matter of pride to both countries alike. A man of broad sympathies and keen insight, he united in an unusual degree the faculties of critic and creator, essayist and romancer. It was a sign of the symmetry of his development that he was a student of books as well as of men, and that in both occupations he found occasion to furnish the world with thoughtful and suggestive matter. His loss will be felt abroad no less than at home, for there he had countless friends and a remarkably wide acquaintance with the great group of modern writers, one of the foremost among whom is that other great Norwegian, Bjornstjerne Bjornson. It was partly from his associations, perhaps, that he imbibed the taste which marks his valuable and interesting work. He will be regretted and remembered as one of the few strong forces working in a distinctly commercial age toward the culture of his fellow-men.

The people of the rest of the United States owe Gov. Culberson and the Texas State Legislature a vote of thanks for the salutary object lesson in the matter of dealing with prize-fights and prize-fighters. It is, of course, not an entirely reasonable proposition that a call for a special session should have been necessary to prevent so openly lawless a performance. The task of prohibiting Corbett and Fitzsimmons from punching each other would seem to be properly one covered by the ordinary police laws and ordinances. It became evident to Gov. Culberson, however, some days ago, that without a specific statute against slugging the State of Texas must expect to harbor the projected fight. He took action promptly, convened the Legislature in special session and presented the case to that body. Contrary to expectation, the Legislature passed the bill making prize-fighting a felony, with an emergency clause, the vote being overwhelming and the entire transaction being completed in less than two days. Good for Texas! She has put herself on record as among the States which are law-abiding and determined to preserve their reputations as such. The fact that out of the entire 143 votes cast in both houses only six were opposed to the prize-fight law speaks volumes for the good name of the Texas Legislature. There was no delay, no quibbling and no suggestion of a desire to hold off and wait for "propositions" from the prize-fighting fraternity. The whole affair is a signal victory for law and order, not only in Texas, but elsewhere. It sets an example which other States cannot afford to break without running the risk of damning comparisons. The public now looks to Gov. Culberson to see that this statute is enforced to the letter.

It is significant of the peaceable policy of the United States that the transfer of the command of the nation's army from one man to another should have excited somewhat less comment and interest than would have followed a change in one of the minor cabinet offices. A similar change in the armies of Great Britain, Germany, France or Russia would have excited talk and gossip for several weeks. In time of war Gen. Miles, who secured the high office, would arise to the most prominent position in American affairs, but it is the improbability of serious warfare that makes his ascension so little regarded. There are two points of interest in the present transfer. First, it breaks a precedent of some years by giving the command of the army to a man not of West Point training. It has been a number of years since any but a West Point man held the important commission, and for a time there was reason to believe that Gen. Miles might be passed over on account of his having come up from the ranks in actual service instead of through the nation's military academy. Experience has shown pretty well that a West Point training may be relied on to bring out the best points in an officer, but it would obviously be idle to make such a training an iron-clad condition. What the nation wants is the best men, regardless of the means by which they were trained. Another important point in the present transfer is that the title of lieutenant general held by Gen. Schofield ceases to exist on the army records. The title, as is well known, was created by Congress as a special distinction for men of high military genius and has been worn successively by Scott, Grant, Sherman, Sheridan and Schofield. Unless he shall do something leading Congress to re-create the title for him, Gen. Miles will be simply major general, although holding just the same measure of authority as his predecessor.

JAPAN HAS NO ANIMALS.

Domestic Pets Are Unknown in the Land of the Mikado.

Japan is a land without the domestic animals. It is this lack which strikes the stranger so forcibly in looking upon Japanese landscapes. There are no cows—the Japanese neither drinks milk nor eats meat. There are but few horses, and these are imported mainly for the use of foreigners. The freight carts in city streets are pulled and pushed by coolies and the pleasure carriages are drawn by men. There are but few dogs, and these are neither used as watch dogs, beasts of burden nor in hunting, except by foreigners.

There are no sheep in Japan, and wool is not used in clothing, silk and cotton being the staples. There are no pigs—pork is an unknown article of diet—and lard is not used in cooking. There are no goats, or mules or donkeys. Wild animals there are, however, and in particular bears of enormous size. One of these Mr. Finck saw, stuffed, in a museum, he describes as "big as an ox." Beside another stuffed museum bear is preserved in alcohol the mangled body of a child the bear had eaten before being killed.—New York Recorder.

A Bill for Royalty.

Taxpayers in this country frequently complain, and justly, of the expenditure of public money for the use of legislators and officials in ways not directly connected with the public business, as, for instance, when official expenditures are made during which champagnes and other unnecessary articles are purchased for the travelers' consumption. But if we think we have special reason to complain of "junketing" in this country, we should contemplate some of the public expenditures for the entertainment of the crowned junketers of the old world.

Not long since the new ship canal to Manchester, England, was opened. The Queen was invited, though the canal could have been opened exactly as well without her. After the opening, the report of the citizens' auditor of Manchester was published showing the expenses of the opening; and by some mischance all the items for the entertainment of the royal party were given in the report.

The whole cost of the Queen's visit, which, by the way, lasted only a few hours, reached the highly respectable sum of six thousand and fifty-one pounds sterling, or about thirty thousand dollars. Among the numerous items were such expenditures as the following:

Four fancy boxes of bonbons, fondants, chocolates, etc., for the royal children, £1 13s.

For asparagus, at 4s. 6d. per bunch, £6 15s.; twenty-two pints of peas, at 2s. 6d. per pint; eight pineapples, at 12s. 6d. each; six melons, at 10s. 6d. each; twenty-six pounds of grapes, at 6s. 6d. per pound; twenty-four pounds of strawberries, at 6s. 6d. per pound; total vegetables and fruit, £48 12s. 9d.

Three live turtles cost £17 14s. 6d.; and cigars and cigarettes—none of which, it is safe to assume, were smoked by the Queen—£14 10s. The stabling and keep of the Queen's horses cost the city of Manchester £22 16s.; and the board and lodging for sixteen members of the royal household staff, £71 15s. 3d.

There were many other extraordinary items on account of this expensive guest.

Not an Imbecile.

Before his death Montrond went through the form of a conversion and made his peace with the church. When the priest asked him: "You probably in old times uttered many pleasantries against religion?" "No," said he coolly, "I have been accused, and justly accused, in my lifetime of many vices; I have never been accused of being an imbecile." Montrond was an inveterate gambler; one day he had a quarrel with some people he had been playing with at cards. He flew at Talleyrand in a state of great agitation. "Would you believe it," said he, "they threatened to throw me out of the window?" "I have always advised you," said Talleyrand, very quietly, "never to play cards except on the ground floor."

An Imperial Train.

The German emperor's imperial train cost seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and took three years to construct. There are altogether twelve cars, including two nursery carriages. The reception saloon contains several pieces of statuary, and each of the sleeping cars is fitted with a bath.

"Johnny is learning to be a stationary engineer." "Is he learning fast?" "I should say so; when he quit work last night his face was grimy as a stovepipe and he had machine oil all over his clothes!"—Chicago Record.

THERE are nagging husbands and nagging wives, but the most deleterious of naggers is the mother whose continual fault-finding embitters the childhood of her children, and leaves them without the memory of motherly acts and words. We commend these words of the New York Tribune:

A vivid recollection of a visit to a summer resort is of an irritable invalid mother, and her unhappy, harassed boy. She nagged at him in the dining-room till the poor child lost all appetite. One morning the father came down alone, and explained that mother was not well enough to come to breakfast. Whereupon the boy, with childlike frankness, exclaimed: "Oh, I'm so glad!" Then, seeing his father's reproving glance, he explained, "You know, papa, I'm not glad she's sick, but—but I do enjoy my breakfast so much more when she's not here." Memories of a mother's sweet voice have led back wandering feet to paths of righteousness; but harsh words of other mothers have driven the children to the broad ways of destruction, as did a certain widow who railed continually at her children. They feared her when they were little; but, as they grew older, they gave back railing for railing; and every son of that mother was laid in a drunkard's grave.

In another home, the nagging of the mother was repeated in the children. Old grievances were dwelt upon, magnified and brought forward at most inopportune moments, and there was a continual round of petty fault-finding and retort. But a realization of her responsibility came to the mother; she controlled the querulous words and turned them to gentle ones. The children were puzzled. They did not expect the new condition to last; but last it did, and now it is rare to hear an impatient word in that house from any of its members.—Household.

A New Hat-Holder.

It is hardly worth while to remind the women and girls of the various styles of hat-pins now in use. It is said that a few of them are good, many are indifferent and most of them are positively bad.

So far as a man may judge of such things it seems reasonable to assume that, to give satisfaction, the pin must hold the hat in place steadily, in spite of wind, weather and all other conditions, and this, it is said, the ordinary hat-pin does not do.

Here is something, however, that will do all that; at least its inventor makes that claim for it. It is a spiral grip, which is fastened on both sides of the hat, and held in position by a little cap. When the hat is put on, the spiral is turned from the outside, and it is a matter of only a moment to adjust it.

A Beautifying Tonic.

A pure and simple tonic, which aids the circulation, makes hard, smooth, firm flesh, and prevents wrinkles, is compounded by the following formula:

Two ounces of spirits of camphor, two ounces of spirits of ammonia, one cup of sea salt, two cups of alcohol. Put all these in a quart bottle and fill it up with boiling water. Rub the face neck and arms with this daily, and they will become beautifully fresh and firm looking.

An all-over sponge with this before retiring is a good remedy for sleeplessness.

About Kissing Mother.

A father, talking to his careless daughter, said: "I want to speak to you of your mother. It may be that you noticed a careworn look upon her face. Of course it has not been brought there by any act of yours; still it is your duty to chase it away. I want you to get up to-morrow morning and get breakfast. When your mother comes and begins to express her surprise, go right up to her and kiss her on the mouth. You can't imagine how it will brighten her dear face.

"Besides, you owe her a kiss or two. Away back, when you were a little girl, she kissed you when no one else was tempted by your fever-tainted breath and swollen face. You were not as attractive then as you are now. Through years of childish sunshine and shadows she was always ready to cure, by the magic of a mother's kiss, the little, dirty, chubby hands whenever they were injured in those first skirmishes with the rough old world."

A Commonplace Life.

The trouble is with you, my dear girl, that you count little things as of no worth. Where we have one great renunciation to make we have a thousand little ones, and life, which you are inclined to call commonplace, is not so, for every day can be made rich in beautiful deeds. God, who is just, is merciful, and when temptation comes to you, even if you fail, He remembers that you tried to do what was right, and so is tender in His thought of you. There is not one of us who achieves, even for one day, what we long to. But, my dear, we can always try for it. We can be ready for the trouble that is before us and equip ourselves by prayer and good thoughts so that we can meet it bravely, and, possibly, overcome it. Of course, that is what we wish to do, and yet if we are not strong enough, if we fall by the wayside, we must get up and try again, and keep on trying. That, in itself, will give us strength. And as the years go on and youth belongs to the past, it will always, because of this trying, be easier to do that which is right and merit "that peace which passeth all understanding."—Ruth Ashmore in Ladies' Home Journal.

You Are Coming Home.

The sky, my dear, is a brighter blue—
The rose is a rarer white;
The river ripples and sings—for you—
You are coming home to-night!

Over the wearisome land and sea
You are coming home,
You are coming home,
You are coming home to me!

You are coming home! * * * I have waited long,
And the world seemed lost to light;
But the twilight thrills with a glad, sweet song—
You are coming home to-night!

Over the wearisome land and sea
You are coming home,
You are coming home,
Sweetheart, to love and me.

You are coming home! * * * I shall see your face,
With its loveliness and light;
I shall hold you, dear, in a fond embrace—
You are coming home to-night!

Over the wearisome land and sea
You are coming home,
You are coming home,
To me sweetheart, to me!

When She Hides the Key.

It is a singular instance of the simplicity of the average mind to watch the entire good faith in which the country housekeeper, when she takes her walks abroad and locks up her house, hides the key for its discovery by any other member of the family. As a matter of course, she tucks it away under the doormat. It never seems to enter her dear, motherly head that every other woman in the place does precisely the same thing, and perhaps every other woman in every other suburban town. She never seems to think that that is one place that any student of human nature who has burglarious inclinations would seek entrance to the house by simply lifting the doormat. He would be sure to find the key ready for him there.

To Make a Belt Stay Smooth.

An unhygienic but fashionable way of making a ribbon belt stay smooth, and one that is taken advantage of by many of the fashionably gotten up women, is to wear a belt of stout canvas or even kid under the dress waist. The ribbon will keep in shape over this when it wrinkles over the best corset. The kid belts should be perforated. Otherwise they collect and hold the insensible perspiration going on all over the body all the time, and after a short time are wet enough on the inside to ruin underclothing and be uncomfortable to boot.

TRIALS OF TEACHERS

SOME TIMELY ADVICE FROM ONE OF EXPERIENCE.

Cheering Words to Those Who Take Up School Work in the Country—The Schoolboys of To-day Differ from Their Daddies.

A Word to Country Teachers.

The day of your arrival at the place where you are to teach will be the preface to your term's work. Let it be a very "taking" one.

Don't apologize for coming to a small town and say that you came to enjoy the scenery and to regain your health, for that is vacation privilege, not school work.

Be sure to leave your old hats and dresses at home; they would not be good enough to wear in that pretty hillside town. Against Nature's picturesque background they would be far more out of keeping than in the city with only dull brick walls for contrast. And don't, O don't put on a single "air" if you don't want to become an amusing object lesson. Laying aside then all girlish folly, and trying to put on the teacher's whole armor, you go to your new work, the first Monday in September.

Dingy-white walls, two pitted little boards instead of comely blackboards, cobweb curtains at windows, and for the rest—O dear! But what of it!

You look into the pleasant faces of your pupils, and know you have an army strong to help you, by and by. Nature's ready-made furnishings are just at hand. Before long, you may find that all this seeming hindrance may be your fortunate opening for nature study. The conservative parents do not believe in bringing this "waste work" into school hours. Suppose you give it a new name, too, and call it decoration of the school room. Take long walks with your pupils to find what you want; the prettiest of autumn's work to press and mount for your school room walls; curious woods for latticed window shades, easels, picture frames. Because the school room is so sunny, you have the excuse on hot September afternoons, to vacate it for the cool, shady hilltops near. There you can teach them to see, as you see, Nature's wonder pictures, to hear, as you hear, her music and her rhymes.

Your older boys may be often absent from school during the fall term for work. You may think that these frequent breaks lessen the interest in study, upset your plans, and make past labor for your pupils of little avail, for field work crowds out school work. Maybe you are mistaken. Better believe that every truth those boys have learned, lies simmering somewhere in heart or brain, and will be ready for use by the time it is wanted. Through you, they have become acquainted with nature and her science teachings, and so, harvesting may be more educative than books. When the teacher does faithful work with the faithful scholars, these enforced absent days are like Sabbath rest, from which he returns to book with new energy and appetite.

"The register looks dreadfully!" Yes, but since looks that can't be helped matter little do not fret about that. Probably your register will never rest among the town archives.

You make the same plaint that the teachers who came before you made, of pupils not well classed, and too many classes. Don't be tied to this precedent. Abolish the class system altogether if need be and generalize your work. Do all things tactfully, though. Two or three of your oldest, dullest pupils have made their slow way to Oceanica in geography, and are ambitious to finish the book. Don't take away their self-respect, and remove their goal a year further off by putting them back with that class of bright 12-year-olds. Let them sojourn in the South Sea Islands awhile; make their stay in Oceanica delightful, but let their own town, county and State be the Mecca, to which they return by reviews once or twice a week. It may be advisable in all their studies, to let them remain in the highest class. For the younger pupils, combine. Make geography, for instance, an all-school study, avoiding the terms, class or division.

Thus, you can easily grade your school. You can lead the backward pupil who does his best, to feel that he is not so far behind the others.

So much work for so little salary! Yes, but with your four dollars a week and board, haven't you as wide a margin left as have some of your city sisters? You left home well supplied, to live among a generous people who have few artificial wants. You can easily learn to be content with things you have.

The parents do not visit your school except on the "last day." Another grievance! Then think of Mahomet and the mountain and be the mountain. Visit the parents, not once, twice, but so often that you seem like "own folks" to them. Your visiting them may be more gainful than their visits to you. Little disaffections dissolve in the social cup of tea. Liking you, they will be satisfied with your work.

The truth is trite, that country schools have graduated the best men and women. As you look over your human material, can you not assort it all, as excellent, good or fair?

Isn't it something to be thankful for, that your youthful twigs are bent aright, so that they do not need your constant straightening out, to incline them towards goodness?

And so we might go on, weighing the trials of country teachers with their compensating pleasures, and every time the pleasures will have the far more exceeding weight.—Primary Education.

Not Like the Old Days.

The schoolboy of to-day has a much better time of it than his father had. Change has so rapidly followed change in our public school system that the boy who went to school twenty-five years ago could scarcely recognize a single thing about our schools at present which is like that of the old school days, says a writer. The old slate, the slate of poetry and history, with its battered frame edged with initials cut with a pocket knife (when it had a frame), the slate that had the face of a mischief maker instead of the strict attention to problems, is a thing of the past. The click-click of the pencils racing to see which could first find the cube root of the numbers that the teacher had named has given way to the softer cadence of a lead pencil, for slates and slate pencils have been found to be the steadfast ally of the little microbe of diphtheria. The multiplication table still exists, but only as a relic of barbarism. The pupils no longer stand in line and repeat over and over again 7 times 1, 7 times 2, 7 times 3, etc. The youngsters are taught by means of the association of objects, and the hated table of many generations comes to them naturally without having to go through any monotonous sing song. Seats with straight backs have been supplanted by seats that are hygienic.

As fast as possible the children are being provided with individual seats, and in the course of time the poetry of the "seat mate" will have departed with that of the slate pencil. Grammar, with its many rules that used to try the memory and not the intelligence of the pupil, has been simplified into language lessons. Most of the middle-aged men of to-day began their education by learning to repeat the letters of the alphabet. Their grandsons begin with words and objects. So the saying that one has yet to learn the A B C of a thing has lost some of its force.

Even the poet of the bare-footed schoolboy will soon be without a fount of inspiration. The boy of to-day has much better clothes. He knows comparatively nothing of the wonders of maternal patching. Ready-made suits are so cheap that nearly every one of him is "fitted out" at the opening of the school. The part of the birch switch has utterly lost its calling. Corporal punishment, even making children hold up their hands or stand on a line, is against the rules.

There is no doubt about it—the boy of to-day is more obedient and better clothed, and has an easier time of it than the boy of twenty-five years ago. Besides, the new boy has as much learning at the age of 10 as the old boy at the age of 14. The same is true of the new girl that is to become the new woman.

Take Time to Eat.

The opinion that hurry in eating is prolific cause of dyspepsia is founded on common observation. The ill-results of "bolting" the food have been attributed to the lack of thorough mastication, and to the incomplete action of the saliva upon the food. Two-thirds of the food which we eat is starch, and starch cannot be utilized in the system as food until it has been converted into sugar, and this change is principally affected by the saliva. But there is a third reason why rapidity of eating interferes with digestion. The presence of the salivary secretion in the stomach acts as a stimulus to the secretion of the gastric juice. Irrespective of the mechanical function of the teeth, food which goes into the stomach incompletely mingled with saliva, passes slowly and imperfectly through the process of stomach digestion. Therefore, as a sanitary maxim of no mean value teach the children to eat slowly—and in giving this instruction by example, the teacher, as well as the pupil, may receive a benefit.—Sanitary Inspector.

Make Geography Interesting.

In teaching your little girl geography try to make it something more than a dry list of names to be learned by rote. Take her imaginary voyages and journeys from one country to another. Tell her something of the manners and customs of the people and anything you can learn yourself about the lives of the children. Describe to her how the Swiss boys herd their cattle under the shadow of the Alps, and the Esquimaux are made daring by being thrown into the icy water in their strange fur garments. Tell her of the stunted lives of the pit boys in the coal mines and of the German girls who learn to use their five knitting needles almost as soon as they can hold them. Books of travel will furnish you with many interesting incidents which you can turn to account. Geography will not be a wearisome task to her. Her mother's wisdom can make the first steps attractive.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Sympathized with Her.

A witty and popular New York clergyman, whom everybody knows by reputation, had a laughable, and at the same time unpleasant, experience recently, says the Journal. One Sunday, not long ago, he was going up the steps of his Fifth Avenue church, when he was asked by an old lady (who, of course, did not know him) to help her up the steps. With his usual courtly grace, he complied with her request. On reaching the top step, she halted, breathlessly, and asked him who was going to preach that day.

"The Rev. Mr. Blank," he replied, giving his own name.

"Oh, Lord," exclaimed the old lady; "help me down again. I'd rather listen to a man sharpening a saw. Please help me down again. I reckon I won't go in."

The clergyman smiled, and gently assisting her down the stairs again, remarking, as he reached the sidewalk, "I wouldn't go in, either, if I wasn't paid for it."

The Russian Priest's Wife.

There is certainly one happy woman in Russia—the priest's wife; and it is a common mode of —expression to say, "As happy as a priest's wife." The reason why she is happy is because her husband's position depends upon her. If she dies, he is deposed, and becomes a mere layman, and his property is taken away from him and distributed, half to his children and half to the government. This dreadful contingency makes the Russian priest careful to get a healthy wife, if he can, and makes him take extraordinary good care of her after he has secured her. He waits upon her in the most abject way. She must never get her feet wet, and she is petted and put in hot blankets if she has so much as a cold in her head. It is the greatest possible good fortune for a girl to marry a priest—infinitely better than to be the wife of a noble.

Shooting Oil on the Water.

Oil is no longer to be poured on troubled water. It is to be fired like a shell from a gun. As a wave approaches a shell filled with oil is to be precipitated in its direction. The shell will be perforated with small holes, so that the oil will run out slowly and continue its work for a greater length of time than would otherwise be the case.

THE MOWER CYCLE.

The Clever Invention of a 19-Year-Old Boy.

The time has come when the man who has put up the rocks for his son's bicycle may reap a return for his cash. He can set the bicycle riders of his family to a useful employment, for a 19-year-old youth of Newburg has invented a machine which meets the requirements of the case. He calls it a mower cycle. It is nothing more nor less than a large hand mower, which takes the place of the front wheels of a bicycle. The mower wheels have rubber tires and they run as smoothly as a bicycle wheel. The attachment is made by means of long steel forks, which enable an adjustment for high or low cutting. The pedals are placed directly on the large wheel shaft, dispensing with the chain sprocket wheels and crank shaft of the bicycle. The strain of pushing the mower is taken off the frame and head of the machine by two rods, one on each side of the large wheel, one end of which is attached to the frame at the center of the wheel, and the other to the mower. The machine turns more readily than a bicycle—in fact, may be turned around in a six-foot circle. It takes no more power to operate it than to propel an ordinary tricycle. The mower cycle is guided just as the bicycle is, by the handles, and a lawn can be gone over in one-third of the time it takes to do it with an ordinary hand mower.

THE MOWER CYCLE.

AN AERIAL TROLLEY

Which Takes Passengers Out Over the Breakers at Coney Island.

The novel device shown in the cut is one of the most popular amusements at Coney Island this season. The cable is 825 feet in length and extends from wooden shears on shore to a pair anchored out beyond the line of the breakers.

The shears at the seaward end of the line are inclined outwards at an angle of about 90 degrees, and to help counteract the strain of the cable on them a weight of five tons, consisting of bags of sand upon a platform, is suspended from their highest point. In rear of the shore end of the line is a building containing the dynamo that supplies the necessary power, and from the cable hangs a 10-horse power motor. Beneath the motor swings the boat in which the passengers sit. In the regular trip of the trolley the boat is carried just high enough to clear the spray of the breakers, and a pause of a few minutes is made at the outer terminus to give the passengers a view of sea and shore from their unique position.

He Was a Plumber.

"The plumber joke is worked to death, but I will tell you one anyhow, just because it is true," began a friend. "The young woman that figures in the story lives on Broadway, near Floyd street. She was sprinkling the street and used a hose that was sadly in need of repair. An itinerant plumber came along with a kit of tools slung over his shoulder. He asked the young woman if she wanted the hose fixed.

"'What will you charge?' she answered.

"The man looked at the hose critically and then said he would repair it for 15 cents.

"This was contrary to all traditions relating to plumbers' prices, so the young woman told the man she did not believe he was what he represented himself to be. 'Still,' she said, 'go ahead and fix the hose.' The man took out his tools and soon had the hose nearly as good as new. The miss gave the man 15 cents. He shook his head and said he wanted 45.

"'Why,' said the young woman in surprise, 'you said you would do the work for 15 cents.'

"'Yes, I know,' he returned, 'but there was more work than I thought.'

"'Well, I was afraid you weren't a plumber when you first came up, but now I know you are and am willing to give you a certificate to that effect,' was what the young woman said when she gave the man his pay."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A Deadly Dose.

"I can never understand why so many would-be suicides resort to that most horrible of deadly doses, carbolic acid," says a physician. "It causes more pain, more genuine, lingering agony, than any deadly dose I can mention. Yet its popularity continues to increase, especially among the unfortunate members of the half world who have become weary of life and seek the comforts of the grave. The antidote? Oh, an antidote after the acid has been swallowed is of little avail. A mixture of flour and water should be given; also mucilaginous drinks. I once had a patient recover after taking a small quantity of the acid, and she said she thought she was swallowing molten lead. It is a horrible life destroyer."

Under the Sun.

Seek the sunlight is the advice of all present day hygienists. Patients on the sunny side of the hospital ward recover soonest. The person who always walks on the sunny side of the streets outlives his shade-seeking brother by ten years. Sleep in rooms where the sun has shed its rays all day. Bask in the sun all you can, and your druggist's and doctor's notes will go to protest.

Had a Legal Mind.

There is a story told of the late Judge Strong's boyhood which shows that from the beginning his mind had a legal bent. Young Strong, it seems, purloined a piece of cake from the table spread for some festival occasion. No one discovered it until the family and guests were seated at the table, and then nothing was said. When every one had gone and the father was alone with the youthful epicure, he said to him: "Don't you know, my son, in taking that cake you broke one of God's commandments?"

"Question 82," responded the boy, who had the catechism at his tongue's end. "'Is any man able perfectly to keep the commandments of God?' Answer 82. No mere man since the fall is able in this life to keep the commandments of God, but doth daily break them in thought, word, and deed.'" It is not recorded what the reverend father said, but it must be admitted that the boy won his case.

A Day with the Girl.

"Talk about a night with the boys. It isn't in it with a day with the girls!" exclaimed a fair maid the other day.

"Look at me," she continued, "I'm a perfect wreck. I've been dragged all over town to ever bargain counter in New York by those cousins from the country. They are absolutely indefatigable, and so they've pulled and yanked me in and out everywhere until I'm ready to drop. They got lots of lovely bargains, though—scarfs, head rests, photograph frames and every blessed thing they didn't need—and now they haven't got a cent left for the very frock they came to buy. All I've got to show for it is my silk petticoat torn out of the gathers, a splitting headache, a lame back and a pair or 49-cent gloves that are not mates?"—New York Mercury.

The Greatest Medical Discovery of the Age.

KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DONALD KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, MASS.,

Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor). He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston. Send postal card for book.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it. Read the label.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime. Sold by all Druggists.

HER CHALLENGE.

She Downed All Comers Until the Man with Baseball Lingo Spoke up.

"I am the peer of any man!"

As she uttered these words of proud defiance Finda Saycal drew herself to her full height and scornfully gazed at the group of savants who surrounded her. All but one of the throng cringed before her as if acknowledging her claim, so great was her erudition, so masterful was her manner.

The one who cringed not was hardly a savant. He was a professional baseball umpire, with a large aggressive looking pompadour and black eyes that regarded her with a look of confident cunning.

One by one the savants questioned her. She answered queries in French, German, Russian, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, Chinese, Japanese and Norwegian. She read Greek, Latin and Hebrew at sight, and she called Sanskrit "easy."

"Gentlemen," she pleaded at last, "try to make it more interesting for me. This is mere kindergarten work."

"Do your worst!" she said, mockingly. "There is nothing I cannot understand."

"What? Nothing?"

It was the umpire with the aggressive pompadour and the keen, cunning eyes who spoke. There was a cynical smile on his lips.

"Nothing! Nothing!"

She repeated the words as defiantly as ever, but there was a startled look in her eyes, as if she knew she possessed one vulnerable point and feared he had found it.

"Nothing in English would puzzle you, I suppose?"

"Chaucer without a glossary or Browning without a key, of course," she sneered, "but just try me. And as for magazine poetry, I can tell what it means when it doesn't mean anything. There is nothing I cannot understand."

"What, then, does this mean?"

Taking from his pocket a morning paper he read aloud: "Nichols found the leather for the left field fence. Lowe cracked a single, sending Nichols to second. Long smashed a corking two bagger through Eddie Burke, and the cranks had heart failure as two of the Beaneaters sprinted across the plate. Rusie's next ball twisted like an elongated bedspring, but Duffy pushed his bat against it for a single. He fell asleep on first, however, and was nailed by big Amie's catapult throw.

"Tucker's pop fly was pie for Davis, and Nash fanned the other three times, sending Beantown to the field. The Giants were goose egged in their half. Rusie banged a twister with whiskers on it to the infield, but the leather beat him out at first. Tiernan fouled. Stafford touched Nichols for three bags, but died when Farrell popped a fly."

Pausing, the umpire transfixed the new woman with triumphant eyes that seemed to burn into her very soul.

"What does that mean?" he demanded.

With a shriek of despair Finda Saycal fell to the floor.

"Lost! Lost!" she moaned.

The baseball reporter's lingo was the one thing on earth she could not understand.—Louisville Commercial.

A Savings Bank Incident.

Richard Roe deposited $705 in the Bowery Savings Bank in New York, between 1835 and 1849. Between 1835 and 1855, $753.89 were withdrawn. When the last draft was made the depositor's book appeared to be overdrawn $1. There were due Roe at that time, however, dividends amounting to a hundred dollars and one cent, which had not been entered in his passbook, and the bank really owed him a balance of ninety-nine dollars and one cent.

The balance went on accumulating dividends until 1875, when it became a dormant amount, and ceased to draw interest. The amount then due Roe was $343.25. Efforts were made without success to find him. He had become very poor, was too old and feeble to go to work again, and was given a home by his sons at Rutherford, N. J.

Roe always intended to repay the $1 he thought he owed, but never did so. President Townsend, of the Bowery Savings Bank, in looking over the books one day came across Roe's account. A new search was instituted and Roe was found at Rutherford. He was told to call at the bank with his old account books. Shortly afterward he did so, accompanied by his granddaughter, 17 years old.

"I suppose it's about that dollar I owe your bank that you want to see me," said the old man, addressing Mr. Townsend.

"Guess these bank people know what's right," he said to his granddaughter. "I never was much on 'rithmetic."

He pocketed the $343.25, shook hands with the bank officials and returned home.

How He Broke the Ice.

Many diffident persons find the beginning of a conversation awkward, especially on ceremonious occasions and with strangers. Sometimes, however, the beginning is not half so awkward as what comes afterward.

Acording to a story in Punch, a bashful young man said to a lady at a dinner party:

"I've got to take you in to dinner, Miss Travers, and I'm rather afraid of you, you know. Mrs. Jolibois tells me you're very clever."

The young lady was naturally amused by this display of simplicity.

"How absurd!" she exclaimed. "I'm not a bit clever."

The man heaved a sigh of relief, and said:

"Well, do you know, I thought you weren't."

Glucose.

A short article going the rounds of the press, and recently published in our columns, states that glucose is the greatest of all adulterants, and is used for making cheap candy, sugar, jellies and syrups. According to "Confectioners' Journal," this is untrue. Glucose is used in some candies, but it is not "the greatest of all adulterants," nor an adulterant at all. It is simply an ingredient and does not differ in this respect from molasses, and is just as harmless. Although the assertions made in article quoted from distinctly apply to cheap candies, and have no reference to the honestly made article, we gladly correct a statement which it seems, has no foundation in fact.

Under the Sea.

The progress of photography under the sea, by means of the newly devised magnesium light—a marvel of ingenuity—may justly be described as something wonderful, though the timing of the exposures is said to still present one of the most serious difficulties yet to be overcome.

"That racehorse of yours seems well broke," said the man who stands around and looks on. "Yes," replied the melancholy owner of the animal; "but he isn't as well broke as I am."—Washington Star.

Cost of Building and Sailing the Cup Contestants.

When Lord Dunraven expressed himself not long ago as in favor of reducing the load water line of future cup contestants from ninety to seventy-two feet, he doubtless had in mind the enormous sum of money which it cost to build and maintain a 50-foot racing sloop. Few persons have any idea of the amount it now requires to conduct an international race, and it would doubtless surprise many to know that the cost of the present series is not far from half a million dollars.

To begin with the Defender. The cost of her shapely hull is said to be about $85,000. Her four suits of sails cost approximately $10,000, and the value of her spars is $10,000. Thus the actual cost of merely building the cup Defender was $105,000. But that is not all. A training ship cost $10,000; a tender $6,300; wages, clothing and feeding of her crew for four months $30,000; bonuses $5,000; towing bills, $2,000; and $2,000 more for docking. To these amounts must be added $5,000 in conveying the Defender's fittings by express instead of freight, and $10,700 for repairs and odds and ends, making the total cost of building and sailing the Defender $176,000.

The Valkyrie is not such an expensive boat. No exact figures are obtainable in regard to the cost of building and maintaining her, but competent experts figure that the total amount expended in connection with her will not exceed $90,000.

Thus it will be seen that the two boats themselves, their construction and equipment make a total expenditure of $266,000. To this must be added the $50,000 which Commodore George Gould laid out in tuning the Vigilant up to be a trial horse for the Defender, and taking $185,000 as the total sum laid out in connection with the challenge, trial races, entertainment and similar items, the cost of the international races of 1895 will be seen to amount to fully $500,000.

The America's cup is worth now not more than $250, but fully $1,000,000 has been expended in keeping it on this side of the water since the America won it in 1851.

Modern Instances.

The papers have recently recorded the suicide of three children—two of them only nine years old. One little girl killed herself because of the harsh reproaches of her father when he found that she had appropriated a penny from some household money, and the other two children took their lives in order to spare their mother, a poor widow, the burden of their support. All belonged to the class whose life is more or less of a struggle from its beginning, and probably, therefore, were not endowed with unusual sensitiveness. In commenting upon these incidents, Kate Field's Washington gives a word of warning to thoughtless parents who do not realize the dreadful suffering children often endure, silently, for some chance remark, exaggerated either carelessly or to pint a moral. Habitual inaccuracy of speech is not taken account of by children, unlearned in the ways of this world. A serious, sensitive child naturally believes the letter of the law, and will brood for weeks over hints of pecuniary or domestic trouble which the father and mother forget ten minutes after they have uttered them. The certainty that he is powerless to avert misfortune makes it all the more terrible in prospect. Older people know what it is to "enjoy poor health," and understand the "luxury of being miserable," hear rumors of bankruptcy and warnings of danger with tolerable complacency; but children should be spared this unnecessary torture. "Childhood's happy hour" is balanced by many an hour of real distress, and the 5-year-old who announced in a moment of gloom that "this world isn't any better than an old shanty, anyhow," is not alone among his contemporaries. The retrospection of the old, in which childhood figures as a period of unceasing pleasure, takes account of the gains without the losses, and the weather of the past is always sunshine in the mature memory; so that children have very little appreciation or sympathy given to their sorrows.

Parried by a Joke.

One of Henry Clay's most formidable one-armed man, for many years a mem- Kentucky opponents was John Pope, a ber of Congress, and at one time a United States Senator. He was once running against Mr. Clay in the Lexington district, and the contest was close and exciting.

As election day approached, Mr. Clay heard that an Irishman in Lexington, who had always been one of his political supporters, had announced his purpose to vote for Mr. Pope. Mr. Clay went to see him, and inquired the reason.

"Faith, Mr. Clay," said the man, "an' I've concluded to vote for the man who has only one arm to thrust into the treasury."

The Upas Not Deadly.

The nonsense about the poisonous exhalations of the upas tree were dissipated long ago. It is, however, a good old myth, with many variants in folklore. Profesor Weisner believes that the upas tree is the Antiras toxicaria, to be found in Java. There is one species, the innoxia, which is harmless, whereas a drop of the disipated juice of the toxicaria will kill a dog. Anyhow, there are quite a number of the so-called upas trees growing in the botanical garden of Java, and you may walk around the grove in the most comfortable manner.

In Public.

There is no better criterion of a man's breeding than the way he conducts himself at a theater party. If he ignores the performance, and keeps up a little comedy of his own by laughing and talking, and thus disturbing everybody around him, you may safely set him down as a cad. As a rule, when the theater cad goes by himself he is quiet enough. But going in a party seems to have an intoxicating effect upon him, and he avails himself of it as an opportunity to show what he really is.

Hats and Gendarmes.

The attachment of the French to familiar insignia, costumes and decorations has been shown lately in many picturesque ways. It has been proposed to abolish the red pantaloons which have been the distinguishing mark of French soldiers for many years. Statistics prove that these conspicuous uniforms cause troops to suffer a larger fatality than troops clad in sober blue.

But the attachment of the French people to these gaudy garments is so great that the military administration has been no more able to get rid of them than the British War Office has been able to substitute another color for the scarlet in which the British infantry have fought for more than a century and a half.

More recently still an order has been issued depriving the French gendarmerie—a sort of military police—of the big hat which has been its joy and pride, and putting in its place a smaller and more convenient headgear. This, too, has raised a storm of opposition.

A witticism has been going the rounds of the French press which represents the state of the public mind on this subject.

"To abolish the gendarmes' hats!" exclaims an indignant citizen. "How stupid! Better leave the hats and abolish the gendarmes!"

A Brute of a Husband.

Mrs. Jinks—My husband is a regular brute, and that's all there is about it.

Her Mother—Dearie me! What's he been doing now?

"I had to sit in the station for six mortal hours, waiting for a train, and it was all his fault."

"Didn't he have a time-table?"

"Yes. You see, we wanted to take the limited express, but we missed it, and had to wait six hours for another limited. Of course, we couldn't travel a thousand miles on a way-train, you know."

"Of course not."

"Well, it was just my husband's obstinacy that made us miss the first limited. We were late in starting because I couldn't find my button-hook, and finally he said we'd miss the train if we didn't run. Of course I couldn't run with corsets and a new dress on, you know."

"Of course not."

"Well, so I told him to just run ahead and tell the conductor that I'd be along in ten or fifteen minutes or so and would you believe it, the man who had sworn at the altar to love, honor, and protect me, wouldn't do it."—New York Weekly.

Bad for Both.

The following example of Irish wit is contributed by the Richmond Dispatch:

Patrick's face was so homely that, as he used to say, it seemed an "offince to the landscape," and he was as poor as he was homely. One day a neighbor met him, and said:

"And how are ye, Pat?"

"Mighty bad," answered Pat. "It is shtarvat on that is shtarin' me in the face."

"Is that so?" said the sympathetic inquirer. "Sure and it can't be very pleasant for ayther of ye."

Evening Dress.

A child's admiring descriptions sometimes surpass anything that the most gifted grown-up humorist could invent.

For instance, an exchange relates that little Annette, who had been taken to an evening concert for the first time in her life, was asked by her aunts, on her return home, to give her impressions.

"O, auntie," she exclaimed, "there was a lady who screamed because she had forgotten her sleeves, and a waiter was playing on the piano all the time!"

"My stars! How did you do it?"

"I bought a drug store for $500. Three months after that the State went prohibition, and I sold out for $100,000."—New York Weekly.

In convalescence and age it is very serviceable.

A Remarkable Record.

The New York Times specifies 430 employing concerns, having not less than 315,000 workmen on their pay rolls, which have raised wages in the past two or three months. In all cases, we believe, the increase has been granted voluntarily, and it constitutes the most remarkable record of the kind ever shown in our industrial history.—Springfield Republican.

To Our Lady Readers.

Nine-tenths of the women of the world are afflicted with some of the complaints familiarly known as "Female Diseases," or "Womb Troubles." There is scarcely a family but has an idolized daughter, a cherished sister, or a dearly loved mother who suffers agonies that are endured in silence to protect her modesty. Proper treatment is postponed from month to month by dread of a physician's humiliating examination, or surgeon's knife. Most of these dangerous diseases can be successfully treated at home, but their is widespread ignorance among even the most intelligent classes of women regarding their natural functions and organs of generation, owing to so little information having been published in regard to this subject and a modesty that shrinks from investigation such a disagreeable matter. The Wine of Cardui treatment of female diseases cures thousands of cases of this kind of troubles every year. It can be used successfully in the privacy of the home and is cheap and effective. Henry Guy Carleton, the dramatic author, has an impediment in his speech, he stammers, but this circumstance does not interfere with his gift at conversation. The Chicago Evening Post declares that at repartee he has few superiors, and gives the following story:

One day a lady said to him, "Mr. Carleton, were you born with that stammer—if I may ask the question without impertinence?"

"No, madam," was the reply, "I did not begin it until I began to talk."

When he first met William R. Travers, also an inveterate stammerer and a great wit, Travers said to him, "Mr. Ca-Ca-Carleton, I s-see that you and I sp-speak English with the sa-same ac-accent?"

COURT.

After dispcsing of the Parrett case, as mentioned yesterday, the judge called up the other criminals confined in jail. The boy, Clark, whose home is at the Junction, had been in jail about two months for stealing some tobacco. He has been a pretty tough boy, but the judge, taking into consideration the fact that he has no father and has been allowed to do pretty much as he pleased, suspended sentence on the lad, who owned he had stolen, but that it was the first time.

Not so easy was the outcome with McGuire, the lad who stole a watch at Waterloo. He said he was seventeen years old, and had evidently studied hisown case fully. He was pretty brassy, and undertook to post the judge on the law in these cases, but failed to make the impression he expected. He was asked finally, which he would prefer, a year in the state prison or go to the reform school. He promptly chose the latter, but when he found the reform school meant a stay till he was of age, he wanted to back out. Then he told the judge that he could not be sent to the reform school as he was over the limit of age, sixteen years. Again the judge refused to be instructed and repeated that a boy who talked as he did could hardly be believed, that he did not believe his claim of being seventeen, but believed him to be no more than sixteen. And then he sentenced him to go to the reform school until he was twenty one. It got the fellow down a good deal.

When the other prisoner, John Calhoun, colored, was called up there was a little fun. He was arrested last summer for stealing a suit of clothes near Corunna, while going along the road, in company with several other tramps. The Judge asked him, "Did you steal the clothes, Mr. Calnoun." "Guess I did, Judge, but several other fellows had hold of 'em at the same time." "You have been traveling a good deal, haven't you?" "Not much lately," was his witty reply. But his wit did not prevent his going to the pen for a year, and most cruel of all, he can't vote or hold office during the year.

Nearly everybody has got a divorce this term, and it would seem as if one can hardly move in good society any more without this mark of distinction. Among the great untied are: Matilda and Eldridge Hursh; Andrew and Eva Chaffee; Emma and John Crowley, and she gets $500 alimony; Mabel and Joseph Green; Rebecca and Harrison Jones; Emeriah and Franklin Sweitzer; Elizabeth and Louis H. Willis, and she is adjudged $500 alimony; John E. Miller and Jessie Miller; Minerva A. and David Stahl, she to have custody of the children and she to retain the organ, sewing machine, a half of the other property and $300 alimony; Louisa and Henry Mossey were divorced and she is allowed to take her maiden name, Louisa Kruger.

Edward M. McKennan, of Garrett, was admitted to the bar, though we believe he is not an attorney, but the laws of the state say anyone can be formally admitted to practice. This has been done in this county before. We remember when uncle Jake Hooyer was admitted in the same way. The step is generally taken however when some point of advantage can be secured by so doing.

The case of J. M. Hook vs Jackson township has been dismissed. L. J. Miller gets a judgment against Louisa and Henry Sweitzer, and together with Mrs. Hannah Sherlock, he gets another against the Sherlock heirs.

There has been quite a trial before the judge in the matter of the John Buchanan estate. Albert Buchanan administrator, brings a case against Henry Becher to quiet title. It seems that way back in the 40's Mr. Becher was married somewhere in Ohio and his wife had some personal property. This was sold with her consent and he came to DeKalb county and bought a farm near what is now Corunna. A few years ago he sold this land to John Buchanan and now claims to have some title in it because his wife's money bought it. There seems to be a pretty hard question of law in it. J. E. and J. H. Rose for Buchanan claim that when Becher was married the wife's property, under the "common law" which probably prevailed in Ohio then, became absolutely his, though at present most states have statutes that provide for such cases. And so they contend the wife had no separate estate in any of the property at any time after marriage. E. D. Hartman and F. L. Welsheimer for the Becher side, contend that Mrs. Becher had separate rights in the property and that she still had, when she died many years ago. In testifying Mr. Becker first said that when he originally bought the land and took the deed in his own name, that his wife said it was all right. When put on the stand again he testified that there was an understanding kept up between them that a part of the property was to be considered her separate estate. Between the adverse opinions of counsel and the contradictory evidence of witnesses, the judge has to steer. Very naturally he has taken a few days to study the matter over before he has "the last guess at it."

The case of Kiblinger estate vs H. Kircher there is an order of foreclosure on judgment.

Gilbert McIntosh gets a judgment of $125 against Mary and John Ingersoll.

Wm. Huffman gets judgment of $347 against H. L. Sheets and I. M. Thomas.

Luther J. Loveland is assessed the regulation price, $400, for having a small family prior to getting a marriage license. All of which goes to prove that it is well to observe the established order of proceeding in such case "made and provided."

Court has been taking a vacation part of the time and is not now in session. But a good deal has been done as may be seen from this report. The grand jury adjourned the first week, having done all the work before them, including an indictment against Parrett. Next week the trial jury will be called, we suppose.

Monday's Daily.

Frank Parrett was brought into court this afternoon. He was given a hearing last Monday and Judge Penfield took one week to give his decision. The prisoner was put on the stand and the judge asked him several questions. He said he was arrested once before for fighting in Kutzner & Myers' livery stable. John Fretz and family were also in the court room. After the prisoner was questioned by both the judge and prosecutor the Judge concluded to take one more week in which to make his sentence. The law for such deeds is not less than two or more than fourteen years in the penitentiary. So on next Monday morning he will again be brought before the judge and receive his sentence.

THE BAND.

There is a good deal of interest over the band contest at Fort Wayne. It resulted in our band getting second prize, but this was no test of merit. Many excellent judges of band music expressed the opinion that as far as music went our band was ahead. But the only other band present was the Laporte band and having to come a distance of more than 100 miles their expenses were heavy and so the committee gave them 1st which took with it $250, which only a little more than paid their expenses. Our band got $125 which, as we were close by, was as good for us as the first was for Laporte, if we consider only the money. So the contest was only a formal matter. No one is to blame for even the Fort Wayne committee could not well do otherwise. They had only a certain amount allowed for bands and had they exceeded this, would have been compelled to pay out of their own pockets. Our band was a strong one, both in numbers and ability. We had added several men from other points, all excellent players, and no doubt Laporte did the same. Dr. Buchtel was pressed into service as director in order to let Mr. Calhoun, the leader, play the cornet as no one could take his place fully on the cornet in a big contest. But the boys all seem satisfied with their treatment. Dr. Buchtel makes an able director as he is a thorough musician.

Back Home.

P. J. Lockwood and wife are back from their long trip in the far west. They were all along the west coast of the United States in various parts, and up into the Dominion and south into Mexico, reaching well down to the Isthmus. The saw all sorts of climate and productions and it is safe to say that Mr. Lockwood has observed many things that would make a valuable study to farmers all over the country. He has come back impressed with the belief that some, at least, of the fruit crops for which the "Coast" has become famous, could be as successfully cultivated right here in Northern Indiana and especially in DeKalb county, which he still believes to be the garden of the world as far as general farming is concerned. It would not surprise the COURIER if, in the earnestness of his views he would arrange to start a model fruit farm to to prove that we can cultivate choice fruit as a profitable business. He has the means to do it and we feel that he would not only be repaid in a financial way, but he would give a lesson to others that would be of immense benefit the community. It would not be out of place to say that in the two great trips they have made during the past twelve months they have traveled twice each way across the continent or nearly so, and since they left here in July, have gone over 9,000 miles.

That Prize Drill

WAS PARTICIPATED IN BY MILITIA FROM INDIANA, OHIO AND MICHIGAN.

About thirteen companies of militia and two of artillery were in competition at the Driving Park, yesterday. Of that number there were present from out of the state companies from Saginaw and Jackson, Mich., and I. and G. of the National Guard of Ohio. The drill was participated in by companies of Saginaw, Indianapolis and Auburn and artillery company from Rockville, Ind. The prizes were awarded as follows:

Co. K., Auburn	$300
Co. M., Indianapolis, colored	200
Co E., Saginaw, Mich	150
Rockville Artillery	200

The judges of the drills were Lieutenant Miller, Fifth United States infantry, detached for duty at Purdue university Lafayette; Lieutenant Defrees, Fifth United States infantry, inspector of the national guard for Indiana; Lieutenant Lewis, Twentieth United States infantry, detailed for duty at Depauw university, Greencastle.

The judges rendered their decisions and gave them sealed to Major Miller. At two o'clock the companies were review by Gov. Matthews and staff. After the review they were lined up in front of the Governor and the decision of the judges was read by Major Miller. The Auburn Reds are highly pleased over the prize they have won, and well should they be so. They had some good companies to compete with. The prize they have won will be divided equally among the members who took part in the drill. Each man will receive $6 50 and the balance, $14, will go into the company fund. A Statesman's Mistake.

The Avilla News says that J. C Burrows, U. S. senator from Michigan stopped off there one day last week between trains. We wonder if he made the same mistake as to the state he was stopping in, that he did a few years ago, when in Michigan City. He and a lot of politicians were on a stump speaking tour and had to pass around through Michigan City in the night. A lot of people were waiting to get a speech from the distinguished passengers and insisted on their waking up and coming out on the platform. Burrows came out half asleep and, deceived by the name "Michigan City," thought he was in his own state and at once launched out into Michigan politics and earnestly requested every voter present to put in a good day's voting for Michigan's republican candidate for congress from the district a few miles east of there. He never fully understood the the cause of the Hoosier laugh that followed, as he retreated to his sleeper.

COUNTY SEAT MOVED.

T. C Elson of Buchanan, Michigan, arrived here yesterday and will visit with relatives for a short time, including the family of Simp Johnson, Mrs. J. being his daughter. He brings word that the county seat of his county Berrien has been moved from Berrien Springs where it always has been, to St. Joseph on Lake Michigan, and that a new court house is now being erected on the high point of land near the river. It seems too bad, that the lovely site which has been the county seat for so many years should be abandoned, and go into decay But it all came about by a lack of railroads, the county seat having none, and the people demanded better means of reaching it, than a wagon road. The writer knew well, the old gentleman who named the old county seat, though he has long since passed to his reward. Berrien Springs, as a town dates back with Chicago but the future of the two little settlements will now drift widely apart.

The Centennial.

FORT WAYNE MAY WELL FEEL PROUD OF HER CELEBRATION.

The second day of Fort Wayne's Centenial was a success and last night people were all out to see the illuminated bicycle parade. The person having the finest decorated bicycle to receive a $100 wheel. This was won by a gentleman from the Rambler Bicycle Club. During our visit to the World's Fair we never saw so many people crowed into the same square feet as there were on Calhoune street last night All cross trees were crowed and in fact, street cars and carriages could not move. The art building better known as the Treatman building is well worth the price of admission There are thousands of old war relics, old wearing apparel, etc. The Fort Wayne Electrical Co, have a fine display of their goods. To go through this department one is remined of the electrical building at the White city. The city is decorated beyond description. There is no end to fine electrical displays. At the Pittsburg depot thousands of people gather to see the electrical decorations Newspaper representatives are furnished with Centenial souvenirs, street car tickets, and tickets of admission to all the buildings, ball games and sham battles We were given a most hearty welcome. To-day's program is an interesting one At nine o'clock the prize military drills take place. At 1:30 the band concerts etc The crowds to day are much larger than that of Wednesday and to night a terrible jam will probably take place up town.

OBITUARY.

James O Wiseman was born Nov. 13, 1856, and died Oct. 13, 1895, aged 38 years and 11 months. He is the third son of a family of eight children, four sisters and four brothers.

His father and two sisters have preceded him to the spirit world, leaving two sisters, three brothers and an aged mother to mourn his early death. His mother's has been his home all his life. And in his death she has lost the one she looked to for care in her old age He was a man of exemplary habits and a regular attendant of Sabbath school and church services and an associate member of the Young People's Christian Endeavor. He united with the radical U. B. church in the winter of 1893 in which he has lived a consistent member until his death. His last sickness which was severe for two weeks, he bore with great patience, never murmuring except in his delirious spasms he would beg his friends to let him die and be out of his misery. And when the time came he calmly fell asleep in death. Funeral services were held by Elder Edger on Tuesday at 2 p. m. in the Lutheran church at Sixteen, in Richland Tp. Interment in cemetery near by.

Wm. M. Gregg.

Wm. M. Gregg died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Sallie Scott, in Auburn, Oct. 17, 1895, at about 8 a. m. He was born in Kentucky Aug 29, 1815, so that his age was 80 years, 1 month and 18 days.

At an early age, he moved with his parents to Ohio, and in 1869 moved to Angola. There his wife died in 1876. Since then his home has been with R. H. Weamer, until the death of Geo. Weamer, since which he has mainly made his home with that family. He had been in failing health for some time. He was married in 1836 in Champaign county, Ohio and to this union ten children were born, seven of whom survive him. One is in St Louis, one in Chicago, one in Angola and the others L E Gregg, Mrs R H. Weamer, Mrs. F. T. Zimmerman and Mrs. Sallie Scott reside in Auburn Mr. Gregg has been a faithful member of the M E Church since the age of 18. The funeral will be at the house to morrow at 10:45, service being conducted by Rev. J K Waits. He will be laid to rest beside his wife at Argola, the funeral party taking the noon train.

Epilepsy 20 Years.

Cured by Dr. Miles' Nervine.

A few years ago, Mr. L. W. Gallaher, was an extensive, successful expert manufacturer of lumber products. Attacked with epilepsy, he was obliged to give up his business. The attacks came upon him most inopportunely. One time falling from a carriage, at another down stairs, and often in the street. Once he fell down a shaft in the mill, his injuries nearly proving fatal. Mr. Gallaher writes from Milwaukee, Feb. 16, '95.

"There are none more miserable than epileptics. For 20 years I suffered with epileptic fits, having as high as five in one night. I tried any number of physicians, paying to one alone, a fee of $300.00 and have done little for years but search for something to help me, and have taken all the leading remedies, but received no benefit. A year ago my son, Chas. S. Gallaher, druggist at 191 Reed St., Milwaukee, gave me Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, and I tried it with gratifying results. Have had but two fits since I began taking it, I am better now in every way than I have been in 20 years."

Daily Courier Will Enlarge

THE LIBERAL PATRONAGE OF OUR BUSINESS MEN HAVE BROUGHT ABOUT THIS CHANGE.

Last Monday, Oct. 28th the DAILY COURIER was enlarged to a seven column paper. This change has been brought about by the liberal patronage of our business men. They ask for more advertising space than we can give them with the paper at its present size. We appreciate their patronage and will do all that is within our means to accommodate them. But we wish to impress upon them that it means a much larger expense to the publisher. It will cost us more for material, and more for workmen to do the work. We do not promise that the paper will always continue a seven column paper. After the holidays we may go back to its present size but we hope the patronage will be such that we may make it still larger. Commencing next week the paper will contain more reading matter and we hope every citizen of Auburn will assist us in making it readable. Do a little missionary work for the DAILY. See if all of your neighbors are receiving the paper each evening. Do not leave town, or have any friends visiting you unless you inform us. We will appreciate it very much if you will give us any items concerning yourself or friends. We hope that we may have the hearty co-operation of all in making the DAILY a permanent success.

Like a Miser.

Mrs. Margaret Ax, a very worthy, and quiet old lady, died at Waterloo Saturday. She had gone to a neighbor's, George Shaffers, to help Mrs. Shaffer care for her sick mother, old Mrs. Miser, but just as Mrs. Ax. reached the house she fell sick and faint at the door. She was put to bed and properly cared for, but got no better, dying on Saturday. A niece from Millersburg, Ohio, had been sent for, and reached here in time to see her alive. W. H. Less, who has done her legal business for some time, and who was executor of Mr. Ax's will, when the latter died, took charge of the remains and conveyed her to her home. There the preparations for burial were made and while doing this, Mrs. Less found Ax's pocket book. It was opened and found to contain $2.25 in small change. Soon after, another pocket book was found with $9. Mr Less found a key in the pants Mr. Ax wore before he died in 1890, and this was found to open a drawer, in a box was 70 cents. In another box, they found $19. Another drawer was found to which there was no key, but the lock was forced as it was believed the old man's papers would be found there. But in a wooden box was $30 in silver and two crisp, new, one dollar greenbacks. Then they found another old pocket book in which was a certificate of deposit in the DeKalb bank of $175. It is believed more money is hid some where, but whether it will ever be found, is not certain.

Notes on California.

We are indebted to P. J. Lockwood for a few notes gathered on his recent trip through California and we know DeKalb people will be pleased to hear how our former citizens are getting along out there and how they are regarded. He says:

D P. Hale and family San Diego, Cal. are the most content d I ever met. With them California is the best state, San Diego county the best county and San Diego city the best, healthiest and most pleasant city on this earth and their appearance demonstrates the truth of what they say. Mr. Hale, notwithstanding his delight with California says that lands are estimated too high there and that real estate in DeKalb county, Ind., must advance in price. I need not say that he is a man of excellent judgment and knows, and owns lands in both places.

David Cochran and family at Ontario, Cal., are well and doing well and also that of J. P. Easley, both of whom are prominent officers of the city and are held in high esteem and regarded as a leading citizens of the county. Mr. Easley is regarded as one of the most practical fruit growers of California. He expressed it as his belief that properly directed efforts to fruit culture in Indiana, would produce profitable returns.

Mr. Cochran devotes his time to carpentering, contracting and building and for a little pastime he tickles the soil and beautifies his home and some lots, making them smile with orange and lemon trees and flowers and shrubs.

Dr Thomas Dills, who is also at Ontario, has improved in health and is able to attend to his profession and feels confident that he will fully regain his health.

Quigg Spooner follows up close to Mr. Cochran and his men in putting the finishing touches of paint and paper on the new and beautiful residences of Ontario.

Hearts And Hands.

Joined in Holy Wedlock by Two Prominent Auburn Young People.

As noted in brief Thursday, Albert Weaver and Grace Weamer were that evening united in marriage at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Sallie Weamer Scott on West Fourth street. The ceremony was at 8 o'clock, the wedding march being played by Miss Maud Sembower of Garrett. The officiating minister, Rev. F. Colvin of the Presbyterian church, came first, followed by the two little sisters of the bride, Georgie and Marie Weamer both sweetly dressed, and following them came Mrs. Scott and the groom, and next were the bride and Frank T. Zimmerman. In the parlor were arranged banks of flowers, and a vine forming a double heart a most lovely decoration for a bridal altar. During the impressive ceremony that followed, Miss Sembower played in soft low tones, the air, "Call Me Thine own," adding greatly to the pleasing features of the occasion

After the ceremony an excellent supper was served, the young people being properly the first guests of the occasion, and taking seats at the table with the bride groom.

The bride was lovely in a white dress of corded silk trimmed in lace and seed pearls and carried carnations.

The presents received were numerous and costly, and showed the appreciation in which the young couple are held.

Present from the city were about 125 invited guests, and many from other points. Among these are: From Angola, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Kemsey and daugter, Blanche, Miss Eula Morse, Mrs. T. G. Morse, and daughter, Lela, and Miss Lizzie McConnell. Besides these were, Mrs. H. A. Stevens of Paxton, Ill., Mr. and Mrs. B. Tanner of Sturgis and Miss Maud Sembower of Garrett.

The Fire Fiend.

We have been receiving the fire record for the past year and find quite a number of disastrous fires have occurred. The bulk of the losses has been paid by companies in Walter Hartman's agency The destruction of the Foundry was the principal loss. Here the money was paid before the time allowed for the settlement had expired, Mr. Hartman is commissioned to adjust losses and pay claims. His companies have paid a larger amount for losses this year in Auburn than all other companies companies combined. One reason for this is that he has nine old line companies, fire tested and reliable. They are:

Franklin, of Philadelphia.
German American, of New York.
Pennsylvania, of Philadelphia.
Insurance Co. of North America.
Hamburg Bremen of United States and Germany.
Western, of Toronto.
Continental, of New York.
Manchester of United States England
North British & Mercantile, of United States and England.

The total assets of these is $38,508,383; the strongest combination in Auburn and probably in this part of the state.

Mr. Hartman is now making a business of fire insurance and real estate and his business is increasing. He makes a specialty of writing fire insurance on business risks, public buildings, factories and will write large and small residences, farm property and outside business. His standing advertisements in Daily and Weekly COURIER will tell you what he has to sell and what absolutely safe fire protection he can furnish you.

L. S. FLYER

Gen Blair reports seeing this morning the first passage of the new lightning flyer on the Lake Shore road. It went east on its first trip from Chicago this morning at 5:42 through Waterloo. There was a man at every crossing of a railroad all along the line and every man of the track workers had to be on hand. There were three coaches, and the time they were making was 90 miles an hour or a mile and a half a minute.

A JUST SENTENCE, GIVEN AFTER FULL DELIBERATION.

Monday's Daily.

Judge Penfield, this morning, on opening court, directed Frank Parrett to be called in to receive sentence. It will be remembered that at the first day of court after Parrett was brought back by Sheriff Stroh, he was called up before the Judge and plead guilty. But the Judge did not sentence him then, but said he would wait and hear testimony from Fretz and others. This he did on Monday of last week. But even then, after hearing both sides, he did not pronounce sentence, but waited another week, till today. Some time last week he came to the knowledge of other points about the matter, but nothing material. To-day just before opening court, he learned that Parrett had been in the Reform School at two different times. When the prisoner was brought in this morning he asked him about this and Parrett said it was, true and that he was sent there the first time when he was nine years old. The Judge told him he could not be sent there now, for he is now over 21. So he gave him a good lecture full of feeling, but of very sound doctrine. He made it plain to the prisoner, that if Fretz was not killed, it was no fault of Parrett's. He had shot Fretz at close range, and had then gone off under the impression that he had killed him. This was about as near murder as a man could get without actually committing it. The Judge said he sympathized with the prisoner's parents, but it was his duty to pronounce what he believed to be adjust sentence. So he made it five years. The prisoner was evidently satisfied, for no doubt he felt he deserved it. During the Judge's talk, Parrett the had cried a little. He was taken to-day noon to Michigan City by Deputy-Sheriff, Platter.

Runaway Accident.

This forenoon Mrs, Frank Zimmerman started to take Albert Weaver and his wife, formerly Grace Weamar, out in the carriage for a drive. She hitched up the horse in the barn as usual and went out at the south door. Albert and Grace and Miss Lela Morse had got into the buggy when Albert got out to get his overcoat. Mrs. Zimmerman went to get into the buggy, when the horse became restive and she finally went to his head and took him by the bits, but he started off and dragged her a short distance, she let go and fell. The horse turned suddenly west and upset the carriage, throwing both ladies out, smashing the buggy, and got himself so tangled in the harness that it had to be cut to get him free. Grace had a sprained ankle, Miss Morse was a little hurt and Mrs Zimmerman was scratched and bruised a considerable but none were seriously hurt it is hoped

ELECTRIC BITTERS.

Electric Bitters is a medicine suited for any season, but perhaps more generally needed in the Spring, when the languid, exhausted feeling prevails, when the liver is torpid and sluggish and the need of a tonic and alterative is felt. A prompt use of this medicine has often averted long and perhaps fatal bilious fevers. No medicine will act more surely in counteracting and freeing the system from the malarial poison. Headache, Indigestion, Constipation. Dizziness yield to Electric Bitters. Only fifty cents per bottle at Robbins & McCord's Drug Store. 1 for Infants and Children.

CASTORIA

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

The fac-simile signature of Chas. H. Fletcher is on every wrapper.

FIRE IN OIL REGIONS.

Great Damage Inflicted in the Field South of Toledo.

Ever since Monday night a destructive fire has been raging in the oil regions south of Toledo, Ohio. The telegraph and telephone lines are nearly all rendered useless in that immediate vicinity, and detailed reports of the damage have been difficult to secure.

The fire seems to have done the most damage about Mermil, Cygnet, and Lucky. Among the heaviest losers are the Sun Oil company, nine derricks, four tanks, and a boiler house; the Palmer Oil company, twelve derricks several tanks, and other property; the Ohio Oil company, four derrick and other property; Ralph Bros., several derricks and buildings.

The fire started on the edge of the town of Mungen and burned two miles to the northeast, a strip nearly a mile wide, destroying everything. This is the heart of the best producing oil territory in Ohio.

The fire is now practically under control, and while the loss will be very heavy, from reports at hand, an accurate estimate cannot be given. One estimate is $150,000, others higher.

ANOTHER MASSACRE.

Armenians Burned at the Stake and the Women Outraged.

Constantinople special: Private advices from an Armenian source report the occurrence of a terrible massacre near Bayburt, on the road between Erosum and Trebizond. These reports allege that 800 Musselmen and Lazes, armed with Henry-Martini rifles and supported by the Turkish inhabitants, made an unprovoked attack upon the Armenian inhabitants of several villages, and it is further alleged that a number of young men and women were burned alive at the stakes and that many women were outraged and brutally mutilated. After the churches had been destroyed the Musselman mob pilaged the villages and stole all the cattle and other property of value they could carry off. It is stated upon the same authority that over 150 Armenians were killed.

A Mother and Babes Cremated.

Mrs. Granville Lancaster, residing near Livingston, Ala., went to a well, a mile from home, to procure a bucket of water, her own well having run dry. She locked her three children, aged 5, 3, and 1 year respectively, in the house. On her return she found the house in flames. Hearing the piteous cries of her little ones she rushed into the burning house in an effort to save them. Her clothing took fire and she dashed out and ran to the nearest neighbor's house, where she died after two hours' suffering. Nothing was found of the children but their charred bones in the ruins of the house.

A Mother-in-Law With Nerve.

Harry Dubbs, a widower of Salem, Ohio, who had been paying some attention to Miss Flora Hassey, a sister of his first wife, was invited to call on her the other evening. On his arrival he states that he was confronted with a pistol in the hands of his mother-in-law, who informed him he would have to marry Flora at once or take the consequences. She sent for a minister, but he refused to be married. His mother-in-law then locked him up in a room until the next afternoon, when he surrendered and married the girl.

His Heart Pierced by a Pencil.

Johnny Gripp, an 8-year-old lad living on Wyoming avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., and one of the brightest pupils in the Mt. Washington Public Schools, while runing home stumbled and fell. In his left hand he carried a slate pencil. When he fell he retained his hold on the pencil and the sharp point pierced his left breast. He fainted and was carried home, where he died in five minutes. A doctor discovered that the pencil had penetrated the boy's heart.

Bound for Cuba.

Carlos Manuel Decespedes, son of the first President of the Cuban Provincial Republic of twenty years ago, is upon the high seas, at the head of a secret expedition, which expects to land in Cuba in a few days. He is accompanied by nearly 100 enthusiastic young men, all armed, who have determined to fight the Spaniards for Cuba's liberation. The expedition was quietly fitted out in New York daring the past three months.

A Horrible Death.

At Youngstown, Ohio, Mrs. W. J. Greenwald seated her 3-year-old son, Ray, at the breakfast table and stepped out of the house to do some work. She returned in fifteen minutes and found her boy lying dead on the gasoline stove, near the table. The little boy was horribly burned.

Cremated in a Forest Fire.

Mrs. Mary Costello was burned to death near Manilla, Ind., while fighting forest fires. It is supposed she was suffocated by the smoke and fell exhausted before the fire reached her. Her family were busily engaged at the same time, and her condition was unnoticed until too late.

Eaten by Wild Hogs.

William Ilgen, who was nearly 75 years old, was found dead in the woods by his children near Versailles, Ohio, surrounded by ravenous wild hogs that were devouring the remains. He had wandered from home. It is throught the old man was stricken with heart disease, and starving animals found the body.

Boy's Fatal Jump.

Fred Moore, aged 13 years, of Sheridan, Ind., was killed at Kirklin in attempting to get off a train.

Two Boilers Blew Up.

Two boilers in the Pacific Coast Company's mill at Fairhaven, Wash., exploded, killing Fireman W. A. Armstrong and J. W. Whiteman. M. W. Newkirk and three others were fatally injured. The mill was wrecked and one of the boilers blown clear through a building 500 feet away and then fell on a railroad trestle and carried it into the river.

Another Gunboat Sunk.

Havana special: The Spanish gunboat Caridad has been sunk off Cardenas, Province of Matanzas. The crew escaped in boats. The gunboat will be floated as soon as the necessary assistance can be sent to her.

A BROKEN AXLE

Causes a Fatal Accident on the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Newport (Pa.) special: The breaking of an axle of a car on an eastbound freight train on the Pennsylvania railroad at Trimmers' Rock, about two miles east of here, threw several cars of the freight directly across the passenger track, and wrecked the west-bound mail train from Philadelphia for Pittsburg, that was speeding by at the time, causing the death of two men and the injury of nine others.

The dead are:

David Wolfkill, engineer of the mail train.

Joseph U. Haines, fireman of the mail train.

Wolfkill and Haines both reside in Altoona, Pa.

The injured are:

C. A. Chamberlain of Harrisburg, Pa., left arm broken and wrist fractured; E. L. Colville of Pittsburgh, wound above right arm and right arm sprained; A. E. Brand of Harrisburg, back of head contused, slight cut over the nose, wrist sprained and right arm injured; A. E. Woodruff of Lewistown, Pa., leg and back sprained; S. Groff of Mount Joy, Pa., contused abrasion of the fingers; A. T. Rowan of Trenton, N. J., slight injury to the left shoulder and leg; George Gilmore, contusion of left shoulder; J. C. Campbell of Gallitzin, Pa., abrasion of scalp and sprain and abraision of left knee; Joseph Donald of Mifflin, Pa., freight brakeman, sprain of lumbar muscles and sprain of left ankle.

With the exception of Donald all the injured are postal clerks.

RUSSIA INVITES WAR.

Intense Excitement in England Over the Movements in the Orient.

London special: The dispatch from Shanghai announcing the departure of a fleet of nineteen Russian warships from Vladivostock for Chemulpo and Fusan, Corea, and the Times dispatch from Hong Kong announcing that Russia has obtained the right to anchor her fleet at Port Arthur and construct railroads on the Liao-Tung peninsula, have caused intense excitement in official circles here as well as in those having commercial relations with the far east. These most important statements are looked upon generally as being a sudden reopening in an unexpected quarter of the far eastern question in its widest sense.

The Shanghai dispatch added that the Japanese fleet in Formosan waters had been recalled, that several British warships had been ordered to Corea, and that preparations for a struggle were visible on all sides. It is admitted here that the situation presented is so grave that, should the news prove true, it would make war, in which several nations will take part, more than probable. It should be added that there is every reason to believe that the story from Hong Kong is authentic, and and all sources of information agree that the powers interested in the far east will find themselves confronted by a condition of seriousness which cannot be overestimated. The papers of this city all publish long articles agreeing that British intervention in the far east is necessary.

BURNED AT SEA.

Crew of the Ill-Fated City of St. Augustine Saved.

Capt. John H. Gaskill, wife and seventeen men, comprising the crew of the steamer City of St. Augustine, which was burned at sea, were landed at Boston recently, by the steamer City of Macon, Capt. Lewis, from Savannah.

The City of St. Augustine sailed on her regular trip from New York for Florida at midnight last Saturday night. Nothing unusual transpired until 11:20 Monday night, when fire was discovered in the main hold.

For three-quarters of an hour the flames were held at bay, but suddenly the steam in the boilers gave out and the fire began to make rapid headway. Seeing that it was impossible to save the steamer, steps were taken to abandon her. There were about 200 barrels of oil stowed just back of where the fire originated, and as the flames were gradually working in that direction, the preparations to leave the ship were speedily made. The life-boats were got ready and the crew, seventeen in number, after assisting the captain's wife to a place in the stern of one of the boats, left the burning ship. Within an hour they were picked up by the City of Macon. When last seen the vessel was a mass of flames.

ARE CRUSHED.

Twelve Workmen are Buried Beneath Falling Walls—Two are Killed.

A special from Clyde, Ohio, says: About ninety feet of the east wall of the Elmore Manufacturing company's bicycle factory fell into the street. A dozen persons were buried in the debris. Two were fatally injured and seven others seriously hurt. Workmen began to dig a trench near the wall. The foundations were weakened and it fell outward, burying the men in the trench. The floors sank, and workmen and machinery were precipitated on the pile of debris. Volunteers went to work digging the victims from the ruins, and it is believed all have been rescued. Joseph Becker, one of the proprietors, was seriously injured about the head and hips. Archie Holloway and Frank Cook received internal injuries that will prove fatal. The others injured were: Charles Ber Hardt, caught under falling wall and seriously crushed; Clarence W. Haley, struck by falling machine, head cut and seriously bruised; Ed. King, head cut and bruised; William Snyder, leg broken; Roy Lemmon, head cut; William Hudson, leg broken in two places.

A MAD MOB

Attacks the Jail at Tiffin, Ohio, and Two of Them Killed.

A mob attacked the jail at Tiffin, Ohio, Monday morning, for the purpose of lynching Lee Martin, the murderer of Marshal Shults. The Sheriff refused them admittance, when they procurred sledge hammers and began breaking down the doors of the jail. The Sheriff, after warning them to desist, ordered the guard to fire, which they did, killing Henry Mutchler and Christ Matz. Mutchler had the rope and Matz was using a sledge.

This awful work and the determination of the guards awed the would-be lynchers and they left the place, cursing and wilder than ever. The Sheriff called out the local militia companies, and later Governor McKinley called out four other companies, two from Kenton and those from Fostoria and Clyde, and all five companies are now on the ground, and in full possession of the public square, with Colonel J. A. Kuert and staff in command.

Durrant's Letter.

San Francisco special: The Examiner says that the contents of the mysterious letter, which was to be opened in case Theo. Durrant is convicted, are known. In this letter it is said Durrant makes the statement that he saw the last details of the murder, and saw Rev. J. George Gibson and another man prominent in church affairs bending over the body of Blanche Lamont. The Examiner says that although Durrant requested his lawyers not to open the letter until he was convicted, they have opened it, and so remarkable were the statements it contained that even they did not believe them and refrained from using them in Durrant's defense.

A Lynching Bee in Prospect.

Tiffin (Ohio) special: Lee Martin, a farmer near Watson, tried to strangle a small boy to death. His screams brought the assistance of Frank Burkhart, who was hunting in the woods close by. Burnhart swore out a warrant for Martin's arrest and Officer Sweeney and Marshal Shultz started for the scence. When they reached the home of Martin, a terrible struggle occurred in which Marshal Shultz was shot and died within a few minutes. Officer Sweeney was also shot but not fatally. Martin was lodged in jail in this city and large crowds are gathering about the jail. It is feared he will be lynched.

A Costly Blaze.

A special from Gibsonburg, Ohio, says: Fire broke out in Whitney and Power's grocery and all the business houses on the north side of Madison street were laid in ruins. The burned territory is about two acres in extent. The Toledo fire department was called, but the water supply was inadequate and little could be done to stop the progress of the flames. The total loss is $250,000, with insurance less than one-half. The principal losers are Wood and Fuller, $20,000; Buckeye Supply Company, $10,000; T. J. Tebbe and Son, $11,000; Whitney and Powers, $4,000.

Armenians Killed.

Constantinople special: Fierce disturbances, accompanied by serious bloodshed, are reported to have taken place at Erzeingjan. Sixty Armenians are said to have been killed. The Turkish government has sent a circular note to the representatives of the powers and to its representatives abroad announcing that the outbreak was provoked by the Armenians.

According to advices received the Armenians of the district of Marash have attacked the inhabitants of four Turkish villages.

The Nicholson Law.

In a test case in the Indianapolis police court, Judge Cox held the Nicholson law to be constitutional. The section under consideration was the one forbidding persons other than saloon keepers and their families from entering saloons during prohibited hours. The defendant has a restaurant attached to his bar, and under this ruling restaurants will have to remain closed during the time bars are closed. An appeal will probably be taken. Judge Stubs, of the same court, a month ago declared the same law unconstitutional.

Copper Ore in Ohio.

Great excitement prevails among the farmers in the vicinity of the Saams farm, ten miles east of Fremont, Ohio, over the discovery of deposits of copper ore at a depth of 400 feet. Oil drillers at work on the Saams place encountered what seemed an unusually hard rock, but on investigation they learned that it was copper orr, and in drilling that the vein was of a thickness of eighteen feet. Other wells will be drilled in the vicinity to ascertain the extent of the supposed great find.

National Politics.

The Hon. Thomas H. Carter, chairman of the Republican National Committee, has issued the following: "The Republican National Committee is hereby called to meet at the Arlington Hotel, Washington, D. C., at 2 p. m., December 10, 1895, to designate a time and place for the meeting of the national convention in 1896 and to transact such other business as may demand consideration."

Crushed By Stone.

A special from Stubenville, Ohio, says: By an immense fall of stone at Bloomfield tunnel, on the Pan-handle, which is in course of widening, three men were perhaps fatally injured. They are James Laughton, Wm. Strathers, and Joseph Harkins. The two former received internal injuries, and the latter had his head crushed.

Fatal Railroad Wreck.

The fast freight on the Norfolk and Western Railroad ran into a drove of cattle near Max Meadows, Va., wrecking the train. Engineer George O'Neil of Bristol, Charles P. Lindamodo, Atkins, Va., and Ed Newson, a colored brakeman, were instantly killed. Several others were badly hurt, among them a number of tramps.

Ohio Masonic Home.

The Ohio Masonic Home, built at a cost of $150,000, was dedicated at Springfield, Ohio, in the presence of 40,000 people. Four special trains were run from Cincinnati and specials from Cleveland, Columbus, Dayton, Toledo and elsewhere. There were 10,000 Masons in line, nearly 3,000 of whom were Knights Templar.

Saw Hogs Eat Her Child.

The 2-year-old child of Mrs. George Richards, of Ford County, Illinois, was pulled into the hog pen by the hogs and devoured before the mother, who, attracted by the child's creams, flew to the spot but too late to render any assistance, though she caught an arm of the child, which the hogs then severed from the body.

Whole Fleet Overdue.

San Francisco special: The list overdue Pacific vessels is assuming alarming proportions, and a rush is being made to cover probable losses by insurance. The number amounts to a whole fleet. Four hundred men are aboard these missing vessels, and the value of ships and cargoes is $6,000,000.

Freight Wreck.

A freight wreck occurred on the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railroad west of Leetonia, Ohio. A well-dressed middle aged man was killed. The wreck was caused by the train parting.

Fire at Oakland City, Ind.

Fire broke out in the rear of the When clothing store, Oakland City, Ind., destroying four brick buildings and their contents

FIGHT OR A "FLUNK."

LOOKS AS THOUGH BRITAIN COULDN'T NOW BACK DOWN.

Review of the British-Venezuelan Situation—Venezuela Is Ready to Bring the Thing to a Head as Soon as Our Congress Is in Session.

J. Bull and Uncle Sam.

Great Britain's radical steps toward Venezuela continue to excite the liveliest interest in official and diplomatic circles. President Crespo, who has been absent from the capital on a vacation, has started back, for the purpose, it is believed, of filling the four vacancies in his Cabinet which occurred recently. One of these new officers is the Minister of Foreign Affairs. There is no doubt entertained in Washington that Crespo's new Minister will share the views of his predecessors, as no Ministry or administration could survive in Venezuela which did not make resistance to British aggression its foremost policy. Some of the latest reports from London cause comment and criticism among officials in Washington. One of these statements attributes to Ambassador Bayard the declaration that the Uruan incident is independent of the boundary question, and that the United States can take no part in the former incident. It is pointed out that the two questions are inseparably connected. The Uruan incident is based on a claim that the Venezuelans arrested Sergeant Behrens of the British constabulary on British soil, and that this indignity must be repaired. The Venezuelans claim that it occurred on Venezuelan soil.

A Washington correspondent thinks that if the newspapers and the wiseacres have "got it right" the question of what the Monroe doctrine means is approaching a solution pretty rapidly for a subject in the hands of diplomats. That is, it looks like it would not be a great while before it is known whether the present interpretation by the American editor and Washington correspondent "goes." From what can be learned it looks as though

LORD SALISBURY.

John Bull is going right ahead with the settlement of the Venezuelan question in his own way without intending to trouble Uncle Sam for either advice or dictation. The trouble between the two Governments is that they don't interpret that doctrine the same way—at least that is how it looks from the alleged information at hand.

The British claim that they favor the doctrine, but they don't define it quite as broadly as it is alleged the Cabinet here does. There is where the trouble comes in. And if the statements of the press as to the position of the United States and the doings of Great Britain are correct one of three things must occur—England must back water, or the United States must, or there will be war. That is the straight view of the case as it is presented. The American administration is declared to have taken the view that the United States must, according to the Monroe doctrine, interfere in the Venezuelan boundary dispute, because Great Britain's claim is a violation of that doctrine.

Transgressions of the Monroe doctrine are by the doctrine itself declared—in unmistakable terms—unfriendly acts toward the United States. And there you are in the Venezuelan case. Meantime Great Britain is reported to have sent an ultimatum to Venezuela, and hasn't said a word to Uncle Sam about it, either. There is scarcely a doubt that Venezuela, strong in the belief that the American eagle will begin to scream if J. B. persists, will peremptorily reject J. B.'s ultimatum, and then the question will be "What next?" Next is that somebody will have to "flunk" or fight. That is next. There may be a series of diplomatic pour parlers, but they will be only the preliminary to the "flunk" or fight.

While officials and diplomats in Washington do not go to the extent of saying that war is probable or even possible between this country and Great Britain, they do not see how it can be avoided without the complete humiliation of one of the two countries. If Great Britain proceeds to enforce its threats against Venezuela that country will undoubtedly resist, and then the United States will either have to stand by the theories of President Monroe as they are now interpretated or drop that interpretation. It is well known that Venezuela has been preparing for this event for some time, and the belief is general that as soon as Congress meets in Washington so that the President can secure immediate co-operation the Venezuelans will make a bold move to occupy the disputed territory, relying on help from Uncle Sam. The news has been of such a character that there is talk already of a special session of Congress to assist the President in "maintaining the integrity of American soil."

British View of the Matter.

There are intimations that the British Government would at first have been inclined to take no active steps, pending the consideration of the note from the United States submitted by Bayard. Had the matter been kept reasonably quiet, it is said, Salisbury might have consented to some arrangement which would have "let Venezuela down easy." But the alleged demands of the United States have been made public on all sides, and this has forced Salisbury to act.

A cable from London says: "Summed up briefly the attitude of the English press and people towards Venezuela is one of conscious righteousness and calm serenity. It is everywhere accepted here that the British claims are perfectly justified and complete confidence in the firmness of the Government is expressed. Hints have been thrown out for some time past that the Marquis of Salisbury will stand no nonsense from the Venezuelan Government, and consequently the announcement of the St. James Gazette that the Premier had sent an ultimatum to President Crespo caused but little surprise. As is the case of Nicaragua, everybody expects this latest ultimatum will have the desired effect without the necessity of a recourse to the arbitrament of arms."

An official statement from the Venezuelan foreign office covers the policy of Venezuela in case the British attempt to build the military road recommended by British Minister Chamberlain in his letter to Gov. Lees, of British Guiana. The Venezuelan statement closes with the significant sentence that on the question of building this road the course of Venezuela has been such that the "invading neighbors" cannot make another step further "on the Venezuela side of the line" with out at once provoking a collision.

GROVER REACHES ATLANTA.

Presidential Party Pays a Visit to the Exposition City.

For the present, at least, the seat of the Government of the United States may be said to have been transferred to Atlanta, for, says a dispatch from that city, the city harbors the President, the Vice President and six members of the Cabinet, not to mention Treasurer Jordan, Governors Coffin of Connecticut, O'Ferral of Virginia, Stone of Mississippi and a long list of other dignitaries of officialdom. Tuesday afternoon the Presidential special, running as the first section of the Southwestern vestibule limited on the Southern Railway, rolled into the Union depot. In accordance with the expressed wish of the President and the desire of the exposition authorities the arrival of the party was deprived of anything in the nature of a hippodrome.

Ten thousand people had assembled in the vicinity of the station, crowding the streets as thickly as the space would allow and overflowing for several blocks in every direction. The roofs, windows, awnings, telegraph poles and every point of vantage in the neighborhood had been utilized by eager onlookers. The special was stopped outside the depot, however, the party disembarked and escorted to carriages by the reception committee, and the drive to the Hotel Aragon, their destination, began before the expectant thousands realized that the distinguished visitors had reached the city. Mr. Cleveland was in evident good humor and bowed in response to the continuous ovation he received all the way to his hotel. Secretary Carlisle, who with Mrs. Carlisle rode in the second carriage, was cheered frequently, and Secretary of the Interior Hoke Smith, who found himself on his native heath, was given a hearty reception.

At the Aragon the party was made comfortable until 8:30 p. m. At that hour the ladies were escorted to the Grand Opera House, where they were the guests of Mrs. Hoke Smith at a box party to see Rice's "1492." The presence of the brilliant array of Cabinet representatives had packed the house, which is by far the largest place of amusement in the South. At 9 p. m. the President and Cabinet officers sat down in the Aragon banquet hall to a dinner, given in their honor by Porter King, Mayor of Atlanta. Covers were laid for eighty, including the exposition officials, the visiting Governors and other distinguished citizens.

BIG FIGURES ABOUT MAILS.

Annual Report on Postal Revenue and Expenditures Is Made.

Kerr Craig, Third Assistant Postmaster General, in his annual report for the past fiscal year, shows that postal revenue from all sources were $76,983,128, the expenditures being $86,790,172, an excess over receipts of $9,807,044. Not taking into account the outstanding liabilities or the earnings of the subsidized Pacific railroads ($1,395,732), the comparisons with the statistics of the year ending June 30, 1894, show an increase of receipts amounting to $1,002,649, and an increase of expenditures of $2,465,738. The principal items of expenditure were: Postmasters' salaries, $16,079,508; clerks in postoffice, $9,414,135; free delivery service, $12,139,092; railroad mail transportation, $26,429,747; star route transportation, $5,753,570; mail messenger transportation, $1,192,985; railway postal car service, $2,946,939; railway postal clerks, $7,103,025; foreign mails, $1,171,455. The principal items of revenue were: Letter postage paid in money (made up principally of balances due from foreign postal administrations), $135,818; box rents, $2,509,949; sales of postage stamps, stamped envelopes, newspaper wrappers and postal cards, $73,477,440; money order business, $812,038.

Mr. Craig also submits some statistics relative to the increase of second class mail matter, upon which subject Postmaster General Bissell made a vigorous report last year. He says the weight of second class matter sent in the mails during the year (not including matter circulated free within the county of publication) was 265,314,382 pounds and the amount of postage collected, $2,653,143. This was an increase in weight of 10,524,076 pounds and in postage collected of $105,240. Estimating, as heretofore, that 15 per cent. of all second class matter mailed is sent free of postage within the respective counties of publication, the number of pounds of such matter may be placed at 46,820,185; adding this to the number of pounds on which postage was paid, as above, makes the total weight of second class matter mailed 312,134,567 pounds, or over 156,067 tons.

The number of requisitions for newspapers and periodical stamps filed during the years was 13,003, an increase of 1,194. The number of newspapers and periodical stub books requisitions received during the year was 3,385, on which were forwarded to postmasters 5,593 stub books, 2,727 being of the manifold kind. There were also sent to postmasters 5,619 packages containing 56,190 newspaper and periodical envelopes.

CHAPTER VIII.

Mrs. Dene was standing near the railway carriage door, chatting gayly to the three gentlemen who were with her, when at the further end of the station she saw the quartermaster coming toward them with his daughter.

"Go and meet her, Gerald," she said to her husband, and waited impatiently until they should come up.

The weather was wild and stormy, and Jane had wrapped her gray alpaca dust-cloak closely round her, and drawn the hood over her head, her lovely face looking the lovelier with battling against the wind, her eyes, brightened by excitement, shone like two stars; and Mrs. Dene, glancing furtively from one man to the other, saw how fair they thought her.

She stepped forward and kissed her, not so much in demonstration of her affection—for Mrs. Dene was not one to display her feelings—as to show she considered her a friend on an equal footing with herself.

Then followed the introductions, and Jane's eyes rested upon Major Larror with something like awe, caused partly by the knowledge that he was bearing now an honorary title, and would one day be a peer of the realm—on which naturally she from circumstances laid an exaggerated stress—and partly from a romantic admiration of his dark Byronic countenance, which might have been good-looking had it not been so grim and gloomy. She only withdrew her gaze to meet Valentine Graeme's laughing blue eyes, and to put her small gray-gloved fingers into his outstretched hand.

"You have met before?" observed Captain Dene, who had made them formally known to each other.

"We are old friends," said the young man, with easy boyish cordiality. "That is to say, we are already sufficiently intimate to have had a quarrel, and I am afraid to tell Mrs. Dene on what subject."

"Was I concerned?" asked the lady, smiling.

"It was only a question of color," answered Jane. "I told Mr. Graeme I thought your drawing-room so pretty, and he said—out of pure kindness, you know," she assured her listeners gravely—"that he liked our blue-and-white striped chintzes better——"

"Better than mine of mignonette-green?" finished Mrs. Dene, in pretended wrath.

"It is my ignorance, perhaps," he pleaded, humbly. "Every one is not born esthetic."

"For which the saints be praised!" exclaimed the Hon. Barry Larron. Then meeting her glance of hurt surprise, he added quickly, with an air of elaborate gallantry, "I mean no reflection on the mignonette-green curtains, than which there is nothing I admire more. If every one possessed the exquisite taste of Mrs. Dene, there would be no need of a pretty affectation becoming a vulgar fashion."

"We had better get into the carriage," said Captain Dene, curtly.

It annoyed him always to see Major Larron in converse with his wife, for he could never for a moment forget the insult she had suffered at his hands, and he wondered suspiciously why she had asked him to join their party. Was it only on Jane Knox's account? He had never been admitted to friendly intercourse since their marriage. He had dined once with them when he was one of twenty guests, and he had called twice—the usual exigencies of society, no more.

But Mrs. Dene noticed nothing, and jumped lightly into the carriage in obedience to her husband's suggestion, as Jane turned to meet her father, who was coming toward them after seeing to her luggage.

"How do you do, Mrs. Dene? It is very kind of you to be troubled with my daughter," he said, with an awkward attempt at ease. Then addressing Janet "Here is your ticket; take care of yourself, my girl."

"I will take care of her, Mr. Knox," said Mrs. Dene, graciously.

"We will take care of her," supplemented Val Graeme, with a smile.

"Good-by, Jenny."

"Good-by, father."

And with a hand pressure only they parted, the quarter-master not being certain whether a warmer farewell was compatible with good manners, and unwilling to compromise his daughter—she, too, a little ashamed and self-conscious. But as the train left the station she yielded to the impulse that moved her, and leaning out of the window, kissed her hand to him—once, twice, thrice.

CHAPTER IX.

Colonel Prinsep had never felt so dull as during the week succeeding his promise to Mrs. Dene.

In a moment of impatience he resolved to take ten days' leave to get out of the place for a while, and it was only what might have been expected that he should bend his steps toward Cawnpore, which was just now the center of attraction, and to which station several of his officers had already gone.

The train arrived about seven o'clock, and he drove at once to the hotel where he intended to put up. As he alighted from the gharrie some one came hastily down the steps who, on closer inspection, turned out to be the Hon. Barry Larron.

"Why, Colonel, I did not know you intended coming here!" he ejaculated, in some surprise.

"Nor did I. It was an impulse moved me."

"And a very good impulse, too, sir," said his adjutant, Valentine Graeme, coming up to them with his long, swinging strides. "We are having an awfully good time here."

"I'm afraid you won't get a room. The hotel was full when we arrived," said Major Larron. "Did you bring a tent?"

The Colonel shook his head.

"I'll lend you mine, sir. I dare say some one will put me up," said the adjutant.

"You had better come in with me, I suppose," observed Major Larron, somewhat ungraciously, not caring to have his privacy disturbed, yet unwilling to appear as inhospitable as he felt.

"Thanks, I shall be very glad—if Dene has not a spare tent. I fancy I heard him say he had," answered Valentine, as unwilling to avail himself of the invitation as his senior officer had been to render it. "You know," he explained to the Colonel, "we are camping with the Denes."

"Is Mrs. Dene here?"

"Oh, yes! I wonder you had not heard. Alipore is so desperately fond of gossip. She and——"

He was about to mention Jane's name, when Major Larron, whose ill-humor had increased by the adjutant's evident reluctance to share his tent, pulled out his watch.

It was nearly twelve o'clock when Colonel Prinsep entered the mess-room of the ——th Foot.

He had dined rather late, having lingered over his letter-writter longer than he had intended, and then had stayed some time smoking and thinking—not of Jane. The provocation removed, she haunted his thoughts no more, and therefore he was the more surprised when the first familiar face that met his view was that of the quartermaster's daughter.

And yet, often as he had pictured it to himself, it scarcely seemed familiar now. The face that had drooped and flushed beneath his gaze that afternoon when he saw it last, full of shy warmth and child-like worship, was radiant now, and bright with saucy triumph. If he had thought her sweet and pretty then in her blue cotton gown, how doubly fair he admitted her to be now, in her soft draperies of gauzy white; with straw-colored ribbons fluttering here and there, and a knot of pale tea-roses at her breast. Then there had been something of pity and condecension in the admiration with which he regarded her; now they met as equals.

At that moment she caught sight of him. A glad light leaped into her eyes, but she did not flush or falter in her speech, as she would have done a week before. She knew her power now, and felt a natural womanly pleasure that he should see her thus, the center of an admiring group, the acknowledged beauty of the ball.

"You have become quite a woman of the world since I saw you last," he said, his voice unconsciously falling into that caressing undertone that so many women have found dangerously sweet.

"What a long time it seems!" sighed Jane.

Then putting his arm about her waist, he drew her in among the dancers. Caring little for dancing for dancing's sake, the Colonel was a man who did most things well, while Jane, always light and graceful in her movements, had profited by practice. They did not stop till the last Teutonic strain had died away.

CHAPTER X.

"I suppose you can see what is going on, sir?" said the Adjutant to his Colonel on the following evening, as both were dressing for dinner in the tent, which they were sharing still.

"I don't know that I can, until you tell me what it is."

"Why, this infatuation of Major Larron's for Miss Knox. Every one is talking about it. You know what a sulky brute he generally is; but he seems transformed when he is in her presence. I would not have believed he could have made himself so agreeable as he has done these last few days—to her."

"I suppose it would be a good match," said the Colonel, slowly.

"If I had a sister," exclaimed Val Graeme, hotly, as, stooping to the looking-glass, he struggled with his white tie, "I'd sooner see her in her grave than married to Major Larron!"

"Gently, gently, Graeme," rebuked the Colonel. "You can have no grounds for such sweeping condemnation."

"I suppose I really have not; but then, sir, you don't know him as we do. He is so cold, so satirical. I can imagine him killing his wife by inches—not with blows, but with chilly words and neglect. He is gloomy, too!"

"If he is all your fancy has painted him, there is not much chance of his suit prospering, I should say."

"But that's just it, Colonel. He is quite different when with her. How can she guess that he has only donned these pleasant qualities for the time being?"

"You are making him out a perfect monster."

"So he is," answered the impulsive Adjutant. "Remember how he behaved to Mrs. Dene! Is not that enough to make us all dislike him?"

How often an incident or a word spoken by another unawares seems to come in answer to your own thoughts! It was so now, and the Colonel's sallow face flushed at the coincidence as he bowed over the girl's outstretched hand, later in the evening.

She was looking very fair that night, in a simple, high black gown, with deep white lace falling round her throat, and a bunch of white roses in her belt.

Stephen Prinsep, gazing down upon her sunny, ruffled hair, grew confused at his own thoughts, and for a moment distrait. When he recovered himself, and was about to speak, the opportunity was gone; Major Larron had already challenged her attention, and was talking earnestly in a low voice.

Nothing that Jane could do should make him relinquish his purpose—only her marriage with another should make him lose hope; and he had no rival yet. That she cared nothing for Valentine Graeme he was certain, nor was he sure that the Adjutant was serious in his attentions. He was notoriously a flirt, not from intention, but because nature had made him fickle as well as impressionable.

Meanwhile, the dinner having ended, Jane, unconscious of the interest she had excited, followed Mrs. Dene out into the open. It was a balmy evening with no moon, though the sky was bright with stars. Coming out of the shamiana, where it had been brilliantly lighted up, it seemed darker than it really was.

"Let us have a camp-fire," suggested Mrs. Dene to her husband, who had followed.

"You will find it very hot and stifling."

"It will be more cheerful," she persisted.

He shrugged his shoulders, but gave the order, and a few moments later a bright log-fire was burning

But the result proved Captain Dene to be right. The warm wind that was blowing became unbearable now that it was charged with the heat of the huge fire and volumes of blinding smoke as well as dust.

The deputy commissioner and Colonel Grey, with Captain Dene, walked away from it at once, but Mrs. Dene, for consistency's sake, tried to put up with it a little longer, and the rest were eager to support her.

"Ladies are very seldom wrong," began Major Larron, hesitatingly.

"But one of them has spoiled her prestige," laughed Mrs. Dene. "Never mind, the exception proves the rule."

"You ought not to stand there, the heat is unbearable," went on Hon. Barry, going over to Jane's side.

Colonel Prinsep was standing near her, and, without meaning it, she looked up questioningly into his face.

"Yes, it is too hot; let us go into the cool," he said, answering the implied inquiry by moving a few steps further off.

She accompanied him, and presently at his suggestion both turned and went together out of sight.

Val Graeme, who had also meant to join her, looked taken aback for a moment, but recovered himself directly, thinking he knew the reason of the Colonel's interference. It was most probably on account of what he had himself said while dressing in the tent. Reassured, he walked over to where the other men were seated smoking

But Major Larron became white with rage. He made a movement to follow them, then changed his mind, and coming to a sense of what was expected from him, turned back and stood by Mrs. Dene's side.

"I am unfortunate," he observed, with an uncomfortable laugh.

"It was not her fault," she answered, gently.

"No, I dare say not; but, Mrs. Dene, do you think that I have any chance?"

He leaned toward her, his dark-brown eyes scanning her face anxiously to see if he could read his fate, but she shook her head gravely

"I am the last person you should ask. Even if I knew her feelings, could I betray her trust?"

"I forgot You are right. Only, if ever it should be in your power, may I count upon your help?"

Had he been pleading for her own love instead of merely for the aid of her influence with another woman, he could not have been more earnest.

They could see no one; but all that had passed between them had been of vivid clearness to the rest. The scene, framed in the flickering fire-light, seemed burned into Gerald Dene's brain as he gazed, unconscious of everything save that the barrier which past events had erected between his wife and the man to whom she was once engaged to be married seemed to be broken down at last.

(To be continued.)

The Drunkard's Dog.

The New York Times reports that Policeman Logan, of that city, saw a man lying intoxicated on the pavement, and went toward him, meaning to wake him. As he drew near, however, he saw a brindle bulldog beside the sleeper, and as the policeman leaned forward to shake the man, the dog growled and showed his teeth. Logan stepped back for fear of being bitten. The drunkard's name was Collins.

"Hey, there!" said Logan. Collins woke up.

"Tell your dog to let me arrest you."

Collins struggled to his feet, and said to the dog: "Come on, Bully, we're 'rested."

The dog "heeled" obediently, and the policeman took them to the Thirtieth Street Station-house. There was no reason why the pup should be locked up, but it was plain that he intended to stick to his drunken master as long as he could, and he was allowed to occupy the cell in which Collins spent the night.

The dog accompanied Collins when Logan took him down to Jefferson Market Police Court, and was close to him when Justice Hogan asked:

"Well, sir, what have you to say for yourself?"

"Talk to him, Bully," whispered Collins to the pup; and the pup jumped up on the bridge, where the justice could see him, sat up, held up his fore paws, and whined.

Everybody in court was watching him.

"Are we sorry?" Collins asked him.

The pup whined loudly and more forlornly than before. He looked as if he would cry in another minute.

"Well, young man," said the justice, "I'll let you go this time on account of your dog. I don't think you deserve such faithfulness as he has shown. If I were a dog and had a drunken master, I would leave him. But I guess dogs are more faithful than men."

"Thank the judge, Bully," said Collins.

The dog stood up on his hind legs, gave one short, joyous yelp, and bounded out of the court-room beside his master.

From the German.

One of the highest officers in the German army is very particular that his soldiers are properly fed. He is in the habit of making unexpected visits to the barracks and inspecting the food in person. On the occasion of one of these visits he received two soldiers carrying a steaming boiler from the kitchen.

"Put it down. Fetch a spoon," he commanded.

The astonished soldiers looked at each other.

One of them rushed off, but reappeared in a few moments with a spoon.

"I want to see what sort of soup you get," said the general, as he dived into the boiler with the spoon, but as soon as he tasted it, he spat it out exclaiming:

"What sort of devil's broth is that? It tastes like dish water. What is it, anyhow?"

"That's just what it is, your excellency," replied the soldier. "It's the water the dishes were washed in."

Very Hard to Please.

"Why don't I like America?" said an Englishman who was drinking a cocktail in a New York hotel. "Why, for many reasons. I haven't found anything here that I like. Take your athletic spirit, for instance. It's bogus. What is your representative sport? Baseball, is it not? Well, that simply represents the work of hired men. It isn't really sport. Besides, I can't understand your newspaper accounts of it. They are very mysterious. Waiter, another cocktail. Your climate is bad, and your politicians are jingoes. I have been disappointed all around and in everything save one, and that is your cocktails. I drank six last night before going to bed. I have suffered from your climate to-day."

Large Forests.

Canada has a forest in the Hudson bay and Labrador region 1,000 by 1,700 miles in extent, while that of the Amazon basin is calculated to be about 2,100 by 1,300 miles. Central Africa has a forest region of 3,000 miles from north to south, of an unknown depth, and the vast pine, larch and cedar forests of Siberia are 3,000 miles from each to west and 1,000 miles from north to south. The natives call them "places where the mind is lost."

Egypt's Burden of Debt.

The debt of Egypt has been increased $40,000,000 since the British occupation, although the rate of interest has been cut in half. The share of debt of every man, woman and child is $72.70.

PARSON BROWNLOW.

SKETCH OF THE CAREER OF THE FAMOUS TENNESSEAN.

A Man of Great Strength of Character, Who Attained Fame as Preacher, Editor, Statesman and Patriot—Magnanimous in Victory.

The Fighting Parson.

William J. Brownlow, a Virginian by birth and an East Tennessean by adoption, came to Carter County, Tenn., away back in the '30's as an itinerant Methodist minister. He was a most singular and remarkable character, who pressed his individuality upon the history of his adopted State and played a prominent part in the thrilling events which marked the history of East Tennessee throughout the civil war. He had a very limited education, and without fortune or friends to aid him he not only attained distinction as a preacher, but as editor, author and statesman. Though without fame, fortune or friends, he possessed other resources which counted for much in the earlier days of our republic. Endowed with superior physical strength and endurance, he had also more than the average of native ability, and to these were added ambition, indefatigable energy and unfaltering courage. His ministerial office did not afford him a field of labor altogether suitable to his peculiar nature, and, though he did not abandon his calling, he sought other fields of usefulness. Like many other pioneer preachers, he wore his ministerial robes loosely, and was always ready to lay them aside to engage in carnal warfare whenever in his opinion the occasion demanded.

His readiness to meet his foes half way and settle differences in any way that might suit their convenience, gained for him the soubriquet of "The Fighting Parson" long before the days of the rebellion afforded opportunities to belligerent chaplains to win this distinction.

He established the Elizabethton Whig in 1839, which was afterwards moved to Jonesboro, Tenn., and later to Knoxville, Tenn., where it became famous as "Brownlow's Knoxville Whig and Rebel Ventilator." The newspaper afforded him a broad field for the development of his penchant for controversy, and he became noted for his vigorous style, his unlimited vocabulary of epithets and his fearless denunciation of persons and principles not in accord with his views. He was an adept in the use of sarcasm and ridicule, and hurled his thunderbolts with tongue or pen without fear or favor. He crossed lances in this line with such writers as George D. Prentiss, the elder Bennett and other lesser lights. At the close of a most bitter campaign about 1840 a defeated candidate for Congress named Powell, in company with his brother and son, all armed with pistols, went to Brownlow's office for the purpose of forcing him to retract some abusive articles; but the wary editor was prepared to give them battle. A few shots were exchanged, when the Powells retreated. Some time after this, one evening, while the parson was reading, a bullet came crashing through his window, passing near his head. He ran out hastily and fired at the assassin, who escaped in the darkness. A prominent citizen was confined to his room for many weeks after this with rheumatism, as he explained, but many surmised that the parson's bullet had hit its mark. The little office before mentioned is still standing, though abandoned and dilapidated. The participants in the affray have long since "crossed the silent sea."

Another personal encounter occurred at Jonesboro, Tenn. Col. L. C. Haynes was the editor of a rival paper, and he and Brownlow became involved in a war of words. Brownlow, having exhausted his store of abuse and vilification, went in quest of his enemy with his pistol in his right hand and his cane in his left. Meeting Haynes on the street, he asked him if he was armed, repeating the question three times. Receiving a negative reply, he shifted his pistol to his left hand and proceeded to attack Haynes with his cane. The latter then drew a pistol and shot Brownlow in the leg, severely wounding him, but the fight continued until the parties were separated by bystanders.

Though a pro-slavery man, when the war came Brownlow was a strong friend and adherent of the Union cause. It was at this period that his loyalty, patriotism and courage shone brightly amid the conflict of opinion.

To express an opinion on either side cost many a man his life. The Union cause owed to Brownlow, more than to any other man, the fact that East Tennessee sent to the Federal army over 30,000 volunteers, a larger per cent. of her male population than was furnished by any Northern State.

Even after martial law had been proclaimed, and the city of Knoxville was occupied by the rebel troops, the Knoxville Whig continued to denounce the Confederate authorities, until the press was destroyed, and the editor forced to fly for his life. Up to this time a national flag had been kept floating over his residence. A detachment of Confederate troops was sent to take it down, but they were met at the door by Brownlow's married daughter, Mrs. Boynton, who, imitating the spirit and courage of her father, warned them that she would shoot the first man who dared to lay hands upon the flag. Actuated, perhaps, by a sense of honor and gallantry, they withdrew without "hauling down the American flag."

Under the promise of protection Brownlow was induced to return to his home in Knoxville, but the promise was violated and he was imprisoned, and doubtless would have been executed but for fear of retaliation by the Federal government. He was finally released from prison, and, with his family, sent through the Federal lines. At the close of the war, he re-established his paper at Knoxville, took an active part in the reconstruction of the State, was elected Governor, and afterwards United States Senator. He died at his home in Knoxville, Tenn., after a brief illness, in 1876.

Throughout his turbulent career, Brownlow never lost sight of the fact that he was a Christian minister, nor forfeited the respect of those who knew him best as such. When the war had settled the principles for which he had contended, and when, through its results, many of his former friends and neighbors were impoverished and distressed, there was none more willing to give them aid and counsel than he. At his old home in Knoxville he enjoyed the esteem ond respect of ex-Unionist and ex-Confederate alike, and each were the beneficiaries of his kind offices and generous deeds. It is said by those who knew him well that he was a true and steadfast friend, kind and agreeable in society, and in his home as gentle and affectionate as a child. Laying aside the question of right or wrong as regards his devotion to the Union, it may be said of him that he was a pupil of Clay and Webster, whose party went down in the memorable campaign of 1860 flying the colors of "The Union, the constitution and the enforcement of the laws."

SCENE OF BROWNLOW'S FIGHT WITH THE POWELLS.

Sharks in Baltimore Waters.

Great numbers of sharks are gathered at Curtis bay, Baltimore, where they are said to have thinned out the edible fish and kept the fishermen from making money. Col. Godfrey Eagle, chief engineer of the sugar refinery, has tried to snare the sharks with pork. He had a large steel hook made, on which he put five pounds of meat, and then tied it with a line to the pier. He caught many soft shell crabs, but no sharks. Now the Curtis bay folks are talking of using live dogs as bait. It is notorious that a shark will risk his life for a live dog, even if he is yellow and without a pedigree. There is plenty of material at the bay in the shape of worthless dogs. The scheme is to hide the hook behind the animal so that the shark won't see it. William Lowry, a shark fisherman, says that he never saw so many of them in his life. They round up the fish under the sugar refinery pier and then wait for them to come out or die.

Origin of Envelopes.

The institution of payment for the carriage of letters and envelopes dates, as far as can be ascertained, from the reign of Louis XIV., at which time Sieur de Valfyer organized a service of private post and placed his letter boxes at the street corners. The envelopes for these letters were bought at special offices. In the Egerton collection of manuscripts, at the British Museum, there is an envelope resembling our present one, which holds a letter from Madam De Pompadour to the Duchess d'Arquillon, dated 1760. There is also exhibited an envelope of coarse paper, opening at both ends, addressed by Frederick the Great to an English general in his service. It is dated Potsdam, July 28, 1776.

She Had Been There.

George Forbes, the engineer of the Niagara Electric Company, says he once lived in a house belonging to one of the Porter family, who have long owned most of the property near the falls. A Miss Porter was once traveling in Europe, and, at the table d'hote, her neighbor said "Oh, if you are an American, I suppose you have seen Niagara Falls?" She turned to her inquirer, and, fixing him with her eyes, she said: "I own them!"

A PORTABLE DERRICK.

It May Be Readily Moved from Place to Place and Speedily Erected.

The derrick shown in the engraving is designed to be readily moved from place to place and erected with facility and to automatically swing its load-carrying arm to deposit the load and automatically return the arm to normal position for engagement with another load. It is especially adapted for handling forkfuls of hay and straw in forming stacks. Figure 1 shows the device in perspective, Figure 2 being a sectional view of the parts of the derrick. The base block is secured in position by headed stakes driven in the ground, and receives the lower end of a derrick post, held upright by guy ropes. On the upper end of the post a carrier arm is pivoted to rock, and on a reduced portion of the arm is a traveling frame from which is supported a sheave block, anti-friction rollers facilitating the ready movement of the frame.

To rock the carrier arm and retain it at any desired inclination a rope extends from the post over a pulley on the rear end of the arm and thence over and around other pulleys on the post to a fastening point. The hoisting rope, secured at one end to the front portion of the traveling frame, passes down over a sheave pulley and up over a loose pulley of the frame, and thence over pulleys on the post and an idler pulley held in brackets at its base, extending horizontally for convenient connection with a team or other power.

Convenient means are provided for locking the post and arm in position and for automatically releasing the arm and swinging it laterally after depositing a load, the provision for rocking or inclining the arm facilitating the deposit of its load at any required place on the stack. This derrick may be readily taken apart and packed in a wagon for convenience in moving.—Scientific American.

A NEW VENTILATOR.

It Will Supply a Car with Plenty of Fresh Air Without a Draught.

The blessings and thanks of a whole generation of cold-catching people will go to the man that provides a railroad car with good ventilation without the annoying intervention of the "open-window fiend." The accompanying illustration shows an invention that seems adapted to the purpose.

This ventilator, by the way, was devised by a man who has had charge of United States army hospitals, particularly as to ventilation, for many years. As shown in the broken-away portion of the main view, a ventilating pipe extends lengthwise through the coach near its roof, its opposite ends being bent outward and provided with funnel-shaped cowls, whose mouths are covered with wire netting.

Inside the car the pipe has air outlets consisting of short tubes at whose outer ends are deflecting plates, as shown in one of the small views, another view showing, near one end of the pipe, a valve opened by the air moving in one direction and closed by an opposite current, while adjacent to this valve, near each end of the pipe, is a damper to regulate the air current. To permit the removal of cinders from the pipe, a collecting chamber is provided near each end with removable bottom covered by a screw cap.

THE NEW VENTILATOR.

In the lower part of each car door is an air outlet having a covering of wire netting at one side and at the other side a hinged coverplate opening outward.

A Trolley Car in Flames.

Fire companies often have peculiar duties, but it is doubtful if any of them ever had a more singular task than on Monday evening. An alarm was turned in at Broad and Fairmount avenues, opposite the Park Theater, in Philadelphia, and the engines soon came racing to the spot. On their arrival they found that it was not the theater on fire, but a large decorated trolley car, the bunting and decorations being ablaze. This unusual spectacle soon drew a very large number of people, who waited around until a single engine played on the car and extinguished the fire.

Walker.

The surname of "Walker," a contemporary tells us, has nothing to do with pedestrian ideas, but had its origin in trade and occupation, like other familiar names, such as "Smith," "Farmer," "Bowyer," "Fisher," and so on. "Walker" is a common surname in Yorkshire, as will be understood when its connection with the industry of that region is explained. It is of Flemish derivation. A man who worked at the walke—walche—or fulling-mill was a walker; and in early Manchester directories all the fullers and clothdressers were called walkers.

Rifles.

A new magazine rifle, invented by an Italian officer, fires twenty cartridges automatically without any change of position on the part of the soldier. The firing may be intermittent or continuous at will. At a recent trial in the Cascine at Florence, before the Prince of Naples, the twenty shots were fired in two seconds and all hit the target.

There are some people who claim a certain amount of distinction because they have seen a century plant in bloom.

BUTTLER.

Mrs. J. A. Campbell and daughter spent Sabbath with her sister near Angola.

A sad and fatal accident occurred at the railroad yards here last Saturday. Mort McNabb, the fifteen year old son of Oliver McNabb, of this place was riding between freight cars on a moving train, when by some means he fell between them and had his right leg crushed to a pulp, almost to his body, everything was done that could be done, to relieve his suffering, but he died of his inquires about four p. m.

Rev. Dustman assisted Rev. Dibro in in his quarterly meeting and sacramental service last sabbath and preached a very good sermon. The house was well filled by Lutheran brethren, who participated in the service. This is as it should be, and we are much pleased to see this christian spirit manifested by these two denominations.

Clyde Oberlin's loss has been adjusted, and he is ready to rebuild.

Isaac Stiefel returned from Europe last Sunday.

David Knisely, D. C. Miller, H. L. Tess, J. A. Campbell and E. O. Jones made a little run to Newville Sunday afternoon.

John Madden, jr. is slowly recovering from an attack of fever.

Benton Beard of Alvarado has purchased the Pinshin property on west North street and will occupy it soon.

The Bicycle people are erecting a new smith shop and room and are getting ready to run a much larger force the coming year.

J. A. Campbell reports riding a Butler wheel eighteen hundred miles within the last three months at a cost for repairs of less than $1.00. Can any one make a more favorable report for any other wheel?

CORUNNA.

Peter Moody is down with lung fever.

Geo. Weimer has moved into his own house on the north side.

The Sunday school convention held last Saturday in Corunna was well attended, and was very interesting.

A little son of John Grate was run over by a wagon last Friday and pretty badly hurt.

Ben Gushwa who has been visiting his brothers, Phillip and Jonathan, for several weeks, has returned to his home in Evanston, Ill.

Chas. Wallace has moved into the corner room formerly occupied by Jim Delong.

Rev. J. O. Rose of Kendallville is holding a series of meetings at the Christian church assisted by Rev. Frank Minnick.

C. H. Willets returned home last Thursday evening, after a ten days' visit with his sons in Andrews, Ind.

Wm. Lewis is on the sick list, with symtoms of typhoid fever.

Last Wednesday the Lake Shore run a train from Chicago to Buffalo, a distance of 510 miles in 481 minutes, making four stops, changing engines four times, and slowing up sixteen times. We believe this beats the world's record. She shot through Corunna like a meteor.

LITERARY NOTES.

From S. S. McClure, LIMITED, 30 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

The editors of McClure's Magazine call attention to the unaccountable neglect of Lincoln as a subject for a magazine serial. Books about Lincoln have necessarily—like all books of biography—a limited circulation, and only once before has a magazine published a life of Lincoln. People at large know little of the first forty years of Lincoln's life, Few know that he was a man grown before he left Indiana for Illinois. He spent fourteen years in southern Indiana and left there in his twenty-second year.

There is remarkable resemblance between the early portrait of Lincoln in McClure's for November and the portraits of Emerson.

Golden Wedding

Uncle George McMillen and good wife, have traveled life's journey together for fifty years, and on Saturday, the relatives engineered a little surprise on the worthy couple. At the residence of Mr. and Mrs. M. Boland on North Main street a reception was arranged, Mrs. Boland being daughter. The hours set were from 11 a. m. to 3 p. m. and it goes without saying that there was a season of unalloyed enjoyment for all. George McMillen and Jane Calkin were united in marriage Oct. 27, 1845, at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Calkin, one mile south of Corunna, the ceremony being performed by Judge Payne of Auburn. But the story is better as told in a paper read at the meeting Saturday by Miss Laura Keeran. a part of which we quote:

"If you will come with me back through the annals of a half century, we will attend a for-sure wedding in a humble log cabin about 1 mile from Corunna, just 50 years ago to-morrow morning. a bright and beautiful day like this, there were assembled quite a number of neighbors and friends, a much younger crowd than this, I imagine, dressed in their Sunday best, sitting up in straight-backed chairs, with a look of expectancy on each countenance. Presently there came forward a fair young girl of 19, dressed in white mull, leaning on the arm of a tall slender young man, 10 years her senior, in a plain black suit. Judge Payne, of the little village of Auburn, arose and after the usual ceremony, pronounced them man and wife. Thus uniting the future lives, hopes and prospects of Geo. McMillen and Jane E. Calkin. After the usual congratulations, the wedding party mounted horse-back and rode through the woods, 8 miles to the home of Mrs. J. C. Wade, where they ate their wedding dinner. This day a new home was established. They remained in Mrs. Wade's home about 2 weeks and then made their first home here in Auburn. As years passed by they had their share of joy and sorrow, hopes and disappointments, add children came to brighten their home until there were 6. The first separation perhaps, was when their youngest, little Dolly, a sweet child of 9 years, was stricken with that dread disease diphtheria and was taken away.  As their children grew up to man and womanhood, and made new homes of their own, they brought their grandchildren to brighten their home. After a time their oldest child, Mrs. Libbie Heist, left them with three motherless children. Two of these were taken into the old home, given their mother's place, and reared as their own.  Many changes have come in 50 years out of the home. When they started on this journey of life there were no railroads in this county, steam thrashing machines were not heard of, electricity was not thought possible. They have lived to see the forest cleared away and thrifty farms take their places. Towns grew out of small villages and towns spring up out of corn fields.  In behalf of the company present, I congratulate you that you have been spared in this long journey and now have reasonable health and a comfortable home, and in this golden age are surrounded by four children and eight grandchildren and one great grandchild. you have lived to say with the Psalmist David, "Once I was young, now I am old, and yet have not seen the righteous forsaken or his seed begging bread."

Numerous presents, all appropriate to the occasion were received by the worthy couple.

Among the invited guests, those from the city: Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Rush, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Moody, Mr. and Mrs. M. Kline, Mrs. A. J. Little, Mrs. W. H. Ford, Mrs. T. D. Daily, Mrs. Marietta Borst, Mr. and Mrs. David Lawrence, Mr. and Mrs. Mike Whetsel, Mr. and Mrs. Milo Calkin, and the Misses Keeran.

From abroad were: Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Brumbeck, Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Orr, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Harmes, and Mrs. P. N. Calkin, all from Corunna. Besides these were Robert McMillen and Ella Hartsborn, nephew and niece from Newark, Ohio.

Read the hand-writing on the wall. See what twelve reputable citizens of the Republic have to say about Pretzinger's Catarrh Balm. All who have tried it speak words of praise:

Mrs. J. B Heiser, Yale, O. "It is of great benefit to me."

A. D. Brashear, Glen Gardner, N. J. "It relieves my nasal catarrh more than anything else."

Chas. P. Cart, Trotwood, O. "Just the stuff for cold in the head."

Geo. W. Gause, Jeweler, Willshire, O. "Pretzinger's catarrh Balm gives me great relief."

Dr. Wm. B. Harris, 1106 Bellefontaine Ave., Kansas City, Mo. "Is the best thing I have ever found."

Mrs. W. J. Miller, Leonidas, Mich. "Pretzinger's Catarrh Balm is the best thing I have ever used for Catarrh"

Mrs. Lillie Graham, Montgomery, Ala. "Am very much pleased with it. My neighbors are just carried away with it."

C. C. Drake, The Lufkin Rule Co., Saginaw, Mich "Pretzinger's Catarrh Balm for severe cold in the head gives instant relief and certain cure."

Mrs. E. H. Bissell M. D., Armada, Mich. "Has helped me wonderfully. My head is clear and I now breath easily, raise and cough very little Walked two miles to-day. Am 75 years old."

Mrs. A. Gochenour, Argyle, Ill. "Have had catarrh or ozena for forty years and tried many reliefs and cures but found nothing which did the good Pretzinger's Catarrh Balm has done for me."

Mrs. H. T Zacharias, 911 Everett St., Cincinnati, O. "Very prompt in curing colds in the head; exceeds all remedies for the cure of the most obstinate cases of catarrh. One jar will convince anyone of the virtue it possesses."

J. H. Powell, Silversmith, Sulphur Rock, Ark. "A victim of catarrh of the head and throat in severest form for several years, and one jar of Pretzinger's Catarrh Balm has cured me. I will guarantee a cure whether you do or not, to all."

Mrs. Emma Wolford, Chase City, Va. "Pretzinger's Catarrh Balm is the only medicine I ever got which did me good Since using I have not had any trouble in breathing at night as I had for many years, and I thank God that some one has found a remedy which cures, for I have suffered terribly."

Small sample will be sent on receipt of 2 ct. stamp by Pretzinger Bros., Chemists, Dayton, Ohio.

Wednesday's Daily.

We noted briefly on Thursday, the new fast train that made a trip over the Lake Shore from Chicago to Buffalo. The correct time made in detail for the whole trip will be of interest, for it broke the world's record. It started from South Chicago as a fast run could not be made in the city, and stopped at Buffalo Creek in the outskirts of Buffalo, making the entire distance, 510 miles in 8:01:07, an average, including stops, of 63.16 miles an hour, or excluding stops, of 64.98 miles an hour.

The fast train left Chicago at 3:29:27 o'clock and was composed of an engine, tender and three drawing room cars.

The run to Elkhart, 87.4 miles, was made 85 minutes, 26 seconds, an average speed of 61.32 miles per hour. At Elkhart two minutes and eleven seconds were consumed in changing engines and the train left there at 4:57:04 for Toledo, arriving at the latter place, a distance of 133.4 miles at 7:01:38, an average speed of 63.60 miles per hour. The time consumed in changing engines here was 2 minutes and 36 seconds, and the train left Toledo at 7:04:07 for Cleveland, a distance of 107 8 miles. This run was made at an average speed of 60 96 miles per hour, the train arriving at Cleveland at 8:50:13, where 1 minute and 43 seconds were lost in changing engines. The run of 95.5 miles to Erie was covered in 85 minutes, 32 seconds, an average speed of 67.01 miles an hour.

Erie was reached at 10:17:30, and 2 minutes and 18 seconds were consumed in changing engines. The run to Buffalo Creek, 86 miles was covered in 70 minutes, 16 seconds, an average speed of 70.98 miles an hour. Summary:

Left Chicago 3:29:27; arrived Buffalo Creek 11:30:34.

Time. 510.1 miles in 481 minutes.

An average speed of 63 60 miles per hour. Time consumed by five stops, 10 minutes, 57 seconds. Time excluding stops, 510.01 miles in 470 minutes, 7 seconds, an average speed of 63 98 miles per hour. Number of slow downs for railroad crossings 24. Number of other slow downs, 14.

The locomotives used were standard Lake Shore passenger engines.

The Lake Shore officials are jubilant over their success in beating the time made on the recent run of the New York Central's fast train.

John Carper Dead

John Carper a prominent and highly respected citizen died Saturday very suddenly. He was talking to some men who were building him a corn crib, and they asked him how he wanted a certain thing done. He answered them and immediately fell and died. It was a case of heart disease. The funeral was yesterday.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist church at Rives Junction she was brought down with pneumonia succeeding lagrippe Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interuption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in its results." Trial bottles free at Robbins and McCord's drugstore. Regular size 50c. and $1 00. 1

The Business Man's Statement.

LAFAYETTE, IND., May 2, 1894.

Lyon Medicine Co., Indianapolis, Ind.:

GENTLEMEN—It is with pleasure that I can conscientiously say a good word for LYON'S SEVEN WONDERS. For more than a year I was troubled with indigestion and stomach disorders. Various remedies which I tried gave me no relief, until one day last summer I was told by a brother drummer of the virtues of LYON'S SEVEN WONDERS. I concluded to try it, and am happy to say one box, costing only one dollar, entirely cured me. To those who suffer as I did I would strongly advise them to use LYON'S SEVEN WONDERS.

Yours truly,

Old-Time Incident

A Pioneer Accidentally Killed, Is Exhumed.

(Goshen Times)

Last Thursday, William and Henry C. Miltenberger disinterred the remains of their brother Philip and buried them in the Waterford cemetery. The coffin in which the remains were encased was of walnut and was remarkably well preserved considering that it had been only six feet under the ground for 53 years It was 53 years ago this fall that Philip Miltenberger, in company with George Dedenbeck, went out hunting in Union township for deer. While they were peering through the woods in quest of that game, Mr. Miltenberger was mistaken for one of the fleetfooted animals and was shot by his companion. The remains were buried on the farm of John Walbin in Union township and were laid in what was at that time the thick woods The exact spot where the remains were located was remembered by only one person in the neighborhood, a Mrs. Bloudage, who is the daughter of the late John Walbin. George Walbin, who fired the fatal shot, has been dead many years and the circumstances will be remembered only by the very old residents. On being taken out of the ground the coffin was opened and a perfect skeleton found therein. There was a hole through the shoulder blade showing where the bullet entered.

St. Joe Bridge.

The Finest Structure Of The Kind In Northern Indiana.

It might be safe to say it is the finest of its kind anywhere. We have heard so much about this bridge that we gladly took advantage of the opportunity to go and see it yesterday on the occasion of the visit of inspection the Board of County Commissioners make before accepting so important a piece of work. In this party besides the members of the Board, Mr. Heffelder, Mr. Henderson and Mr. Hague, were Deputy Auditor Frank Dilks, Mr. Sawyel, Mr. McLuteal and ye editor. In going down, we passed and the board inspected the two smaller of the new bridges, the ones across Bear Creek. They are fine ones, but being exactly like the large one over the river, except in size we omit any full mention. At one o'clock, we left St. Joe, going east and then south to the bridge. After crossing the track of the B. & O. as we go south we find the road on a long grade that extends to the new bridge The bridge is built high enough to make certain that no flood will affect it. The structure is a model of elegance and strength and as it is all of steel and stone except the plank bed, its durability is unquestioned. There was not a tremor in the structure as we drove onto and over it and one could see no difference from the solidity of the dry roads we had been passing over, except that we were on plank. And these planks, it should be noted, are all fastened down by large wire spike nails driven through them at each end and in the middle, the nails being skillfully bent up or clinched over the iron stringers beneath. Along each side of the bridge is a strong iron frame called a "hub guard" which makes an accident to a team on the bridge, impossible

The bridge itself is of heavy steel, and stands 176 feet long in one span the width being 16 feet and the heighth of the frame work or steel truss, is 26 feet But massive and heavy and strong as it is, is nevertheless beautiful, symmetrical and very artistic. It rests on massive abutments made of solid stone masonry the blocks being very large and perfect We cannot see how anything, even time itself can affect this structure if the steel work is kept painted. And the board has taken pains should be done, and all the steel bridges in the county are painted once in three or four years. Before the commissioners had concluded their inspection Mr. Craun, the St. Joe artist appeared on the scene, and took a view of the bridge. There will be a number of copies made and each commissioner and any others, who desire can get them at 50 cents each. We expect to add one to the adornments of the COURIER office

We have only to add, that in this bridge and the smaller ones, the commissioners have made excellent bargains. Profiting by former errors, or want of experience, they have been able to avoid the defects so often found in bridges and the mistake in bridge letting. These jobs do them full credit and we hope the people will agree with us in saying "Well done." The lovely structure will always stand a credit to their judgment and business ability. Our bridge expenses are necessarily great, but we believe the people will be satisfied when they see they get the worth of their money The bridge itself would cost about a quarter more now than when the contract was let, as all iron work has advanced But with the new bridges built this year and in recent years all stone and iron, it is believed a part of this great expense will be stopped.

Wedding Bells.

At 4 o'clock this afternoon at the home of the bride's mother occurred the marriage of John Bartels, of Garrett, and Miss Lillie Shutt, Rev. Fred Keller officiating. Mr. Bartels is an industrious young man. He resides on a farm with his parents just east of Garrett. Miss Shutt is one of Auburn's many young ladies. She has always resided here. Mr. and Mrs. Bartels will reside in Garrett where he has employment in the shops. The COURIER joins with the friends of both couples in congratulations.

Like Old Ben.

A few of our readers will remember the half crazy and fully eccentric old Ben Blair who used to travel over Noble and Whitley counties carrying a big cane profusely decorated with old coins and various other trinkets. This cane, he at his death, left to the Masonic lodge in Ligonier, though we never heard what they did with it. But a recent item in the Indianapolis Sun, reminds us of old Ben and we clip it.

An old man with white hair and a long, white beard, tottered into police court, Tuesday morning. His name is John Bass, aged 72, and he is a counterpart of the fabled Rip Van Winkle. He was charged with being drunk. Monday evening, as he wandered along Washington street, he was attacked with cramps of the stomach and procured a drink of whisky and pepper to relieve his sufferings. The fiery concoction got the upper hand and he landed in the police station.

In his hand he carried a cane weighing about 30 pounds, which was a curiosity of curiosities. The handle was formed of a revolver and the stick was strung with relics of every description, which he had picked up in his wanderings. There were, in all, 800 relics on the stick. The old man said that he has a son at Amesville, O., and that he is making his way to that place. Judge Cox told him to travel on.

Killed the City

That there is such a thing as overdoing a boom, or in getting a corporation into debt, we quote from a western exchange, an item that is attracting a good deal of attention:

J. M. Davis, a member of the Kansas State legislature from Kiowa county, gives a doleful account of the condition of his section to Kansas, and especially of his own town. Five years ago Greensburg had 2,500 inhabitants; now there are 123. There is a bonded debt on the municipality of $45,000, and practically no valuation to pay it with These bonds were issued for waterworks lighting and other improvements demanded by the progressive people who were trying to make a city. The few people there now decline to pay their taxes, and lots and buildings are being sold by the county treasurer, or rather that official tries to sell them. Farmers come into town and buy tax certificates for comparatively nothing These they desire for the buildings, which they remove, caring nothing for the lots. Five years ago a flouring mill was erected at a cost of $7,000, the city giving $3,000 in cash. Recently the building was purchased for a few dollars and removed to Colorado. Small as Greensburg now is, its population may soon be indicated by two figures, and then possibly by one. In the meantime the owners of $45, 00 worth of bonds will be looking for some one to pay interest and principal when due.

Important Decision.

The Ligonier Banner has an item of some value to trustees and road supervisors. It says: James Anderson of Kankakee township, Laporte county, in 1893, sued two road supervisors for taking soil from the road in front of his farm and hauling it to another part of the county. Judge Noyes decided against Anderson, and the case was taken up to the appellate court, although Mr. Anderson was given the laugh for so doing. The appellate court reversed Judge Noyes' decision. The court's ruling shows that supervisors may remove soil or gravel from one location to another on the same man's land in working the roads, but it must not be taken onto another man's property without permission of the person from whose property the soil is taken. The case of Bennett and Stephens will now come up in the Laporte circuit court and there is no doubt that Anderson will be allowed damages. Other like cases will follow.

We noted briefly on Thursday, the new fast train that made a trip over the Lake Shore from Chicago to Buffalo. The correct time made in detail for the whole trip will be of interest, for it broke the world's record It started from South Chicago as a fast run could not be made in the city, and stopped at Buffalo Creek in the outskirts of Buffalo, making the entire distance, 510 miles in 8:01:07, an average, including stops, of 63 16 miles an hour, or excluding stops, of 64 98 miles an hour.

The fast train left Chicago at 3:29:27 o'clock and was composed of an engine, tender and three drawing room cars.

The run to Elkhart, 87.4 miles, was made 85 minutes, 26 seconds, an average speed of 61 32 miles per hour. At Elkhart two minutes and eleven seconds were consumed in changing engines and the train left there at 4:57:04 for Toledo, arriving at the latter place, a distance of 133.4 miles at 7:01:38, an average speed of 63.60 miles per hour. The time consumed in changing engines here was 2 minutes and 36 seconds, and the train left Toledo at 7:04:07 for Cleveland, a distance of 107 8 miles. This run was made at an average speed of 60 96 miles per hour, the train arriving at Cleveland at 8.50:13, where 1 minute and 43 seconds were lost in changing engines. The run of 95.5 miles to Erie was covered in 85 minutes, 32 seconds, an average speed of 67.01 miles an hour.

Erie was reached at 10:17:30, and 2 minutes and 18 seconds were consumed in changing engines. The run to Buffalo Creek, 86 miles was covered in 70 minutes, 16 seconds, an average speed of 70 98 miles an hour. Summary:

Left Chicago 3:29:27; arived Buffalo Creek 11:30:34.

Time. 510.1 miles in 481 minutes.

An average speed of 63 60 miles per hour. Time consumed by five stops, 10 minutes, 57 seconds. Time excluding stops, 510.01 miles in 470 minutes, 7 seconds, an average speed of 63 98 miles per hour. Number of slow downs for railroad crossings 24 Number of other slow downs, 14.

The locomotives used were standard Lake Shore passenger engines.

The Lake Shore officials are jubilant over their success in beating the time made on the recent run of the New York Central's fast train.

A Falsehood

A report has been circulated and is being clipped by nearly all of our exchanges that "three Auburn militiamen were discharged from the ranks for bad behavior after returning from the Fort Wayne Centennial. That some of them played a game run by a confidence man and were taken in. That after losing their money they threw their brass buttons in the face of the fakir and made him give up the coin that he had won. That one of the soldiers struck the man." The above is wholly without any foundation whatever, and was started by that disreputable sheet, the Garrett Clipper. The fact is that the three men of the Auburn Militia were discharged two weeks before the Centennial for failure to attend drills. In regard to losing money on the confidence game, there were several members of other companies who were caught by this swindler, but not one man from the Auburn company. During the forenoon the confidence game was in session and at about noon when it was broke up and the man run off of the grounds, the Auburn militia were drilling for the $300 origs which they won. Exchanges who have used the above falsehood will please make proper correction.

BUTLER TO TOLEDO ON A BICYCLE.

On the morning of October 20, in company with Harman Repp, of Glenn, Michigan, I left Butler at 5 a. m. for the city at the mouth of the Maumee. The day was dull and cold, with a piercing icy wind, with snow in the afternoon. As hundreds of my readers have passed over the railroad to this city, they like myself, would think there was nothing worth speaking of or writing about between these places. But I was mistaken, as any of them would have been had they accompanied me. The roads being rather good we pushed along rapidly passing Edgerton before any evidence of life was visible. From this point we rode directly east, passing about two miles south of Bryan, the court house alone being visible. We rode fully 25 miles before dismounting and reached Ridgeville, an old inland town at 7.50 a. m, after passing over many miles of rough clay roads, and some patches of sand. The road from this place to Napoleon is unexcelled by any that I have ever rode over—much nicer than almost any city street. We reached Napoleon, the county seat of Henry county, at 8:20 a. m. making the 42 miles in 3 and 1-3 hours. The town is situated on the Maumee river, the Wabash canal and railroad, and is wide awake and prospering. We spent the time till noon with one of its oldest residents, Geo. Pardee, who royally entertained us and showed us over the town with its numerous fine residences, waterworks, wind mill factory, and nearly dried up canal and river. We left Napoleon for Toledo at noon, crossing the nearly dry bed of the famous and historical Maumee and wheeled down its east bank, over all kinds of roads, sometimes nice and smooth, and other places rough and hard, then loose and sandy, and over many small hills with abrupt steep sides, with always a bridge of uncertain length and condition at the bottom, necessitating a slow descent, and a corresponding hard pull up the other side. We were soon surprised and fascinated by the beautiful views down the river. A dam at Grand Rapids keeps the river full from bank to bank, for a distance of fourteen miles, and affords "slack water" upon which the commerce of Ohio and Indiana need to float in the good old canal times. The river flows between high banks on either side covered with a spare growth of small trees, with here and there a beautiful island, occupied by some thirty farmer, and covered with fruit trees, peaches, apples and grapes, with only a boat to reach the outer world. The long stretches of the bright blue river in its winding course, and beautiful green banks, is unexcelled any place in the two states through which it passes. We made the run to Grand Rapids, 14 miles, in an hour, and were delayed here half an hour by a small break. Grand Rapids is a struggling little town on the banks of the river with manufactories standing still on account of low water. Below the dam the river bed is bare for the whole distance across and its empty bed is covered with a mass of broken rough stone, which the people are quarrying out in many places. We crossed the Clover Leaf railroad here and rode on to Waterville, a distance of ten miles, over better roads, but the hills and bridges continued. The river gradually assumed its appearance, and in the distance apparently across the cultivated fields the lazy canal boat, white and glistening, moved slowly along. We passed Waterville which showed up clearly on the west side of the river, without a stop, and reached Fort Meigs at 3:20 p. m. spent a few minutes looking over its old earth works, and with a glance at Perrysburg, crossed the Maumee, which had gathered up a little of its lost greatness and entered the old town, now rapidly going to decay. We here came to the line of Toledo's enterprising street cars, and an improved stone road of ten miles to the city over whose hard rough surface we wheeled slowly and cautiously into the city, reaching my friend's at 4:20 p m. making the long ride of about 90 miles in less than eight hours, without feeling particularly tired, and after having enjoyed the most delightful and interesting ride I had ever taken. J. A. C.

Dr. Ford and Emmett Refner, together with some parties from Waterloo and Pleasant Lake, went up into northeastern Minnesota last week to hunt deer in the big woods up there. This chilly weather will make it pretty lively for them, though of course, the wind will not be so severe in the woods as it is here in this now open country.

ST. VITUS DANCE.

A Physician Prescribes Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.:
My daughter Mattie, aged 14, was afflicted last spring with St. Vitus dance and nervousness, her entire right side was numb and nearly paralyzed. We consulted a physician and he prescribed Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. She took three bottles before we saw any certain signs of improvement, but after that she began to improve very fast and I now think she is entirely cured. She has taken nine bottles of the Nervine, but no other medicine of any kind.

A HOTEL GHOST.

The Narrative of a Singular Experience of Lord and Lady Dunraven.

Apropos of the report that the Brevoort house was to be closed, which was denied, however, there is a story that Lady Dunraven has been known to tell about the famous old inn. The countess is described by those who know her as a woman much more inclined to common sense than to ghost-haunted Cock lanes, even with Dr. Johnson's authority. She used to tell the facts in the tale simply for what they were worth, says New York Tribune. It was more than one decade ago, years before the Valkyrie was thought of, when Lord Dunraven was first interested in the mining regions of Northern Michigan. He and Lady Dunraven were staying in New York for a few days before starting west and had taken rooms at the Brevoort—pleasant rooms, with a view of the avenue and a nice glimpse of Washington square. The first night, being tired with their voyage, they went early to bed, but, as it happened, not so early to sleep. Both the earl and countess were blessed with hearty English constitutions. They were not at all accustomed to lying awake till the small hours. They wondered what they could have done, what they could have eaten or drank to afflict them with such gratuitous vigilance. Just at a venture, finally, they bundled themselves out into the adjoining parlor, made themselves extempore couches there and slept soundly till morning. Next night and the night after there was the same wakefulness and in the end the same migration to the adjoining room for relief. They began to think they should have to leave town earlier than they had planned, for they would not for the world have made any pretext to shift chambers. The explanation of the mystery, if it was an explanation, came out by chance. They had a call before long from an old-time New Yorker whom they had met in England, an authority on all matters pertaining to the town's minor history. "I wonder," he remarked casually, "that they should have given you these rooms. You know it was in that room there, not so long ago, that a Mr. X—— hanged himself." It was in that room that Lord and Lady Dunraven had tried in vain to sleep, and they exchanged significant glances. Of course, it was only a coincidence, they said; but the next day they took their departure for the west.

The Luck of a Man Who Happened to Stroll Into a Louisville Pool-Room.

A good story is told about Oliver P. Lucas, who died while holding the position of secretary of the board of aldermen, and Bob Cathcart, a horseman who was widely known and who had many friends in Louisville, says the Louisville Courier-Journal. Cathcart was interested in a poolroom here and was selling pools on a big race one day when Lucas came in. The two were well acquainted and Lucas nodded his head as a salutation or greeting when he caught Cathcart's eye. If he noticed it, he attached no significance to the fact that Cathcart immediately cried: "Sold for $40." Lucas passed out of the room and some days later an attache of the pool room meeting Lucas asked him why he did not come and get the pool he had won. Still ignorant of the fact, and thinking some jest was intended, Lucas flourished his hand carelessly and replied:

"Oh, I don't need it. I've got plenty of money."

A day or two passed and Lucas received a second inquiry about the money. By this time his curiosity was excited and he asked a friend to go to the pool room and find out what all that talk was about. This friend speedily learned that Cathcart had accepted Lucas' nod as a bid, knocked down the pool to him, and, as is often done yet where the bidders are known, simply slipped a "ticket" in the box. The horse that the pool was sold on won the race and there was something over $300 awaiting Lucas. When told the circumstances Lucas said to his friend: "I hardly know whether to take that money or not. I never bid on the old plug and never thought of such a thing. I never heard of the horse before." This friend told him he had just as well take the money, for some one would have bought the pool for a dollar or two less, and Cathcart was not a loser, as the commission money was all he was looking for. Lucas allowed the money to remain there for nearly a week and then told some one about the pool room to bet $125 of it on some race. He lost his bet and then collected what was left of winnings on a wager which he had never made.

Jealous of a Stage Lover.

Too much zeal in the discharge of his stage duties has lead a jeune premier at a Paris preparatory theater into a disagreeable, not to say, painful adventure, says London Telegraph. The young actor was acting with a lady of his own age in a new piece and had to make a declaration of love. He held the mirror up to nature so well in the matter that the young lady's intended husband, who was looking on from the stalls, flew into a towering passion and thirsted for blood. When the performance was over the man possessed by the green-eyed monster waited at the stage door for the jeune premier and whacked vigorously at the actor's face with his cane. The player—bruised, bleeding and tearful—did not make any effort to return blow for blow, but, holding up a manuscript which contained his part in the play, remarked to his aggressor that he had done no more than follow the instructions of the author of the little love comedy in which he had acted with the beautiful young lady. The affair ended there.

Boston Women Withdrew to Weep.

It is a tribute to Mr. Irving's genius that when he acted "The Story of Waterloo" the other day so great was the emotion that men wept and women fainted, says an exchange. We recall one performance of Mr. Irving's during his first visit to this country, when he was playing "Charles I.," that the same thing happened in the Boston theater. So bitterly did some women weep that they withdrew to the dressing room of the theater and had hysterics all by themselves, which shows how much genuine feeling had been excited by that great and doleful interpretation of a king.

Is It Fate?

Did you ever stop and think how our lives are affected by some seemingly trifling circumstances? It is amusing to think what might have occurred but for some more or less trifling circumstance If the nose of Cleopatra had been shorter the whole face of the earth would have been different. It is said that a glass of wine too much changed the course of French history; many persons who have carelessly picked up a scrap of literature on Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer have been cured of what they considered an incurable disease by its use C. S. Chambers, Atlanta, Ill, was a sufferer from nervous prostration. A friend, who had knowledge of Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer, gave him a small sample. Its use stirred up new hope in his mind; he used two full sized bottles and was cured—fate directed this wonderful medicine to his notice. Your fate may be urging your attention to the same remedy. If you are troubled with nervous prostration, spasms, fits, sleeplessness, mental depression, exhausted vitality, despondency, sexual and general debility. For sale by F. E. Davenport. 40-44

Stops Inflammation.

There is no medicine so often needed in every home and so admirably adapted to the purposes for which it is intended, as Chamberlain's Pain Balm. Hardly a week passes but some member of the family has need of it, A toothache or headache may be cured by it. A touch of rheumatism or neuralgia quieted The severe pain of a burn or scald promptly relieved and the sore healed in much less time than when medicine has to be sent for. A sprain may be promptly treated before inflammaton sets in, which insures a cure in about one-third of the time otherwise required. Cuts and bruises should receive immediate treatment before the parts become swollen, which can only be done when Pain Balm is kept at hand A sore throat may be cured before it becomes serious. A troublesome corn may be removed by applying it twice a day for a week or two. A lame back may be cured and several days of valuable time saved or pain in the side or chest relieved without paying a doctor bill. Procure a 50 cent bottle at once and you will never regret it. Fort Wayne Sentinel:—Captain L. Kuhlman, of Company K. third regiment Indiana infantry, of Auburn, was a welcome visitor at the home of J. B. Olinger, while attending the centennial. Captain Kuhlman's company won first money in the prize drill of which they were justly proud.

Chalk and Cheese taste about as much alike as cheap imitations and the original FOX'S XXXX SQUARE WAFER BUTTER CRACKERS. FOX'S have a full, fresh wheaty flavor while the others are chalky-flavored and lifeless. When you want crackers that are crackers you'll look for FOX'S imprint on them.

Next week Joseph Butler retires from the position of public prosecutor that he has held for three years, and is succeeded by Eugene Davis, also of Angola, Mr. Butler, as far as we know has succeeded very well in discharging the duties of his difficult office. There are many disagreeable things to be encountered. He owns a large farm to which he will now give his attention.

Thursday's Daily.

Mort Olds of the St. Joe News made us a call to-day.

Mrs. Kuhn, of Detroit who has been here as a witness in the Weaver vs Weaver trial, returned to her home to-day.

Say, why don't you try De Witt's Little Early Risers? These little pills cure headache, indigestion and constipation. They're small, but do the work.

C. E. Emanuel who is attorney for the remonstrants in the gravel road case, says the court has sent the case back to the board of commissioners, so they will have to tackle it again.

The healing properties of De Witt's Witch Hazel Salve are well known, It cures eczema, skin skin affections and is simply a perfect remedy for piles.

W. H. Palmer who has charge of the Evergreen cemetery left at noon to-day for a week's visit with his father, E. H. up in Whitley near Larwill.

There are many good reasons why you should use One Minute Cough Cure. There are no reasons why you should not, if in need of help The only harmless remedy that produces immediate results.

During the last four years there have been erected in the city of Chicago forty-one new Methodist churches, valued at nearly $500,000. Of these, thirty-one have become self supporting.

The police records at Fort Wayne show that during the Centennial eighty arrests were made as follows; Intoxication 47, grand larceny 6, vags 5, peddlers without license 5, murder 4, pickpockets 9, short change 2, assault and battery 1, profanity 1.

You're the Judge. Before you try the various brands of crackers, give FX 'S XXXX a fair show and ten to one they'll compel you to decide in their favor. They're the best, that's the reason. Unless "FOX" is stamped on the cracker, you can't be certain as to its quality.

There is no end to improvements on East Ninth street. Joe Pfefferl has fitted up a new bottling works on the south side of the street. A new cold storage building has also been erected. When all is completed Mr. Pfefferel's buildings will be convenient in every detail for his business. He is also filling up the street level with the sidewalk. On the north side of the street, Lyman Lockwood is having another building remodeled. This will also be used as a bottling works, but we understand will not be opened till spring. These new buildings add a hundred per cent. to that street. We are glad to see the improvements and hope they may continue.

A Good Motto: "Crack and try before you buy." Next time you go to the grocers for crackers remember this and put it to practice. If you are a good judge FOX'S XXXX Square Wafers will please you best, no matter how many brands you try.

Melt like mist. They melt like mist in the mouth and tickle the taste with a toothsome touch. You ask "what?" Just sample FOX'S XXXX Square Wafer Butter Crackers and you'll get the answer through the sense of taste If all the food experts and "crack" bakers in the world should combine their efforts they could'nt produce a more delightful and wholesome cracker.

Baked argument. When you buy crackers don't take the dealer's word for too much—taste them and let their flavor argue their merits. When you do this there isn't a doubt but that you will select FOX'S XXXX SQUARE WAFER BUTTER CRACKERS.

W. P. Myers, a former principal of the Auburn High School has been in town a couple of days visiting the family of his son, Frank E. Myers, He is accompanied by his wife, who is making her first visit to the friends here. They were married at her home in Kendallville but a short time ago, her maiden name being Miss Etta Gray. She was formerly a teacher in Chicago, but for severel years her home has been in Kendallville. As old friends of W. P., we congratulate both and wish for them all the good fortune that we feel both richly deserve.

A good reccommendation for Simmons Liver Regulator is, that it is purely vegetable and strongly tonic. Then too, it is better than Pills because easier to take in liquid or powder and with no griping, while the relief from Constipation, biliousness, sick headache and dyspepsia is quick and sure. Saturday we dropped in on Pilgrim and Cutter, at the old J. W. Shaffer wagon and Carriage shop and were somewhat surprised to find a newly finished buggy of their own make just ready for use. It was made for H. C. Shull, now in control of the plant and is a find one. It is all of selected material such as second growth hickory in the wood work, and great pains have been taken in the finishing and all the details. They are also making two or three more on orders and may give more attention hereafter to making fine buggies for the home retail trade. We see no reason why they should not succeed in building up a good business. Mr. Shull is well known, and his reputation for integrity is second to none. The two workmen, Mr. Pilgrim and Mr. Cutter, are skilled mechanics and whatever work they do will be first-class.

A Louisville man has applied for divorce on the ground of fraud. He says his wife, when he married her, was over 40, but he thought she was only 15 years old. We don't know about his wife's age, but he himself evidently married before reaching the age of discretion.

It is not true that Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt's fiance, the Duke of Marlborough, was ejected from the stage of a Louisville variety theater for being too free-and-easy with the girls in tights. He left of his own accord after being insulted by the manager, who told him to get out.

More riots against Christian missionaries in China are reported, yet missionaries continue to invade that barbarous country to make the hopeless attempt to do some good there. The day surely cannot be distant when the churches will learn that energy is worse than useless unless it be wisely directed. As long as only one-third of the population of the United States is Christianized the missionaries have a large enough field for work at home.

The recent initial performance of the new ocean steamer St. Paul off the coast of Gloucester, Mass., from Cape Ann to Cape Porpoise and return, a distance of about eighty-eight miles, was another success for American vessel builders. The outward speed was 19.68 knots and the return 21.58 knots, an average of 20.57 knots, an even half a knot in excess of the government's condition of acceptance as an auxiliary cruiser in time of war. Though not quite up to the record of her sister ship, the St. Louis, it is believed she will yet equal her when she is in complete running order. Together with the Paris and New York, which were admitted to American registry on condition of the construction of two American vessels of the same class and tonnage, there is now a quartet of ocean flyers of which any nation might be proud.

Henry Lyons was born in Chicago in 1868. His father was a drunkard, his mother a poverty-stricken workingwoman. At the age of 9 he was sent to the bridewell. He served terms repeatedly for minor offenses between 1877 and 1885, when he was committed to the house of correction for the serious crime of robbery. In 1888 he was arrested for assault. In 1889 he was sent to the bridewell for burglary. In 1894 he was arrested for burglary. Within six months he was again arrested for a criminal assault. When he mauled a companion to death he had served one term in the penitentiary and twenty-one in the bridewell. He had been arrested over 200 times! The judge who sentenced him to death could find nothing in his career that appealed for mercy. The State's attorney who prosecuted him declared he was a criminal from birth. The question is whether Henry Lyons, alcoholic by birth, encouraged to crime by environment, a wolf-child among men, could have closed his career elsewhere than on the gallows. Did he have a fair chance?

At the beginning of the month of August Patsey Casey, son of John Casey, of Bridgeport, Conn., was exactly five feet high and weighed 120 pounds. There came an unusually hot spell and Patsey began to grow. In a few weeks his father was compelled to buy a larger bedstead for him. It was followed shortly afterwards by another and still larger one. The boy outgrew his clothes as fast as they could be made for him. His shoe bill assumed enormous proportions, and a hat lasted him only ten days. His father became alarmed and called in the doctors. They were much interested in the case, and pronounced it absolutely unique, but could do nothing for him; and Patsey is still growing. His present stature is 6 feet 2 inches, and he weighs 168 pounds. That is to say, he has gained fourteen inches in height and forty-eight pounds in weight, and the end is not yet. In some particulars this is the most marvelous tale of the year thus far.

When within a year of the age at which the generals of our regular army are put upon the retired list, Count von Waldersee has been promoted to the rank of field marshal of the German army, and the kaiser's promotion of him for his skill in the recent military maneuvers at Stettin is taken to mean that he will be the commander of the imperial armies in case Germany shall become involved in war. We retire our generals when they reach that time of life at which they are regarded in Germany, and also in other European countries, as the best fitted for military command. Lieut. Gen. Schofield must go because he is 64 years old, or one year older than the newly created field marshal, Von Waldersee, of Germany. The master strategist, Von Moltke, was over seventy while he commanded the conquering German army in the last war with France. There is a stunning lot of generals on the retired list of the regular army of the United States. It is absurd to retire a general, or any other man, at a time of life when he may be at his best.

When Plantation Bitters Drake, away back in early war times, bespread in letters of yellow and black, over all the board fences of the United States, the cabalistic inscription, "S. T. 1860 X.," he set the fashion for landscape-desecration in the interest of advertising. A new method of damaging beautiful scenery for the sake of calling attention to patent medicines or other advertised wares has been put into practical use in Switzerland, where large white and yellow letters, placed on the bottom of the lake of Geneva are made visible on the surface by refraction. What agony would the aesthetic soul of Jean Jacques Rousseau have endured could he have looked forward a hundred years! Some of these days enlightened public sentiment will so strongly condemn the adoption of barbarous advertising methods that those who employ them will injure instead of aiding the business for which they are invoked. To some extent vandalism provokes resentment that tends to prevent withholding patronage at the present day. The most businesslike and reliable advertising is that which addresses the public through the columns of the newspaper press.

Much to the relief of the French ministry, which authorized the movement, the troops of France have captured Antananarivo, and now hold sway over Madagascar. There is no doubt that for some time the outlook for the French on the island has been extremely dubious, so much so that the French ministers have been anxiously endeavoring to disclaim as much as possible the responsibility for the expedition. The fever and the climate of the coast had been threatening the lives of the French soldiers for some time when the generals in command decided upon the risky experiment of a flying column detached from the regular lines of communication with the purpose of taking the capital by assault. The dash has succeeded, although it does not seem possible that had the Hovas attempted any really adequate resistance it would have done so. A column like that sent overland by the French is exposed to manifold dangers, and its complete isolation in the country of an enemy makes it only too easy a matter for the hostile forces to lay waste the country and defeat the invaders by starvation if by no other means. The Hovas, however, missed their opportunity, and Madagascar is under French control in fulfillment of the plans held by the French government ever since Great Britain agreed to recognize that France had a zone of influence on the island. It is not likely that any one will try to ascribe the invasion to any other cause than a desire for spoliation and conquest. France in Madagascar was led by the same impulses that actuated it in Siam. It is after territorial aggrandizement, and the success of its efforts is a startling proof of the fact that we are not yet past the day when civilized nations consider that they have a moral right to appropriate whatever loose territory weaker powers are unable to maintain against them. No doubt England views the present conquest with disfavor, but she is the last of nations to assume the right to protest. Possibly her complacency during this maneuver is due to a desire for a return of favors whenever a similar performance may be undertaken in her own interest. It is easy for one of the powers of Europe to overlook affairs of the kind if there is room to believe that its own peccadillos in the same direction will be allowed to pass unheeded.

A PUZZLED FOREIGNER.

He Could Not Be Reconciled to Our Ideas of Precedence.

In spite of its professed culture and cosmopolitan opportunities society in New York, we are told, still impresses a foreigner as distinctly commercial and more or less haphazard in its arrangements. Precedence, for example, which in the old world regulates social ethics or accords to men of distinction their proper place in the fashionable ranks, is totally ignored. In Washington, where official life reigns supreme, etiquette receives due consideration, and diplomatists, to whom such matters are all-important, take their proper places; but in New York, it is no uncommon thing to see an accredited representative of a king or emperor sitting between two young debutantes, while a man of no official rank takes in the hostess.

"Are those gentlemen on either side of Mrs. H. of great distinction?" inquired the newly arrived minister from —— of his next neighbor at a large dinner at a well-known house in Newport. The latter, a witty woman of the world, at once appreciated the situation, and the bewilderment of the Comte de ——, who found himself placed between two charming young women instead of occupying the place of honor next his hostess, was his right.

"No, but they are very rich," replied, gravely.

"Then there is no precedence country—only a money basis? But this is so very fluctuating; how do you manage that?"

"Oh, that is our puzzle," answered the lady. "It is, as you say, very difficult."

"Perhaps it might even be necessary to change at table," continued the offended dignitary, dryly, "and Mr. A., who at soup might be so far removed from the lady of the house as I am, for instance, might find himself at dessert at her elbow."

"Or there might be a stock ticker on the mantel," suggested Miss X., enjoying the irritated amour propre of the little man, "and as values went up or over, people might change places like the children in the game of 'stage coach.'"

"It is certainly all very odd to nous outres," murmured the diplomat, "but since these curious customs place me near you, madamoiselle, I have nothing to regret."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

TEMPERANCE WOMEN.

TWENTY-SECOND SESSION OF THE W. C. T. U. CLOSED.

Prominent Workers in the Temperance Cause from All Parts of the United States Meet—All Creeds Made Welcome.

Miss Willard Re-elected.

Miss Frances Willard was again elected president of the W. C. T. U. at the twenty-second annual convention held in Baltimore. There was practically no opposition, although complimentary votes were cast for several other prominent workers. Other officers were elected as follows: Vice President-at-large, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens; Treasurer, Mrs. Helen M. Barker; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. Katharine Lent Stevenson, of Massachusetts; Recording Secretary, Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, of Kansas City, Mo.; Assistant Recording Secretary, Mrs. Frances J. Beauchamp, of Kentucky.

The day's proceedings were opened with devotional exercises conducted by Miss Elizabeth Greenwood. The venerable Mother Thompson, the original temperance crusader, offered a prayer. The report of the Committee on Credentials showed that forty-three States were represented and that 425 persons were present and entitled to vote.

The Committee on Resolutions made its report and the convention took it up for consideration in sections. It declares for total abstinence, favors devotional services, deplores the practice of deriving Governmental revenue from the liquor traffic, declares against the legalized saloon and in favor of union on "the Staten Island basis" to battle with intemperance, reaffirms allegiance to the prohibition party, commends the action of the Atlanta commissioners in closing the exposition on Sunday, declares for unfermented wine at the sacrament, favors scientific temperance instruction in the public schools and affirms that the W. C. T. U. has never received any money for the "endorsement of any school physiology;" condemns bird shooting tournaments, the use of narcotics, and lynching, favors female suffrage and deprecates "the use of weapons in school drills as fostering a military spirit."

Miss Willard favored a resolution admitting Catholic and Hebrew women to active co-operation in W. C. T. U. work. One of the delegates suggested it might not be quite consistent for the "Women's Christian Temperance Union" to ask Hebrews to affiliate. She laid special emphasis on the word "Christian." Miss Willard with a good deal of feeling said: "They have extended the hand of sympathy to our organization and our cause. We should invite them to co-operate. I want to welcome them to us if they want to come." Finally the convention enthusiastically adopted the resolution, and Miss Willard said she thanked God for this act of the convention, and that she considered it an honor and a pleasure to extend the hand of fellowship to Catholic and Hebrew women.

The convention indorsed its Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, conducted by women in Chicago. It indorsed the temperance hospitals which do not administer brandy and other intoxicants in medicine. It rejoiced in the usefulness of the various young people's societies of the churches. It commended the organization of a W. C. T. U. lecture bureau and expressed appreciation of the Demorest temperance medal contests. It asked for a place for women on the divorce commissions of the various States.

Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, of Chicago, presented the "Temple report," showing the progress of raising $300,000 necessary to [illegible] of debt. Active preparations are in progress in Chicago to care for one or more of the national political conventions in case that city is selected. A large force is at work on the big structure to be known as the Coliseum, located at the corner of 63d street and Stony Island avenue, the main entrance of the old World's Fair grounds. The immense building will be completed and opened in May next with an international cycle tournament on a quarter-mile track, to be followed in June with a horse show to take the place of the Washington Park derby. Several prominent Chicagoans will visit the New York horse show and will there make such preliminary arrangements as will result in giving to Chicago, in June next, a horse show at the Coliseum that it is expected will be as satisfactory and as profitable to Chicago as the Madison Square Garden hore show is to New York.

With the new Union Elevated Railway loop in operation next spring, the Coliseum will be easily accessible from the down-town hotels, as well as from the north and west sides of the city, and with an adjustable amphitheater capable of seating from 5,000 to 50,000 people, the Coliseum it is claimed can take care of the national conventions if held in Chicago, in a manner that will be satisfactory to the representatives from every State in the Union.

KNOCKS OUT THE FIGHTERS.

Arkansas Supreme Court Reverses the Leatherman Decision.

The Arkansas Supreme Court rendered a decision in the Corbett case, by which Judge Leatherman's decision was reversed and the prize fight law sustained. Corbett was remanded back to the custody of the Sheriff of Garland County. Chief Justice Bunn, in delivering the opinion, severely criticised Chancellor Leatherman, saying he had no authority for his action in the habeas corpus case. Judge Leatherman, when asked what he thought of the decision, said: "I care nothing about the prize fight. I think Gov. Clarke has put himself in a ridiculous attitude in view of the unconstitutional positions he has taken. He is perfectly correct in what the Chancellor would decide because he himself knows that the law was unconstitutionally passed. He had no right to any other opinion. He was incorrect, however, when he said he thought no other judge in the State would render such an opinion, for, in order to declare the law unconstitutionally passed, it would be necessary to nullify or invalidate an article of the Constitution. I challenge the criticism of all reputable lawyers and courts. I do this in view of the expressions of the Governor on the subject."

CORBETT AND DEPUTY SHERIFF BABCOCK

Martin Julian, manager for Fitzsimmons, was seen immediately after the news of the Supreme Court's adverse decision reached Little Rock. He said: "Now that we are barred out of Arkansas by the decision of the Supreme Court, Fitzsimmons is prepared to accept the offer of Corbett's manager, made in Dallas, that we fight in private. We will go anywhere on earth in order to get a fight out of Corbett. Any place will suit us. We will go to London and fight Corbett for the £3,000 purse offered by the Mirror of Life. Corbett has repeatedly stated that he would fight Fitzsimmons in a room, in a balloon or in a barrel, and we are perfectly willing to meet him under any of these conditions."

DECREASE IN THE RECEIPTS.

Internal Revenue Collection for Three Months Show a Falling Off.

The statement prepared at the Internal Revenue Bureau of the collections of internal revenue during the first three months of the present fiscal year shows the total collections to have been $37,744,478, as against $58,054,108 for the same period last year. The amounts from the several sources of revenue are given as follows: Spirits, $18,852,028, decrease from the same period last year $21,302,364; tobacco, $8,075,545, increase $460,600; fermented liquors, $10,398,100, increase $792,630; oleomargarine, $338,334, decrease $137,504; miscellaneous, $89,470, decrease $113,992.

During the month of September last the receipts are given as follows: Spirits, $6,109,499, increase $5,061,292; tobacco, $2,676,066, increase $85,665; fermented liquors, $3,088,522, increase $329,422; oleomargarine, $97,932, decrease $59,634; miscellaneous, $29,945, decrease $134,493. Total receipts for September $12,001,956, which is a gain over September, 1894, of $5,882,251. So far during the month of October the receipts from internal revenue amount to $9,668,260, which is a slight gain over last month.

AGREED ON THEIR POLICY.

Cleveland and Olney United in Consideration of Venezuelan Matter.

A Washington dispatch says: President Cleveland and Secretary Olney are agreed on the Venezuelan policy. The published intimation that Secretary Olney intends to resign because he has not been supported by the President in his foreign policy is wholly discredited here, and persons close to the Secretary insist that the relations between him and the President are of the most cordial and intimate nature, and have been such since Mr. Olney assumed the administration of the State Department. His visit to Boston is said to have been required by presing private business, and he was enabled to plead an excuse for his absence from the Atlanta party on the ground that he would be expected to accompany a number of diplomats from Washington to Atlanta later on to be present there on diplomatic day.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

INDIANAPOLIS DEMOCRATIC.

Reed—
Say, Ben, how's this? By gum, if you
Have things in such a fix
In your own town what pull have you
To show in '96?
Great Caesar, Ben, if my home town
Should do as yours has done,
I'd go and saw my legs off short
Before I'd try to run.

Morton—
Dear Benjamin, I'm pained to see
Your town in such a plight.
If this is all that you can do
I'll beat you out of sight.
I played the second fiddle once,
Don't you remember, Ben?
Well, once was quite enough, dear boy;
I'll not do so again.

McKinley—
4,000 Democratic! Gosh,
What strange things happen when
We have no gun! Say, do you think
There's any chance for Ben?
Take my advice and stay at home,
And Benjie, buckle down
To local politics until You've straightened out your town.

Allison—
Dear me! Dear me! Dear Benjamin,
What news is this I hear?
Have you permitted Democrats
To catch you in the rear?
And right at home! Well, I declare!
But, since the job is done,
When will you write a letter to Announce that you won't run?

NOT FOR PUBLICATION.

A Surplus for September.

The prediction of the Democrats that the Wilson tariff would yield sufficient revenue for all public exchanges as soon as the business of the country had fairly recovered from the McKinley panic, is already being fulfilled. The receipts for the month of September show a surplus of $3,000,000 over the expenditures for the same period, a condition of the treasury which will please everyone except a few chronic croakers and high tariff newspaper hacks. From this time onward it is certain that there will be abundant revenues, if not a further surplus.

The most gratifying feature of this improvement in public finances is its convincing answer to the clamor of the protectionist press for a return to McKinleyism, on the ground that more revenue was needed. Forgetting that the tariff of 1890 was primarily intended to shut out foreign goods, and thereby decrease the receipts from customs duties, the high tariff organs are joining in an agitation for its restoration. This evident injury to all business interests, through the threat to unsettle trade by tariff changing in the wrong direction, has been justified by the Republicans with the claim that the Wilson tariff was yielding a deficit. Of course they failed to show how carrying out the protection policy of prohibiting commerce, in order that we might make all our goods at home, would increase the customs revenues, but Republicans are never expected to be consistent. Now that the temporary deficit has given way to a monthly surplus of $3,000,000 there will not be left to the high tariff agitators even one excuse for threatening to restore McKinleyism. In increased revenues, as well as in higher wages and better markets for goods, returning prosperity has destroyed the last hopes of the party for protection, panics and pessimism.

McKinley's Exploded Idea.

Gov. McKinley's opening speech was intended to show, among other things, that wages were higher under his tariff than under any other. It is not true; but what if it were? We can show McKinley that wages under his tariff were 50 per cent higher in some States of the Union than in others. If the tariff regulated wages, why were they not equally high all through the country? Furthermore, it can easily be shown that wages were higher in the non-protected than in the protected industries.

While Gov. McKinley is about it will he tell why his party in Congress voted down, under his lead, a proposition providing that no increase of duties should take effect unless accompanied with a corresponding increase in wages? Will he explain how it was that though he increased the duties in every schedule save two—an average of over 10 per cent in bounties to manufacturers—there was hardly a single instance of an increase of wages under his tariff?

Gov. McKinley can be counted on to fight shy of all these facts and inquiries. But there is one fact that will outweigh all of his twisted figures and limping logic. This fact is that the wages of 1,000,000 workingmen have been increased under a Democratic tariff that cannot be disturbed for two years to come. Juggle with figures as he may, this fact puts him down.—N. Y. World.

Free Wool and Free Hides.

There is not a tanner in the United States, says the Philadelphia Record, who can give a valid reason why the hide of an ox should not be subject to a duty as well as the wool of a sheep. But many tanners favor protection, including the wool duties, in the belief that there is no danger of a restoration of the duty on hides. Should the threatened tariff reaction succeed, they may wake up some fine morning and find themselves vastly mistaken. They made a very narrow escape when, under pressure of the beef syndicate in Chicago, the framers of the McKinley act favorably considered a duty on hides. It is hardly necessary to urge that a duty on hides, in arresting the profitable export trade in leather, would be a heavy blow to the tanning interests of the United States. If the protectionists ever get another opportunity to revise the tariff in the direction of McKinleyism they will not be guilty of the inconsistency of taxing wool and leaving hides and goat skins on the free list. A word to the wise should be sufficient.

The Crime of a Vermont Minister.

The Springfield Republican says: "The Second Congressional Church at Hartford, Vt., advertised a year ago for a pastor who was young, married and a Republican. Rev. Herbert W. Boyd applied for the place and was accepted. It was learned afterward, however, in some unknown way, that the young man had so far departed from the path of Republican righteousness in 1892 as to vote for Grover Cleveland. He had not taken this brief aberration in his politics into the pulpit. He had not advertised it publicly. But there was something about the man, his appearance, or his way of putting things, or his walk, or general demeanor—which aroused the suspicions of his parishioners, so keen to scent political heresy, and, on investigation, the awful truth came out. There was trouble at once, of course, and, with a powerful faction in the church refusing to contribute anything for the pastor's salary, others quitting the fold and others barely tolerating him, the young minister is in a precarious position.

"One of the principal supports of the church is Ephraim Morris, a woolen manufacturer, who is said to contribute one-third of the annual expenses of public worship there. He expresses himself as follows:

"'I mistrusted from Mr. Boyd's application that he was not a Republican and cautioned the committee against hiring him, saying that I would not contribute toward the support of a Democrat, but they were all wise and had their way. I gave them fair warning and they must take the consequences. I went to Mr. Boyd and he acknowledged that he voted for Mr. Cleveland. I am a woolen manufacturer. Democracy is detrimental to my business, and I wouldn't hear the gospel preached by a Democrat any more than I would cut off my right hand. If they secure a Republican they can have my support; otherwise they'll go without it.' And so if the church cannot square itself with the interests of this woolen mill it must put up with the meager contributions of the gentile poor. That means that Rev. Mr. Boyd will have to go."

Facts for Doubting Thomases.

The doubting Thomases as to prosperous times have need to look at the facts. With a corn crop worth $1,111,000,000 and other crops in proportion the country couldn't be otherwise than prosperous if it would. Our exports of agricultural products alone will bring more than two billion dollars of wealth to us this next year. All our factories are running on full time. Wages are being voluntarily increased on every hand. Our iron mills are unable to supply the demands made upon them, and their rejected orders are going to Europe, where they will pay wages that must come back to us in payment for bread and meat. Prosperity is the normal and usual condition of the great republic. Depression and hard times are accidental and infrequent incidents.

The Great Issues in Iowa.

There is no issue before the voters of Iowa except those affecting the policy and interests of the State. No question of national policy, of the tariff, or of the currency, or of coinage is before them for their decision. All these issues belong to next year. The issues of this year relate to the people of Iowa, not to national interests. General Drake, the Republican candidate for Governor of Iowa, has evaded and dodged the only issues before the people. He has refused to answer the plainest questions. He has shirked everything of interest to the taxpayers whose votes he solicits. His campaign is one of silence or equivocation. It is a fraud on the voters.—Chicago Chronicle.

His Adjustable Opinions.

Gov. McKinley had a little experience in hastily defining his opinion on some public questions last winter. It subjected him to so much criticism that he has probably concluded to wait until he has ascertained the sentiment of the people regarding the Cuban question, and then form his opinion in accordance therewith. It is so much easier to adjust one's opinions to public sentiment than it is to adjust public sentiment to one's opinion. An adjustable set of opinions is an excellent thing to keep in stock.—Topeka State Journal.

Going Democratic.

Indianapolis at its city election went Democratic by 5,000 majority, a gain of 8,100 votes, as the Republicans two years ago carried it by 3,100 votes. Ex-President Harrison and the Republican State Committee used all their power to save the "Hoosier" capital, but it was swept by the Democracy. This great victory shows a change of sentiment on the public issues and indicates a Democratic triumph in Ohio. The same conditions exist in Ohio as in Indiana. The people are aroused and the country is going Democratic.

From Bad to Worse.

If this infernal Wilson tariff doesn't stop its blasting operations there is no telling where the country will stop. The anti-McKinley frenzy of building cotton mills at the South still continues. It is a Wilson tariff conspiracy. The Manufacturers' Record, of Baltimore, reports the aggregate investment in cotton mills at the South so far this year at $13,000,000. The addition to the spindles in cotton manufacturing so far this year has been 800,000.—Pittsburg Post.

Another Stab at McKinley.

The annual report of one of the principal southwestern roads, which has just been published, shows an increase of 67.25 per cent. in net earnings. Some of the Western roads are not doing as well as that, but the general improvement is so marked that it ought to convince McKinley of the utter uselessness of continuing to allow his heart to bleed for his country.

Rubinstein was undoubtedly inaccurate at times. People who held scores through those long programs could find that out. He not only embroidered even Beethoven, but he would invent Bach. What he invented was probably quite as good as what he happened to forget, and always extremely interesting. Still it was not note for note, and that is what the dullards gloated over. Bulow was more accurate, but even Bulow forgot or manufactured a bar or two occasionally. But these, if spots, were spots in the sun, and certainly all Rubinstein did or left undone serve but to accentuate his individuality and display his genius in new and startling lights.

LITTLE FALLS, MINN., May 11, 1894.

I am suffering, and need your aid. I have terrible pains in both sides of my womb, extending down the front of my limbs and lower part of my back, attended by backache and pains in the back of the neck and ears.

The doctors have given me opiates to quiet the pain. I have a very high fever nearly all the time. I am nervous, and cannot stand. My doctor says I must keep in bed. Now I place myself under your care. I am only twenty-one years old, and too young to suffer so much." — MRS. CHAS. PARKER.

The above letter was received by Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., May 15, 1894, which received a prompt reply.

The following letter reached Mrs. Pinkham about five months later. Note the result.

LITTLE FALLS, MINN., Sept. 21, 1894.

"I deem it my duty to announce the fact to my fellow-sufferers of all female complaints, that *Lydia E. ELGIN BUTTER TRADE

AN ILLINOIS TOWN FIXES PRICES FOR THE WORLD.

Millions of Pounds of Butter Sold Annually—The Elgin Board of Trade and Its Methods—Dairies and Creameries of the District.

A Great Industry.

From the beginning of the dairy industry in 1852 until the present time its growth in the Elgin, Ill., district has been wonderful and never before equaled in the history of agriculture. The Elgin Board of Trade rules the butter market of the world. Included in this district and paying tribute to the Elgin board is the fertile region of Northern Illinois, down to the center row of counties, and the lower tier of counties in Wisconsin. The country is well adapted to the dairy industry, that along the Fox river forming a paradise of fertile valleys, woodcapped hills and rolling acres. Immense herds of the finest bred cattle, the Holsteins predominating, crop the grass and make for Elgin a more than national reputation for its dairy products. Every crossroads in the district has its creamery. Every farmer devotes his entire attention to milk, which is made into butter or cheese, or condensed and shipped to all parts of the world. Fields of wheat or barley or rye are curiosities in this part of the country. Nothing is raised but that which will be relished by the cows and will produce milk. The dairy business is sure pay. Many of the best dairy farms are owned by men who live in the cities and receive good incomes from their acres.

JOHN NEWMAN.

INTERIOR ELGIN BOARD OF TRADE.

The Elgin Dairy Board of Trade, the largest of the kind in the world, consists of 292 members, representing at present 335 creameries. Meetings are held every Monday afternoon during the year. Buyers and sellers meet to make the transactions which determine the prices for the week following the meeting. The butter and cheese makers who have these commodities for sale place them before the buyers through the secretary, who writes the amount offered, the price demanded and the price offered by the first bidder on a blackboard. At 2:30 in the afternoon the list is called off by the secretary and the excitement begins. The sellers, of course, try to keep the price as high as possible, and the buyers endeavor to purchase at the lowest figures. The best-known brands, which have a reputation for excellence, are sold, without trouble, and, in fact, nearly all the butter offered on the board is readily sold at the prevailing market price. The quotations for Elgin butter always average high, on account of its well-established reputation, and because the dairymen are unable to supply the large demand. New factories are being built every year, improved machinery facilitates production, but the price of Elgin butter has not varied much in corresponding months for several years. The total cash transactions during the twenty-three years the board has been in existence aggregate the large sum of $72,147,741.85. The average price for butter during that time has been 28 3-5c, and the average price of cheese 8.23c. The total production of butter in the twenty-three years was 245,945,391 pounds, and of cheese 136,100,475 pounds, making a total of 382,045,865 pounds of dairy products for the one district. Last year the cash transactions amounted to $7,580,147.04. That vast sum of money was paid for 32,550,290 pounds of butter and 5,735,029 pounds of cheese. It is a noticeable fact that while the output of butter last year was 1,500,000 pounds in excess of the product the year previous, the amount of cheese was 500,000 pounds less. These statistics show the importance of the Elgin board and the reason of its great influence. The actual sales on the call board each Monday afternoon do not form any considerable part of the transactions. Sales are consummated before the board meets, the price to be determined by the sales on the open board, and many more are made after the session at the ruling market price. Many of the largest butter and cheese makers contract with the dealers at New York, New Orleans, Philadelphia, Chicago and St. Louis for so many pounds each week during the year, the price to be determined by the market price on the Elgin board.

L. S. TAYLOR.

A MODEL CREAMERY IN ELGIN DISTRICT.

Dairies and Creameries.

Within a radius of fifty miles from Elgin it is estimated that not less than $50,000,000 is invested in the dairy industry. Besides the creameries, there are five large condensing factories, condensing on the average 150,000 quarts of milk a day. Even this does not exhaust the supply, and the Elgin district supplies Chicago with all its best milk. During the hard times the members of the Elgin Board of Trade were probably less affected than any other class of men. Prices fell off a trifle, but whether factories run or rust the dairy cow continues to give milk. The farmers are required to keep their cattle as clean and in as good condition as possible, so that the dairy farms are models of neatness. The cows are curried each day, their stalls kept thoroughly clean and everything spotless as a Dutch kitchen. In winter the feed is of the best. Hay and corn, or a combination of feed known as ensilage, are given the milk makers in abundance. Very frequently in summer, when the supply of grass is seriously affected by lack of rains, the cows are grain fed, the same as in winter.

As a special industry, dairying was instituted in the Elgin district by Phineas Smith in 1852. The Galena and the Fox River Valley roads had been completed from Chicago to Elgin, and Mr. Smith conceived the idea of supplying some of the leading Chicago hotels with fresh country milk. Acting on this idea he made a contract with the proprietor of the old Adams House to supply him, the first can being shipped Feb. 12, 1852. This can is still in existence, though long ago relieved from active service, and now a valued souvenir in the possession of the Elgin Board of Trade. Very soon the demand for the country milk far exceeded the supply. The price paid was 12c a gallon, which was considered a very good price when the same milk made into the butter of those days would only command 12c a pound in the best markets. Chicago was a small city when Elgin commenced feeding her on milk, and so the supply soon grew to be greater than the demand. Along in the 60's the men interested in the dairy industry decided that the threatened overproduction of milk must be stopped by opening up new channels for the product. They began by making cheese. Even with this and the condensing company, which commenced operations in '60, the large production of milk was not easily disposed of. So the attention was called to the possibilities of butter making as a fine art. An early dairyman says: "About this time our real struggles in the dairy world commenced. Our home market was supplied, and a different article must be furnished for the export trade. The men who had come from the large dairy districts of the East soon discovered that the water, grasses and climate of Northern Illinois imparted a different quality to the milk from that to be found elsewhere. With a sturdy determination they proceeded to work out a process, adapted to the requirements and peculiarities of the Elgin milk and market. The struggle for recognition was a long one, but eminently successful."

So great was the demand for the butter and cheese that the Elgin Board of Trade was organized. The first meeting was held in 1872. Dr. Joseph Tefft was chosen president and R. R. Stone secretary. Dr. Tefft held the office for many years and was succeeded by Hon. D. F. Barclay, who held the place until last year, when John Newman was selected as his successor. When the board was organized the manufacturers sold their product to commission merchants and they to the dealers. While this is done to some extent yet, it is growing more and more the custom to sell directly to the dealer. One of the causes of the elimination of the commission man was the action of the Chicago Produce Exchange about a year ago, which endeavored to crush the Elgin board and transfer its influence to Chicago. The attempt was a complete failure, and the city produce men have been the only ones to suffer. The Elgin board has greatly increased its influence in the past year, and is now undoubtedly the ruling factor in the butter markets of the world. New York dealers refuse to quote prices until they have heard from their Elgin correspondents. Elgin has become the great center for improved machinery and advanced scientific methods in handling milk.

John Newman, president of the Elgin Board of Trade, and the largest factory owner on the list of members, is commonly known as "The Butter King." The company, of which he is the largest owner, operates twenty-five large creameries, which will produce an average of nearly 50,000 pounds of butter a week the entire year. His business exceeds half a million dollars annually. Mr. Newman was elected president of the Board of Trade last January. He is an Englishman by birth, and has been one of Elgin's most successful business men for many years. The other officers are as follows: R. F. Redell, vice-president; W. W. Sherwin, treasurer; L. S. Taylor, secretary. Board of Directors—John Newman, G. H. Gurler, R. F. Redell, W. W. Sherwin and George Reed.

Even a poor, tired old girl whose laugh sounds like a wail, likes to be told that she has mischievous eyes.

Use Too Much Seed.

Glenn Gun, an Oshtemo, Mich., farmer, had always argued that farmers used too much seed wheat per acre, and concluded to try a little experiment this season. He carefully weighed out an ounce of wheat and the same amount of rye, sowing the grain with a drill, one kernel in a place, and six inches apart. His neighbors ridiculed the idea of planting grain in such a manner, but Gun has thrashed his miniature crop and found his wheat yield to be eighty-six ounces, while the rye turned out six ounces more. The skeptical neighbors were convinced and the present methods of wheat culture are likely to undergo a change in that immediate region.

Styles of Winter of '95.

Rough clothes—crepons in new "wrinkles" will be worn this winter, despite the fact that Americans prefer smooth surfaces. So the wise woman will buy gowns for her daughters and herself, from the "bargain counters," where such materials may be had for half price at present. And it will be an excellent time to select from the pretty silks offered at such low prices now, vest fronts, materials for sleeve puffs and the large collars, which go such a long ways to make a last year's well-worn gown appear stylish and new. And for the home dressmaker. —Womankind.

HIS SAD LOT.

An Aged Knightsville Miner's Story.

From the Democrat, Brazil, Ind.

Mr. Alexander McCallum, of Knightsville, Indiana, was a sufferer for many years with rheumatism. A reporter of the Brazil Democrat visited him at his home in Knightsville and was told by him the following story:

"So you want to know how bad I was and what cured me. For a number of years past I have been a terrible sufferer from that excruciatingly painful affliction, chronic rheumatism. For years I have suffered more or less with this painful malady, sometimes I would be so afflicted that I could get no relief day or night, nothing gave me relief. I could not get around without a cane for years, and often if I dropped it I could not stoop to pick it up. I was a sufferer, more or less, almost all the time, and sometimes I would get a little better and would try to work. I remember one time I was taken very bad with rheumatic pains while at work, and it took me more than two hours to walk home, a distance of less than a mile.

"During all these years I had spent nearly all my wages in paying doctor's bills and buying medicine, but kept gradually growing worse, until I could not walk without the aid of my cane, and one of my legs had begun to become paralyzed and to shrink away. Mr. Mack Rogers, of Brazil, sent me an article of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and told me to read it. I did so and was induced to try the remedy. I bought a box and began taking the pills, however, with but little faith in them, as everything else had failed to give me relief. I had not taken the first box until to my astonishment and great joy the pains were less severe, and farther apart, by the time the contents of the first box was gone, I was greatly relieved, and I purchased the second box. My condition continued to improve and I kept buying pills until I am at last free of pain, eat well, sleep well, and can do a day's work once more, have thrown away my cane, and can get around spry and quick, have outgrown my clothes and have gained more than twenty pounds in flesh since I began taking the pills. They are the greatest pills on earth to-day. I have great faith in them, and can conscientiously recommend them to anybody. I am almost a new man again, thanks to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

The reporter further confirmed this story by asking McCallum if he would verify this statement, before the proper officer, and he subscribed to the following affidavit:

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 11th day of July, 1895.

HOWARD ECKELS,
Justice of the Peace.

That there is virtue in these pills is evident from the fact that Geo. H. Came, the Knightsville druggist, states to the reporter that he sells more of these pills than of any pills in his store, and that he sold them to Mr. McCallum, and he knows that they will do the work they are claimed to do.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

About Breathing.

In the ordinary respiration of man 16 to 17 cubic inches of atmospheric air passes into the lungs 20 times a minute, or a cubic foot every 5½ minutes—274 cubic feet in 24 hours. The lungs hold 2.80 cubic feet. At each respiration 1.375 of oxygen is converted into a carbonic acid gas. The nitrogen inspired and expired is exactly equal. During the act of inspiration the lungs have been found to be the coldest part of the body.

A Big Regular Army.

The mightiest host of this sort is the army of invalids whose bowels, livers, and stomachs have been regulated by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. A regular habit of body is brought about through using the Bitters, not by violently agitating and griping the intestines, but by re-enforcing their energy and causing a flow of the bile into its proper channel. Malaria, la grippe, dyspepsia, and a tendency to inactivity of the kidneys, are conquered by the Bitters.

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

The Oldest Bank-Note.

This is the "flying money," or "convenient money"—first issued in China, 2697 B. C. The early Chinese notes were in all essentials similar to the modern bank notes, bearing the name of the bank, the date of the issue, the number of the note, the signature of the official issuing it, indications of its value in figures, in words, and in pictorial representations of coins of heaps of coin equal in amount to its full value, and a notice of the pains and penalties for counterfeiting. Over and above all was a laconic exhortation to industry and thrift: "Produce all you can; spend with economy." The notes were printed in blue ink on paper made from the fibre of the mulberry tree.

Beyond Belief.

RIPANS TABULES

Mr. W. C. Lewis, who is connected with the artistic advertising department of the Youth's Companion, and resides at 33 Dwight street, Boston, relates that he had his attention called to Ripans Tabules by a business acquaintance who expressed a high opinion of them. Mr. Lewis was a good deal troubled with what he describes as a nervous, bilious condition that appeared to be brought on from time to time by high pressure work or special mental activity or excitement, such as would be common at periods of unusual nervous tension. It has become his practice at such times to take a Tabule—just one—at the moment that he observes the difficulty approaching. It makes no difference when it is. A favorable result is invariably apparent within twenty minutes. The only noticeable effect is that he feels all right in twenty minutes if he takes the Tabule; while if he does not the nervous, uncomfortable feeling intensifies and leads to a bad afternoon and tired evening. He carries one of the little vials with him all the time now, but doesn't have occasion to apply to it anything like as often as he did at first. Nowadays there are frequent periods of from a week to ten days or even two weeks during which he finds that he has no occasion whatever to make use of the Tabules, but still carries them in his pocket, just the same, so that they may be ready if an occasion occurs.

Ripans Tabules are sold by druggists, or by mail if the price (50 cents a box) is sent to The Ripans Chemical Company, No. 10 Spruce Street, New York. Sample vial, 10 cents.

Court.

A good deal of business has been done. Elmer Weaver, accused of firing the barn of his father, Samuel Weaver, was brought into court, and an examination in lunacy held. It was decided that he was insane We presume this will result in his being sent to the asylum.

The case brought by Eli Weaver against the estate of his mother, Catherine Weaver resulted in his favor. It was a claim for supporting her, we believe, and the the jury thought he had earned about $360 and allowed him that.

Chas P. Simons gets a judgment of $250 against J. E. Kunderd.

Wm. E and Mary Hamilton were divorced. So were Mary and Orlando Bratton.

Allen Parks gets a judgment against Joel H. Barnes, but latter asks a new trial.

The damage case of John W. Smurr against the town of Ashley, goes to Steuben county on change of venue at Smurr's request.

A. J. & W. A. Mason get a judgment of $278 against Smith and others.

PROBATE BUSINESS.

G. W. Crooks was appointed guardian of the Stephen M. Davis heirs.

A. P. Foltz is appointed guardian of Chas. C. Foltz, with J. D. Leighty and G. A. Bishop on his bond.

Alice Grogg is guardian of Mary Grogg.

The report of J. S. Kalb, guardian of the Alice Kalb heirs, was examined, and he was continued two years. The same with I. B. Brandon, guardian of Edgar and Edith Lesh. Same with J. D. Leighty, guardian of Joy M. Shutt. Same for Sherman Shultz guardian for Joseph Showalter, non comp.

Chas. L. Kirkpatrick is cited to appear and file additional bond as guardian of Bertha Kirkpatrick.

ESTATE TRIAL DOCKET.

Louisa Kirkpatrick is allowed a claim of $125 against the Adelbert Wartensleben estate.

In the partition case of Seery vs Seery it was decided to sell ten acres of land without notice, E. D. Hartman was appointed guardian ad litem of Minor heirs and is to make sale of the land.

F. A. Squires, administrator of the Nathan Squires estate reports sale of a part of the land to W. B. and Sarah E. Campbell for $800, and the rest to Anna Squires for $1200. Sale confirmed and deeds ordered made to the parties.

The trial between Widney and Culbertson went to the jury Thursday afternoon. The trouble arose over some fruit trees that Widney sold to Culbertson, Bearss, who was with Culbertson, delivered the trees, but it appears that Culbertson, then refused to accept them as it was so late in the season. But Bearss got him to agree to take them conditionally. As Bearss had his money in the trees, he asked Culbertson to accept them, and he, Bearss would plant them and when it was seen how many grew, would accept pay for those that lived, only. The jury was out all night but came in for instructions about 9 a. m. yesterday. The judge explained to them, that the new bargain, or agreement between Culbertson and Bearss would only hold good in case they found that both had agreed to it. But the jury came in again at ten o'clock and said they could not agree, and so were discharged.

After putting in the forenoon in some miscellaneous work, the court adjourned till Monday, when Judge Adair, of Columbia City, will preside He comes here to try the big gravel road case from St. Joe, which we expect will take several days. Judge Penfield will at the same time take Judge Adair's place at Albion where a man is accused of setting fire to a building. Court at Angola will begin three weeks from Monday.

Motocycle Race.

The Chicago Times-Herald has arranged for a race of the new style of road wagons, the ones that are to be run by steam, electricity, etc, or in any way without horses. It is to take place on Saturday of this week. The start is to be made from near the Midway, in Jackson Par , and the route is along the west side of the city and up north a little past Waukegan, then to Waukegan, and so on back through the towns on the lake shore to Lincoln Park in the City of Chicago The distance traveled is 100 miles. Entries have been made by people from all parts of the country, including one by our fellow townsman, R. W. Guilford. It is a poor day when Auburn gets left out. It is believed a vast audience will witness the start, and that from this beginning will date the use of horseless vehicles. Between this plan and the trolly cars and steam plows it looks as if the noblest of all animals would be put into the back ground.

Low Water Mark.

The Laporte Argus observes that the water in the lakes has fallen just 17½ inches since the first day of last July. It reached the lowest point ever known on the 5th day October, and is now raising a little. It is still about four feet and six inches lower than it was at its highest stage in 1893, and it was not then considered very high. Nearly all the ponds and creeks of this county are dry, and places where fish used to be caught are now being cultivated without drainage. Unless there is a good deal of rain this fall many people will be troubled for stock water next fall.

An Earthquake

NEARLY SHOOK PEOPLE OUT OF BED THIS MORNING.

DeKalb County demands and generally gets all the modern improvements, And among these we shall include earthquakes and similar "seismatic disturbances." This morning between four and five o'clock many of our citizens, especially those who had not arisen from their beds felt a distinct shock, and the resulting trembling. Beds rocked and shook, crockery rattled, and the usual sensasions of a light earthquake were unmistakably manifested. The quaking aroused Mrs. Cook Ford, who not feeling well had slept but little through the night. At first the queer shaking of the bed, in her half wakened state, made her think perhaps she had wakened in the midst of a chill. She called her husband's attention, and he at once recognized that something strange was going on, and told her to notice how the dishes were rattling. Both now realized what was taking place and noted it carefully. There were two more shocks or jars a little after this, but it was all over by a few minutes after five o'clock. Among those who report feeling the shocks are Mrs. Cowan in the west part of town as well as B. C. Zeigler and John Berg's family, Mrs. Cone, in the north part, Lafe Marvin of the COURIER, Hugh Culbertson, Milo Husselman and many others, J. E. Rose heard it but did not realize what was going on. I. M. Zent felt the bed shaking at 4:50 and heard dishes rattle. Judge McClellan was wakened by a rattling of two gas pipes that were close together, and after listening awhile he heard and felt it again. He then woke Mrs. McClellan and both soon after heard the third shock. Parties from Waterloo also report these three shocks. Those who noticed, think there was a sort of motion as if the wave came from the north and tended southward. Mr. Zent says the wires from all over the country are asking about the "quake," which proves it must have been general. But the great city dailies have not heard of it. We are willing they shall copy the news from the DAILY COURIER, and let their readers have it to-morrow.

First Monument

The first monument of consequence erected in Chicago was the great granite column raised to the memory of Stephen A. Douglas in 1866. This conspicuous object has ever since been among the sights pointed out to visitors. Its entire height, including the colossal statue of Douglas, which surmounts the column, is 95 feet 9 inches. The monument ground is bounded on the north by Woodland Park, with a frontage of 260; feet; on the east by the Illinois Central Railway and Lake Michigan, with a frontage of 300 feet; on the south by Thirty-fifth street, and on the west by an alley, at one corner of which stands the Douglas cottage and registry for visitors.

This is the inscription on the front of the monument:

> STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS.
> Born April 23, 1813.
> Died June 3, 1861.
> Tell my children to obey the laws and uphold the constitution.

The colossal statue of Douglas at the top is 9 feet 9 inches high. It represents him standing in repose, with scroll in left hand pressed against the hip, and the right hand thrust under the lapel of his tightly buttoned undercoat. The four pedestals at the base are occupied by heroic size statues, represent- Illinois, History, Justice, Eloquence. The four bas-reliefs in the panels of the main base of the superstructure represent the advance of civilization in America, pioneer settlers, commerce and enterprise, education.

The cost of the monument was a little over $96,000, including ground and everything. The state purchased the ground from the widow of Douglas for $24,000. The other expenses were defraged by state appropriations and by public subscriptions. The column alone, which is of Hallowell granite, is 46 feet 5 inches high.

Among those who called to day and advanced their subscription to the WEEKLY COURIER were, James Vogtman, of Hudson, Martin Keesler, of Spencerville, Thomas Barkey, E. D. Smith, and I. S. Miller, of the extreme north-west part of the county.

40 YEARS THE STANDARD.

B. & O. Wreck.

Two Freigh Trains Collide West of Breman.

Thursday's Daily.

At about 4 p. m. yesterday there occurred a bad wreck on the B. & O. between Bremen and Lapaz. A fast freight ran into the rear end of a slow train. The slow train took wate at Bermen and left just seven minutes ahead of the fast train, when a few miles west of Bremen, the fog was so dense that they could not see fifty feet ahead, and as a result the fast train ran into the other and smashed 19 box cars, and derailed the engine. Mr. Satterfield of Garrett was in charge of one engine and had his arm badly hurt. Nobody else was hurt much.

Eel River Case.

The Eel River road, that we now call the Wabash, was leased to the latter road a few years ago, the lease to run for 99 years. Suit was brought to prevent this being done, as it was claimed such a step was not allowed by our laws, and would result in a forfeit of the charter of the Eel River road. It has been slowly going through courts for some time. Saturday it was argued in the state supreme court, Ex-president Harrison being one of the attorneys for the Wabash. The result will be looked for with a good deal of interest.

Importing Ruling.

(Kendallville Standard.)

Judge McCabe in his decision in the case of Mrs. Lamport for damages in the railroad case, puts out the following rulings which all can read with profit perhaps: 1. A person about to cross a railroad track must assume that there is danger and act with ordinary prudence and circumspection upon the assumption. 2. The question of care at railroad crossings as affecting the traveler is no longer, as a rule, a question of the jury, for the quantum of care is exactly prescribed as matter of law. 3 At public crossings the public have the right to cross the track of a railway but in doing so all persons are required to exercise ressonable caution to avoid receiving injury, and the company is compelled to exercise the same degree of care to prevent the infliction of the injury. 4. All persons who use track of a railway between the public crossing are trespassers. 5. When a person crossing a railroad track is injured by a collision with a train the fault of negligence did not contribute to the injury before he is entitled to damages for his injury.

Farmer's Institutes.

The DeKalb Man takes a prominant part as Usual.

We are always glad to see our people get prominent places and as this often happens, we are often glad. The latest we have noticed is the selection of our fellow citizen Cal. Husselman, as a lecturer in the Farmers' Institutes that are to be held this winter. These meetings are provided by law, and much useful work is done by them. The work assigned to Mr. Husselman is set forth in a cirular sent all over the state by authorities at Purdue Univerity, or more especially by Prof. W. C. Latta of that institution who is the superintendent of this work for the state. Mr Husselman's work is: Tilage drainage—its relation to soil and season. The "big four" combination on the farm. Cows, milk and butter. Poultry on the farm. Bees and honey—their relation to fruit and clover. The best acre; garden and small fruits. The hog. How to breed and feed for profit. Odds and ends about the farm. Mr. and Gossip (a paper.)

Among the other well known names in the list of lecturers, we finds Mrs. Virginia Meredith, J A. Mounts, J N. Babcock, W. J. Rank, Waldo F. Brown, Hon. E. W. Davis, of Laporte. Mrs. S. S. Harrell, who was in charge of the Indiana reading room at the World's fair has "Home Reading. Then there are Aaron Jones, Prof. W. C. Latta, Robert Mitchell, and J S. Pfrimmer Then coming nearer home are. S. VanAuken, of Angola, who has The farmer in history. Farmer's sons in college and the professions. Colonial farming. The growth of agriculture.

And Frank B. VanAuken, of Pleasant Lake has: Farm values. Drouth and drainge. Making roads. Mixed husbandry.

The DeKalb county meeting will be held at Butler this winter, under charge of Hon. R. M. Lockhart, but the date is not yet fixed.

Steam Wagon.

Last Wednesday, a queer craft, as sailors would say, appeared on our streets. It was Rus Guilford's steam wagon. He has been making a new steam engine for some time, and having finished it concluded to attach it to a wagon and make a "Motocycle." So, having it all ready for trial, he came up town that day, and ran about on several streets. It worked very well, we are told, though we did not see it, and he expects to go on and improve it still more. He has entered it for the great motocycle race that is to take place at Chicago on Saturday of this week.

Divorces In Indiana

NUMBER OF CASES INCREASES OVER 400 IN A YEAR.

Record of Marriage Licenses Shows No Material Increase—Large Per Cent. Of Arrests For Drunkenness

From the county clerks the statistician has received information concerning the number of divorces and marriage licenses granted during the year ending June 30, 1895. As shown by the reports from all the county clerks except Cass county the number of divorces granted in the state during this period was 2,730. For the same period in 1894 the number was 2,279. A comparison of these figures shows an increase of nearly 400 cases in the state. Of the number of divorces procured in the last year, 1,867 were granted to wives and 863 to husbands. Four hundred and one decrees of divorce were granted in Marion county. Perry county shows the smallest number. Benton county had six, Washington county five, and Union county three.

The records of marriage licenses in the various counties do not show a material increase. During the year ending June 30, 1895 there were 22,506 marriages in the state, not including Cass county. In Marion county 1,779 licenses were granted. Ohio county issued about fifty-three licenses and Benton county granted fifty-seven licenses. The reports show that divorces were granted for the following causes: Adultery, 231; abandonment, 741; cruel treatment, 694; drunkenness, 222; failure to provide, 374; criminal convictions, 47.

The number of people confined in the county jails of the state during the year was 31,161. Of this number 1,475 were women. Among the crimes assigned as cause for imprisonment are murder, 165; arson, 51; criminal assault, 145; drunkenness, 9,838. In the Marion county jail 1,083 prisoners were confined. Newton county had but four incarcerations.

The report shows that 1,755 foreigners have been naturalized during the year. In Hancock county three Chinese were made citizens of the United States, contrary to the statutes. The November election in 1894 according to the reports cost $229,774. There are 8,731 miles of free gravel road in the state and 490 miles of toll road.

Keeps It For La Grippe.

W. A. McGuire, a well known citizen of McKay, Ohio is of the opinion that there is nothing as good for children troubled with colds or croup as Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He has used it in his family for several years with the best results and always keeps a bottle of it in the house. After having lagrippe he was himself troubled with a severe cough. He used other remedies without benefit and then concluded to try the children's medicine and to his delight it soon effected a permanent cure. 25 & 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord 48

THE NEWS RECORD.

SUMMARY OF A WEEK'S HAPPENINGS.

The Latest News as Flashed Over the Wires from All Parts of the World—Regarding Politics, Religion, Casualties, Commerce, and Industry.

HE IS GUILTY.

Murderer Holmes Doomed to Die on the Gallows.

Philadelphia special: H. H. Holmes, as he is best known all over the world, has so far progressed toward the gallows that a verdict of murder in the first degree has been found against him by the jury in the Criminal Court here for the murder of B. F. Pietzel to secure the insurance on his life. At 5:45 the jury in his case retired, and at 8:45 the members returned to court and announced their verdict. The result of the trial was a great surprise to Holmes, who had been led to believe that he would be acquitted or that the jury would disagree. When the foreman announced the verdict, a demand was immediately made by Holmes that the jurors should be polled. When the prisoner heard his doom, his color changed, he became deathly pale, and he choked and swallowed, and coughed slightly. In an instant he was himself again, and the same defiant, devilish spirit manifested itself. He stood up in the prisoners' dock and questioned each man by name, as to his finding.

Fatal Blunder.

The other day Christopher Scheehle was appointed light-trimmer by the City Electrical Department at Wheeling, W. Va. Next morning he and his wife were in great glee over his good luck, and he asked her to bring the two little ones to the door and see him trim his first lamp, located in front of his home. He lowered the lamp, and casting a smiling glance over his shoulder at his wife stepped the carbon-holders. In an instant blue flames were encircling his body and sparks flew from his hands and feet, the latter resting on a trolley track. One gasp and he was dead, but for three minutes he slowly burned before his wife's eyes. An accident had crossed the wire with a trolley line, and Scheehle had forgotten to turn the lamp switch.

The Big Fight Off.

Little Rock (Ark.) special: Everything is off. The Governor wins. There will be no fight in Arkansas, nor will there be one anywhere else for that matter, unless the complexion of affairs undergoes a total and altogether unexpected change within a few hours. The pugilists have made an unconditional surrender, and the long-looked for battle for the championship of America passes into history as a fizzle without a redeeming feature.

A Kentucky Duel.

A bloody duel was fought in Leslie County, Kentucky, recently. The Hon. W. H. Bentley, who was a member of the Kentucky Legislature in 1887-8 and the most prominent man in Leslie County, fought a duel to the death with Bige Hignite, a man of a very bad reputation, having killed his brother about a year ago. Hignite died immediately. Bentley lived about eight hours.

Killed by a Tree.

While out hunting along the Main Licking River, near Devil's Backbone, Ky., W. J. Taylor of Fleming County, was accidentally killed by the falling of a tree. Mr. Taylor was a prominent citizen of Fleming, 76 years of age, and was the only living male descendant of President Zachariah Taylor, with the exception of his two sons.

Tore His Face Away.

Will Stine, aged 17, of Piqua, Ohio, went to the woods with three companions hunting. Climbing upon a log he set his gun, which was cocked, down in front of him. By a slight move the weapon was accidentally discharged, the load taking effect under his chin and entirely tearing away the lower portion of his face.

With a Curling Iron.

The 5-year-old daughter of Charles Chambers, who lives ten miles south of Brazil, Ind., got hold of a curling iron during the absence of the family. It is supposed that it fell into the child's lap after being heated and ignited the tot's clothing. When found she was dead and the body frightfully burned.

She Kept Her Head.

Mrs. Jacob Bower, of East Eleventh street, Portsmouth, Ohio, was severely burned about the face and neck while starting a fire with the contents of a coal-oil can. She was saved from death by wrapping the bed clothing about her instead of running into the air, as is usually the case.

He was Murdered.

The body of John Barclay was found in the wood on the waters of Dry Fork, McDowell County, West Virginia. The appearance of the body showed that it had been there for several weeks. It showed unmistakable evidences of murder.

A Cigarette Fiend.

George Hatton, 22 years old, of Marshall, Mo., fell in a fainting fit at Logansport, Ind., recently, and he has been unconscious ever since. He is an inveterate cigarette smoker. His recovery is not probable.

Shocking Death.

Earl, the 7-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Staley of Tiffin, Ohio, met with a shocking death while in the woods gathering hickorynuts. While his father was felling trees he got in the way of one of them, which fell upon his head, crushing it to a pulp.

The Cider Exploded.

Joseph V. Ayer, Secretary of the Brazil Brick and Pipe Company of Brazil, Ind., was horribly burned by the explosion of a tin can filled with cider. It is feared his eyes are destroyed.

Wreck in St. Louis.

A special from St. Louis, Mo., says: Two suburban trains on the Missouri Pacific railroad, one loaded with suburbanites returning home from the theaters of this city, the other coming into town, collided within the city limits about midnight Wednesday. Both engineers were killed, and the firemen and a passenger were fatally injured.

Failures.

Failures in October thus far reported show liabilities of $11,120,488, against $8,206,892 last year, and $18,995,494 in 1893. Failures for the week have been 278 in the United States against 249 last year, and 53 in Canada against 50 last year.

LAST OF THE BLUFFERS.

Fitzsimmons Lands in the Hands of the Governor's Forces.

A Texarkana, Ark., special says: Robert Fitzsimmons will not be able, granting that he has always been willing, to make good his boast of being in Hot Springs on time to fight Corbett if civil or military authorities did not interfere. The lanky pugilist accompanied by Manager Julian and others, had no sooner crossed the line which divides Texas and Arkansas than officers of Arkansas who had been on the train served a warrant of arrest on him. There was an exciting clash on the train between Sheriff Houpt of Garland County, and Sheriff Dillard of Miller County, in which this city is situated.

Part of this city is in Texas and part of it in Arkansas and when the Iron Mountain train arrived on the Texas side at 3 o'clock in the afternoon it stopped for the usual railroad purpose. Then it was started into Arkansas. When the line was crossed the contending sheriffs of Garland and Miller Counties confronted Fitzsimmons and proceeded to read their warrants. Sheriff Houpt was the first to begin and claimed the prisoner, but Miller County's sheriff sharply ordered him to keep his hands off, as he had no authority under the circumstances. The Little Rock warrants were sworn to by the Attorney General as the legal representative of the State. Upon this fact as well as that Sheriff Houpt being outside his county, Sheriff Dillard and Deputy Howard insisted on their better right to Fitzsimmons.

Sheriff Houpt of Hot Springs, who sought to carry Fitzsimmons and Julian to that city, was arrested on the Iron Mountain train. Sheriff Dillard has been assisted by a Deputy Sheriff of Little Rock and every move made was according to written instructions from Gov. Clarke.

DURRANT GUILTY.

The Verdict of the Jury was Murder in the First Degree.

A San Francisco special says: Theodore Durrant, assistant superintendent of the Emanuel Baptist Church Sunday School, was convicted of the murder of Blanche Lamont after he had been on trial since July 22nd. The jury was out twenty minutes, having arrived at a verdict on the first ballot. As there was no recommendation of mercy the punishment was fixed at death. Judge Murphy finished the charge at 3:20 and the jury retired. In twenty minutes the door at the rear of the room opened, and the jury filed in and took their seats in the box. Clerk Morris asked the usual question as to whether the jury had agreed upon a verdict. Foreman Warren Dutton arose and replied in the affirmative. "We, the jury," he said, "find the defendant, William Henry Theodore Durrant, guilty of murder in the first degree."

As the aged foreman, pale and trembling, read the words that fixed Durrant's fate, a low rumbling noise like the roar of a mob arose from the rear of the courtroom. The next moment men were cheering wildly, while women wept hysterically. The bailiff rapped loudly for order, but the tumult continued for a minute before anything like quiet could be brought out of the disorder.

A BAD BLAZE.

Springfield, Ohio, Hotel Building Is Burned to the Ground.

Springfield, O., was visited by one of the most disastrous fires in its history. The Lagonda hotel building was entirely consumed as the result. The building occupied half of the principal business block of the city, the hotel fronting on High and Limestone streets. The blaze originated in the kitchen of the hotel and burned about four hours. It spread rapidly in spite of the fire departments' efforts, and the Dayton and Columbus fire departments were called on for assistance. The loss on the building and contents is estimated at $100,000, partially insured.

On the street fronts were store rooms which contained some of the principal stores in the city. The Western Union and Postal Telegraph Companies offices were located there and were totally burned out, thus cutting off telegraph communication. The loss to both companies will run up into the thousands, but the amount cannot be told at this writing. The other losers are as follows: Siegthaler, drug store, stock totally destroyed, $10,000; Marceleict, jewelry store, $20,000; H. T. Harris, cigar store, $2,500; London clothing store, $15,000; Heison furniture store, $2,500; Craif, millinery store, $2,500.

TWO OF THEM.

George Smith and Charles N. Davis Electrocuted.

Dannemora (N. Y.) special: For the second time in the history of this State, two murderers paid the penalty of their crimes on the same day and before the same set of witnesses. Geo. H. Smith, who murdered old Philip Richmeyer at Albany, and Chas. N. Davis, who outraged and killed six-year-old Maggie Shannon at Cohoes, were killed in the electric chair at Clinton prison Wednesday, subjects of electrical execution. These were also examples of quick justice, both being convicted during the third week in September and no appeal being taken to the higher courts. Another interesting feature of the killing of the two men was the fact that the usual sentimental features were lacking. They came into the execution room in flannel outing shirts without coats or vests, with plain dark trousers and slippers which latter were taken off as they sat down in the chair.

Charles N. Davis was executed at 11:37 a. m., and George Smith was executed at 11:39.

The executions were entirely devoid of sensational incidents.

BATTLESHIP DEFECTIVE.

Alarming Reports About the New Cruiser Indiana.

It is stated on tolerably reliable authority that considerable alterations will have to be made in the equipment of the battleship Indiana before she can be ready for active service. It has been discovered that with her full equipment the armor belt, designed to protect the ship's water line, would be submerged. Instead of being three feet above water the belt would be three inches below. The Navy Department declares that there is nothing serious in the matter with the Indiana, but appears to be certain that the boat will not be able to carry her full armament. Secretary Herbert says he will have the vessel dry docked and examined as soon as she is officially turned over.

GREAT DESTITUTION.

Inhabitants of the Island of Bemili Starving to Death.

Captain Hudson, of the British steamer Honiton, which arrived at Galveston, Texas, twenty-seven days out, from Antwerp, reports that while passing Bemili Island on October 25, three days after the terrific storm which swept the Bahamas, he was hailed by two boats flying distress signals. The boats contained ten men, white and colored, who claimed to be pilots and fishermen, and who stated that they were destitute. The storm of October 22 had made it necessary to ask assistance of passing vessels. Captain Hudson supplied them with what provisions he could spare and proceeded on his way, but had not gone far before he was again spoken to by several boats which had the same poverty-stricken story to tell. The captain was unable to render any further assistance, however, and says that the men in the boats told him the storm had blown down all their houses and destroyed all the crops and that the water had been muddy so long that it was impossible to catch a fish and that the inhabitants of the Island of Bemili were actually starving.

The French Cabinet.

A Paris special says: M. Bourgeois has succeeded in forming a cabinet, all the portfolios having been accepted, with the exception of that of the foreign ministry. The new cabinet is constituted as follows:

Prime Minister and Minister of the Interior—M. Bourgeois.
Minister of War—M. Cavaignac.
Minister of Marine—M. Lockroy.
Minister of Finance—M. Doumer.
Minister of Justice—M. Richard.
Minister of the Colonies—M. Combes.
Minister of Public Instruction and Worship—M. Berthelot.
Minister of Public Works—M. Guyot-Dessaigne.
Minister of Commerce—M. Mesuerer.
Minister of Agriculture—M. Vigere.

The Kessler Train Robbery.

A special from Allegan, Mich., says: Noble County, Indiana, officials from Kendallville have returned taking with them a confession from Jim Brown regarding the Lake Shore train robbery at Kessler, Ind., September 11, 1893. Jim Brown is in jail here suspected of being one of the Smalley gang, who held up the Chicago & West Michigan train two months ago at Fennville, Mich. The officers say that Brown's statement fit in exactly with the evidence already in possession of the authorities there. It is a general belief that Brown will be induced to go on the witness stand in behalf of the State.

Sensational Robbery.

A sensation has been created at Waco Texes, by the arrest of A. J. Sewell, assistant cashier of the First National bank, of McGregor, charged with the robbery of the bank. Sewell, it is said, left the vault door open, as it had a time lock. The steel safe inside was also unlocked by him by means of the combination. Fifteen thousand dollars in gold and currency was taken out and dynamite then placed inside. The door was than closed, so that the bolts projecting from the sides rested against the other sides of the safe. Sewel is 21 years old and his family is one of the most prominent in that section.

Fed the Tots Brimstone.

Marian Henderson and Delia Maloy, both aged 5 years, were playing "keeping house" on the Monongahela, wharf at the foot of Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa. The Henderson tot was the "mother" and Delia was the guest of honor. A sister of each child came along and were invited to stay for tea. They disappeard and returned with something in a box. Delia ate some of it as requested by Marian, but their sisters refused to touch it. To show she was not afraid Marian swallowed some of the pretended feast. She died in horrible agony, and Delia cannot live. The stuff in the box was brimstone.

Terrible and Strange Tragedy.

Another terrible tragedy occurred at Green Springs, Seneca County, Ohio. Albert Fox, a prominent farmer of that vicinity, married Miss A. Kunsman, Oct. 1. The other day a quarrel took place over an alleged illegitimate child of Fox's wife, for whose parentage the brother of the woman is charge. After learning the truth Fox shot his wife through the neck and fatally injured her, and also shot at his brother-in-law, the bullet passing through his own brain, which caused instant death.

Burned by Order of the Saints.

A dispatch from Guerrero, Hidalgo, Mexico, says. It is reported that the Auxiliary Judge of Tecapa, obeying the mandate of some of the saints who appeared to him in a vision, ordered the burning of two women and a child, which order was carried into effect by persons who believed in the heavenly vision. All the parties comprised in the horrible affair have been arrested by order of the President of this municipality. Investigations are proceeding.

Burned at the Stake.

Henry Hillside, a negro, met Mrs. Bell, a white woman, in the country near Tyler Texas, outraged her, and then killed here. He was caught, confessed his crime, and taken to the public square by a mob and slowly burned to death. The husband of his victim applied the torch. Frequently the fire was put out and again started in order to add to the punishment of the victim. For full fifty minutes the negro was thus tortured, before the mob was satisfied.

Ran Into a Wagon.

At Spencerville, Ohio, the west-bound passenger train on the Erie Road ran into a wagon loaded with lumber, about a mile west of town. The driver was seriously injured and the wagon demolished. The team was killed. The engine was disabled, but the engineer and fireman escaped injury.

Tramp Fires a Michigan Village.

The business portion of the village of Henderson, Mich., was wiped out by fire, the work of a tramp who set fire to a shop belonging to Benjamin Revinaugh. The losses aggregate more than $15,000.

In Hancock's Honor.

Secretary Lamont has issued an order naming the fortifications at Sandy Hook Fort Hancock in honor of the late Gen. W. S. Hancock, the hero of Gettysburg.

His Neck Broken.

Gustav Rockbrandt, aged 40, residing at Middle Fork, Ind., while chopping down a tree, was caught beneath the falling tree and his neck broken.

CAPITAL CITY CHAT.

NEWS AND COMMENT IN AND ABOUT WASHINGTON.

Russia's Secret Treaty Is Doubted—Congress Likely to Tackle the Currency Question—Cleveland and Cuba—Reed as a Presidential Candidate.

Report Is Premature.

Washington correspondence:

WHILE the news that comes by way of Hong Kong and London about a secret treaty recently concluded between China and Russia for a railway through the Liao Tung peninsula and the occupation of Port Arthur must be regarded as premature, for it is believed impossible that the emperor of China should have made this great sacrifice without external pressure. Again, it seems impossible because Japan has not yet evacuated the Liao Tung peninsula, and has three months to do so after the payment of the first installment of the war indemnity, which will not be due until about the 1st of January. It is not very probable that Russia will show her hand and attempt to occupy the territory until Japan has evacuated it. There is nothing strange about the story that the Russian war fleet has left Vladivostok. If it does not get away from there pretty soon the ships will be all frozen in and be utterly helpless until next spring. The ice begins to form in that bay about the 1st of November and it often lasts until the middle of May.

The freshest and most accurate political news from China comes by way of St. Petersburg, and it can generally be relied upon. That which comes by way of England cannot be relied upon. The Russians just now have access to the authorities in Pekin which is denied to the representatives of other governments, and the minister cables long dispatches full of interesting information to the foreign office in St. Petersburg every day. He has practically camped in the Tsung Li Yamen. The British minister at Pekin does not enjoy the same facilities for gaining information, and when he does get it and telegraphs it to the foreign office in London it is generally suppressed, because just now all of the events in China are unfavorable to British interests, and the government does not consider it wise or cheerful to communicate them to the public.

CZAR OF RUSSIA.

That the Russians are getting on very well with the Chinese may be inferred by the fact that the emperor has conferred the order of the double dragon upon M. Shishkin, assistant minister of foreign affairs at St. Petersburg, and upon Count Kaplist and M. Lissowski, the chief and vice chief of the bureau of Asiatic affairs in the foreign office. This is a very unusual distinction and carries great significance. Such honors have been conferred upon very few foreigners, possibly five or six, including "Chinese" Gordon, who assisted in putting down the Tai-Ping rebellion; Anson Burlingame, the American who first introduced China to the world; Sir Robert Hart, who has for twenty-five years been collecting the import duties for the Chinese Government, and one or two others. Never before, I believe, has the honor been conferred upon active officials of another government, excepting kings and regents.

Work Ahead for Congress.

Without any doubt the currency question will be thrust upon Congress again during the coming winter. Mr. Cleveland set out long ago to break the "endless chain," and whether the country is with him or not, Mr. Cleveland has a fashion of going ahead with the things he has set his heart on.

THOMAS B. REED.

There will be some foreign questions, too, and on these the President will have the first word. The President is said to be eager to find a leader who will rise to the height of a great occasion and sound the watchword of no party in the face of a possible foreign foe. In view of these issues, great interest centers in the men who are the acknowledged leaders of the Republican party.

Cleveland and Cuba.

It is impossible to obtain at Washington either confirmation or denial of the report that President Cleveland, while in Atlanta, suggested a postponement of the day set apart by the managers of the exposition for expression of sympathy with Cuba. It is known, however, that for some time Senor de Lome, the Spanish Minister, has been protesting to the Secretary of State against the use of an organization which has received the official sanction of the United States Government, as is the case with the Atlanta exposition, for the purpose of pro-Cuban agitation. Senor de Lome has expressed the view that with private meetings of citizens for such purpose the Government may have nothing to do in a free country like this, but has argued that the case is quite a different one where the exposition is concerned. The Government made an application for an official display there and has given it a certain recognition in the eyes of the world. It is also known that President Cleveland does in a mild way deprecate the holding of sympathy meetings in this country. This is not because he lacks sympathy with Cuba as an individual on his own account, but because he does not think any good purpose is to be served by carrying on an agitation which may have an undue effect upon Congress.

Reed's Horoscope.

Thomas B. Reed is now admittedly the leading Eastern candidate for the Republican nomination for President. Here at the capital no one is disposed to deny that the big man from Maine is at the present moment the greatest figure in the contest. There is at the same time serious doubt whether he will be in the front of the column next spring. That will to a great extent depend upon himself. No man in the United States has a more difficult role to play than that which will fall to Mr. Reed's lot during the coming six months. No man will be more closely watched or severely scrutinized than he. He, as Speaker, may be diametrically opposed to many matters which Mr. Cleveland may favor. And it is not at all unlikely that the President may win to some of his projects the support of influential members of the opposition, when Mr. Reed would find himself between the upper and the nether millstone, with the reduction pressure screws working automatically.

Grover's Loyal Brother.

The President's clerical brother is in a peck of trouble. Forty-three of the eighty-eight members of the Presbyterian Church at Chaumont, N. Y., of which he is the pastor, have petitioned the Presbytery to dissolve the pastoral relations, on the ground that he has destroyed his usefulness and made himself unpopular with the people of the parish by offensive partisanship in politics. Chaumont is a little village of only a few hundred inhabitants up in St. Lawrence County, near the shores of Lake Ontario. There is said to be only one Democrat in Parson Cleveland's congregation. The Republican members are in the habit of expressing themselves freely on political matters, and their comments regarding the personnel and policy of the national administration have not always been favorable. William has always been loyal to Grover, and resents with vigor any unfriendly criticism made by the Republicans of Chaumont. His disposition to do so has resulted in alienating more than half the congregation, who called a church meeting some time ago and passed resolutions asking him to resign his pastorate. This he declined to do, and now the malcontents who are determined to get rid of him have brought the matter into the Presbytery. The petition was referred to a special committee, which is to make an investigation and report.

H. H. HOLMES ON TRIAL.

Notorious Criminal Arraigned for the Murder of Pitzel.

H. H. Holmes, who, according to his own remarkable confessions, stands at the head of modern criminals, was put on trial in Philadelphia Monday morning for the murder of Benjamin F. Pitzel. Holmes sprang a sensation at the opening of the trial by requesting his counsel to withdraw after they had made an ineffectual attempt to secure a postponement. The prisoner is conducting his own case.

H. H. HOLMES.

So many aliases have been worn by the man on trial during the course of his spectacular career that his baptismal name, Herman Mudgett, has almost been lost sight of. Not so his manifold exploits in half a dozen of the big cities of this country, which have been marveled at wherever men can read. Wild and weird, as is the confessed story of his life, in which he accuses himself of offenses which would long since have given a less skillful criminal his quietus, Holmes has been careful to shift the main responsibility for the various murders with which he admits having been connected to other shoulders. Thus during the thirty-eight years of a life devoted almost entirely to law-breaking this is his first experience as a felon on trial for his life. The authorities have recognized that this is no common criminal, but one who might be called a technical and most expert artist in crime. It is, therefore, their determination, in the event of securing his conviction for a capital offense, to "railroad" him to the gallows.

M. FELIX FAURE.

President of France, Whose Ministry Has Been Shattered by an Adverse Vote in the Chamber of Deputies.

GET OUT UNDER FIRE.

Grave Charges of Fraud Cause a Cabinet Crisis in France.

France is again without a cabinet. President Faure has accepted the resignations of the ministry headed by M. Ribot, which were offered because of a government defeat in the Chamber of Deputies during the debate on the south of France railway scandal. The crisis was precipitated by M. Ronanet, who was active in exposing the Panama Canal scandal, he moving that the report of Expert Flory, the official accountant on the finances of the railway, be made public. This motion was resisted by Premier Ribot, but was carried by a vote of 275 to 196. Amid radical cheers the members of the cabinet then left the chamber, which thereupon adjourned for a week. The defeat of the government is not surprising in view of the sweeping charges made against senators, deputies and even ministers involved first in the Panama syndicate and more recently in the south of France railway scandals. The charges culminated recently in the sentence to imprisonment for a year of M. Edmond Magnier, formerly senator of the Var and editor-in-chief of the Evenement, who is said to have received 87,500 francs as part of the profits of the syndicate referred to.

It will be recalled that the fall of the Dupuy cabinet, which resulted in the resignation of President Casimir-Perier, grew out of a debate on the government railways. The government held that its guaranty of interest to the railways expired in 1914, but the council of state, to which the dispute was appealed, decided that the guaranty was perpetual. The Chamber of Deputies censured the ministry for having submitted the question to the council of state and the cabinet resigned, the president following suit the next day.

WORST OF ALL DROUGHTS.

Death Follows in Its Wake Over a Large Section of the Country.

The drought which extends over the Middle Atlantic States is declared by the weather bureau to be the most prolonged, most severe and general known since the organization of that department. From Pittsburg comes news that packet traffic on the Ohio and its tributaries has ceased, the river in places containing only twelve inches of water. Typhoid fever is epidemic and hundreds of deaths have occurred, all due to the lack of pure drinking water. In the Connellsville coke region 3,000 workers have been rendered idle, owing to the lack of water in the coke reservoirs, and the winter wheat in many sections of the State has been killed.

At Louisville, Ky., navigation is also practically suspended owing to lack of water in the Ohio. For fifty miles up the river the latter is a stagnant pool of dead water and the beds of former tributary streams are as dry as summer roads. All the way from Louisville to Pittsburg the river towns are suffering from the scourge of typhoid fever, while diphtheria is general.

Throughout Indiana, Ohio and Kentucky hog cholera is raging and in one county of Ohio hogs to the value of $75,000 died in one week. In Texas the drought is being severely felt and unless rain soon falls and falls in great abundance there will be a heavy loss in cattle ranches. In the Fox River valley of Wisconsin the mills will have to suspend operations unless rain comes, thereby throwing 10,000 people out of employment.

SHAKEN BY A QUAKE

TERRESTRIAL DISTURBANCE FELT IN MANY STATES.

The Tremor Had an East to West Direction, Turned Sleepers Out of Bed, Shook Dishes Off of Shelves and Performed Other Antics.

Many Were Frightened.

The central part of the United States experienced a well defined earthquake shortly after 5 o'clock Thursday morning. The shock and vibrations were felt in several States, the dispatches showing that the disturbance extended from Kentucky on the south far into Wisconsin and Michigan, throughout Missouri, Illinois, Ohio, and Indiana, and even as far as West Virginia, where the shock was also perceptible.

The shock and vibrations were of but a few seconds, but created the greatest alarm, and in some instances terror among residents of some of the cities. There was no doubting the nature of the disturbance which shook buildings, slammed doors, rang door bells, and caused articles to topple from shelves, tables, and mantel pieces. In the telegraph offices of Chicago the vibrations were strongly manifested, and for a few minutes after the shock telegraphic communication was entirely suspended. Thousands of persons were awakened from their sleep by the shock. In the public library, on the top floor of the city hall, books were shaken from the shelves, and in many of the offices in skyscrapers similar circumstances were noticed. On the street the milkmen and the policemen feeling the unusual commotion sought shelter in the belief that there was a possibility that one of the tall buildings might fall. The operators in the Western Union Telegraph room became alarmed and left the building. Clocks were stopped and windows rattled, but no serious damage was done. The shocks were not accompanied by any rumbling disturbance.

In St. Louis the trembling of the earth was so great that many clocks were stopped, dishes rattled, and at the powerhouses of the electric-car lines the current was temporarily interrupted. At Indianapolis the shock was preceded by a rumbling noise. The shock was from north to south, and the vibration in three-story buildings was at least two inches. Many tall chimneys were damaged.

Reports received state that the shock was felt as far away as Arkansas and Kansas, and that the wave passed from west to east.

LINCOLN MONUMENT UNSAFE.

Parts of the Structure Thought to Have Been Marble Are Brick.

The Lincoln monument at Oak Ridge Cemetery, near Springfield, which has for the last twenty years been admired by thousands upon thousands of people from all over the world, will have to be torn down. It is too far gone to be repaired, and, besides, its construction is such that it will not admit of repair. Instead of being a substantial pile of solid granite, as external appearances would indicate, it is a rickety structure of brick veneered over with slabs of granite. This is the verdict of State trustees who have charge of the monument.

During the last session of the General Assembly the historic pile was turned over to the State, $30,000 was appropriated for repairs, and a law passed making the Governor, State Treasurer, and State Superintendent of Instruction trustees of the monument to care for it and make the much-needed repairs. When the trustees set about to arrange for the repairs they discovered that the magnificent monument erected to the memory of "Honest Old Abe" was a sham and a fraud. What appeared to be huge blocks of granite were nothing but thin slabs laid over brick.

THE LINCOLN MONUMENT.

"The Lincoln monument is simply a shell," said Governor Altgeld. "It is a brick monument and has a veneering of granite slabs three inches thick. This veneering is coming loose, just as all veneering will."

"Can it be repaired?" was asked.

"It would be impossible to repair the monument and make it permanent."

"The other two trustees and I feel that the great State of Illinois should have a monument to Lincoln that is not a sham, but a solid structure, and that in order to get this, this brick and veneered monument should be taken down and in its stead build a monument of solid granite from bottom to top, so that it will last for all ages and require no attention from anybody. We have almost enough money to do this. However, the trustees do not feel like taking so radical a step unless they should be requested to do so by the surviving members of President Lincoln's family."

The Lincoln monument was completed in October, 1874, and cost $206,700, which amount was raised by popular subscription.

CHAPTER XI.

The construction which Captain Dene had put upon his wife's conversation with her old admirer was a very natural one. Not for a moment did his trust in her loyalty and truth falter, nor did he suppose that Major Larron had endeavored to shake the foundation of either; but he thought that the latter had been vindicating his past conduct, and he judged by Mrs. Dene's agitated demeanor that she had not listened to him unmoved. If so, the hope he had treasured of winning her love at last was further away than ever; indeed, he was not sure that he had not earned her actual hate by coming between her and the lover who had thus tardily rehabilitated himself in her esteem.

He paced outside his tent until the light of day-break made the stars grow paler and gradually fade away. Then he lay down and slept. It seemed to him that he was sleeping still as he sat at early breakfast and heard the gay chatter of the rest.

This was to be the day of the Tent Club meeting, so they were all anxious for good sport and to start betimes. The four gentlemen—for Colonel Prinsep had breakfasted with them—rode away abreast, while Mrs Dene and Jane stood at the entrance of the tent, watching them as they went.

"I hope—I sincerely hope," said Mrs. Dene, slowly, "that nothing will happen."

"There is no danger, is there?" asked Jane, with a scared face.

"No, no—I suppose not."

"They have been out several times before, and nothing happened?"

"True," sighed Mrs. Dene.

She was scarcely conscious of her own words. She was wondering whether indeed it was too late—whether there might not be a hope yet. Following up her thoughts, she went inside the tent, and took up a looking-glass that lay on the table underneath a vase of flowers; but it was small, and a little dimmed. She put it down impatiently, and turned to Jane.

"I wish I had what you despised the other day, and called vulgarity," she exclaimed.

"What was it? I forget."

"Prettiness. I wish I were as pretty as you."

Jane looked at her thoughtfully, and did not deliver the prompt protest which perhaps Mrs. Dene expected.

"Well, what do you think?" Mrs. Dene asked, with a short laugh.

"I don't think you are pretty. But then," Jane added, hastily, "you know I never have thought prettiness a thing to be desired. It is such a blank, unmeaning word, which can be used for almost anything without misapplication. No, I don't think you are pretty; you are sweet, and elegant."

"And dress well. Why don't you call me a fashion-plate at once?" laughed Mrs. Dene, genuinely amused.

Jane blushed and laughed, too.

"I am a great bungler at description. Colonel Prinsep had a better word for you last night; he said you were 'interesting,' and that is just what I was trying to express."

Mrs. Dene walked away, smiling. She had registered a great resolve, and was only eager to put it into execution. She had determined to put away the reserve which was growing habitual with her, and strive to prove the truth of what they said; she was going to try to interest her husband.

She put on her prettiest gown, not her costliest one—somehow the word "elegant" had rather nettled her. She did not wish to appear a merely intelligent and graceful exponent of the fashions, but as a living, breathing woman, who loved her husband as much—as she wished him to love her.

As she gave a parting glance at her mirror, she confessed to herself that the case was not impossible.

Animation had given her momentary beauty. She had forgotten all her fears; but as she crossed the ground from her dressing tent to the one in which they usually sat, she saw something which recalled them with added force.

Colonel Prinsep was galloping toward her over the bare maidan, and some distance behind him came a procession—of what she could not guess, for such a cloud of dust was raised that it was impossible to distinguish any object clearly; but she feared—even yet she scarcely knew what she feared. It was something too terrible to put into words.

She went to meet him, staggering beneath the hot midday sun, and with hands half outstretched as though she would wrest the truth from him if needs be by force.

"What is it?" she asked, in a hoarse whisper.

"There has been an accident—and we want you to get everything ready," he began, trying to lead her thoughts from what had already happened to what might still be done. But he broke down under her steadfast, agonized gaze.

"Who—who?" she screamed rather than spoke. Then, as his hesitation told her all, she added in a strangely quiet, muffled voice—"You need not say. I know—I have known all along. It is Gerald—it is my husband."

He stared at her helplessly, and was relieved when the sound of a dress rustling over the dried-up grass struck upon his ear. It was Jane, who, seeing from the tent that something unusual had occurred, hastened to join her friend.

"What is it?" she asked, in her turn, and threw her arm round Mrs. Dene's waist, as though to defend her from the reply.

To her he could give a more circumstantial answer.

"It is Captain Dene, who unfortunately has been wounded. They are bringing him in now."

"Seriously wounded?" asked Jane quickly, and felt from the pressure of Mrs. Dene's hand that she had put the question which Mrs. Dene herself would have liked to ask, only that she was afraid.

"I think not—honestly, I think not. They have sent for the doctor, and he will be here shortly."

"Would you like to know how it happened?" asked Jane, gently, of Mrs. Dene, and again was answered by a faint pressure of the hand.

She had laid her head upon the girl's shoulder, and was gazing into Colonel Prinsep's face with earnest, tearless eyes, hungry for all the news that he could give.

"It all happened so quickly; I cannot tell you exactly how it was. We were following a large boar, and he escaped from us, just as we were closing round him, into a small patch of thick jungle. Of course the coolies ought to have gone in and driven him out; but he had turned upon them twice, and they were in a mortal fright of him. Indeed it would have been a dangerous attempt. Dene, who had been riding splendidly, had already speared him; and as we were discussing what could be done he jumped off his horse—for no horse could have gone in—and rushed into the grass himself. 'I'll drive him out for you!' he cried, and the next moment there was a quick, sharp scuffle and the pig rushed out. Larron and some of the men who were further off and had not seen what had happened, pursued and killed him, I believe; but Valentine and I went in and found poor Dene stretched on the ground senseless, his shirt torn and the blood flowing from his breast."

Mrs. Dene shuddered and hid her face.

"How soon will he be here?" the Colonel heard her murmur.

"In another ten minutes. The men are walking very slowly, to spare him pain."

They were indeed coming with a measured tread that added solemnity to a scene already sad. To Jane it looked like a funeral, and she prepared herself for the worst.

When they reached the wounded man, his wife was comparatively calm. She only glanced once at his pale, unconscious face, and after that did not venture to look again. His hand was hanging over the side of the rough charpoy they had utilized as a stretcher, and clasping it closely in her own, she walked beside him.

Colonel Prinsep met them to say he had procured a room in the hotel, and there they carried him, and almost at the same moment the doctor arrived.

Then followed nearly an hour of expectation, mingled with involuntary fear, during which time no sound issued through the closed doors,, and Mrs. Dene clung convulsively to Jane, moaning every now and then in irrepressible pain, but with the tears still very far from her burning, aching eyes.

Then the door opened very gently, and the doctor came out.

Mrs. Dene looked at him agitatedly, but could frame no form of speech. It was Jane who asked hastily if there was "any hope."

"Every hope. Indeed, after a very careful examination, I see no cause for fear," he answered, with a grave smile full of kindliness. "There is a great weakness from loss of blood, and I dare say he will have a bad bout of the inevitable fever, but from the actual wounds he has received I apprehend no danger."

"Thank heaven!" cried Jane, impulsively; but his wife remained speechless still.

"He only requires plenty of nourishment and very careful nursing, and that"—gallantly—"I am sure he will not lack."

He took up his hat, and with a bow including both ladies, and a promise to look in again that evening, he went out. Then only did Mrs. Dene make a sign that she had heard and understood all.

"Oh, Jane, Jane!" she gasped tremulously; and her joy being more than she could bear, she burst into a flood of passionately happy tears. Jane, too, was very helpful, and tried to save her friend what she could.

Colonel Prinsep admired her more than ever in this chastened mood, and told her once, as together they were busy over something Mrs. Dene had given them to do, that if he ever were in trouble he should go to her for comfort.

* * * * * * *

No man could have had more devoted care than had Captain Dene during the days that followed. He was not allowed to talk, nor would his strength have permitted it had the doctor been less strict; but his eyes followed his wife gratefully as she moved about the room, and sometimes as she stood beside the bed he would lay his hand gently upon hers.

After a week the improvement in his condition was decided. The doctor now came only once a day, and after one of his visits made a sign to Mrs. Dene to accompany him from the room.

"Your husband is certainly better, Mrs. Dene," he said, turning to her with a congratulatory smile. "I consider him out of danger now."

She looked at him blankly.

"Do you mean that he was in danger before?"

"I don't know—frankly I confess that I didn't know. I feared some internal injury, for the prostration was greater than the acute wounds seemed to justify. But I must have been mistaken. Doctors are anything but infallible, though it does not do for their patients to suppose so."

She had been very pale as the knowledge of the past danger was borne upon her. Then a sweet solemn joy grew into her face as she realized that it was surmounted now—that she need fear nothing, and might hope much.

Directly the doctor had left she ran back into her husband's room, radiant with happiness which she could not conceal from him, although she busied herself with a thousand things to distract his attention.

At length he said in the feeble voice that had often brought tears into her eyes, but that now, fortified by this new consciousness of safety, had no power to sadden her: "If you had loved me, Nora," he added.

"I do love you—I do love you! Oh, Gerald, don't you know? Can't you guess what I have suffered all this time thinking I might lose you? You are weak, yet, darling," she murmured, fondly.

"Strong—in your love," he managed to articulate, as she bent lovingly over him.

No thought of Barry Larron disturbed his reverie. Without staying to analyze his reasoning, he knew he had no cause for jealousy: he knew she had loved him all the time—him alone, although she had not known it.

Presently—before she could remonstrate with him—he spoke. By an effort he had steadied his voice. It sounded wonderfully strong and clear.

"Wife, wife! How happy you have made me! You have given me new life with new hope. I think I must have loved you—although then I did not call it love—even before we married; and latterly it—the love, Nora—has grown deeper and deeper every day. Now a paradise seems to have opened before us—a paradise in which you and I, Nora—wife—love—is this—death?"

She thought he had only fainted from exhaustion, and threw her arms around him to support him, but as his head fell heavily against her shoulder she knew at once that it was something more. The one pitiful gasp for breath, the marble pallor that crept across his face and then the dead weight upon her breast, all combined to tell the terible truth.

He had died—died so, in her arms, at the very moment when life had become precious and full of beautiful possibilities. Just as she had entered into real wifehood she was bereaved. She was a widow!

CHAPTER XII.

The trust that Mrs. Dene had put in Colonel Prinsep was fully justified. His conduct to Jane during their journey was as coldly courteous as she would have wished. Most of his time was spent in the adjoining compartment on the plea of wishing to smoke; but he came to the door of her carriage at every stopping-place to see if she required anything, and that she was provided with plenty of papers and some fruit.

"I am afraid I have not done my duty to my neighbor," he observed, as he took a seat, when nearing the end of their journey.

"That all depends," said Jane, "on where one's duty begins and ends. You have been very good in getting me papers. I have not read half of them yet, and the mangoes were delicious."

Both felt relieved when they reached their destination. Jane had jumped from the carriage before Colonel Prinsep could assist her and had flown to her father's side. She took his big brown hand in her own, and clasped it as though she would never let it go.

Mr. Knox was a little bewildered though flattered at his daughter's delight at seeing him again, in spite of the contrast he must afford to those with whom she had been. He looked down at her with critical fondness. Was it possible, in spite of the rapturous letters they had received from her every day, that she had not been happy with her fine friends?

But when Colonel Prinsep came up he forgot these doubts in seeing his evident consideration for Jane and attention to her wants. And the child accepted his civilities with such easy grace.

"Little minx! She has inherited this self-possession from her mother, whose proper pride, as she herself calls it, is generally equal to the most embarrassing occasions." For his part it was as much as he could do to keep his legs in an easy attitude, and he had even more difficulty in refraining from giving a military salute to his colonel, although in plain clothes.

To escape from what he felt to be an uncomfortable situation he moved away toward the luggage-van, swaggering in his walk the more noticeably that he was not entirely at his ease. Jane looked after him, and Stephen Prinsep looked at her.

A moment later their eyes had met, and Jane seemed to guess instinctively the reason of his former imperturbability. It was not because he did not care, but because he cared too much.

And Colonel Prinsep? He saw that she had surprised his secret in the same instant as he had realized that he had a secret to be concealed.

After answering at random her father's questions for about ten minutes, the knowledge that they were nearing home made her hasten to open the subject.

(To be continued.)

He Knew the Lines.

Certainly there is no more busy scene anywhere than in a railway baggage-room five minutes before the train starts. Just now the excitement in such places is at its height. I wonder how they manage to get the baggage aboard as well as they do. A friend of mine, who looked after the checking of my trunks the other day, had this to say on the subject:

"I got things attended to in quick time, for I gave the porter 25 cents, and you ought to have seen him hustle!

"He ignored a dozen clamoring people who had been there much longer than I, hunted up the trunks and pulled them from the mountain of baggage as if they were teeth.

"It wasn't a case of extracting without pain, though, I can assure you, for the rebellious dozen were very much pained indeed at the performance.

"'See here, porter, I gave you my checks long before this gentleman did.'

"'Mister, if you make me lose that train I'll sue the company. Here's my trunk right here.'

"'Here, porter, if you don't look sharp I'll complain to Mr. Depew. here's two trunks and a dress-suit case.'

"It was mean of me, I suppose, to take advantage of the people who didn't believe in or think about 'tipping,' but I was bound to get your trunks checked, and I did it. Nobody got left that I saw.

Has No Credit System.

Arizona has lots of things which the balance of the world can't boast of, among which Gila monsters are peculiar. But, perhaps, the most peculiar, and in one sense the most creditable—not only to Arizona, but to the world at large—is the conception of a Tempe grocer of that territory. He won't give credit. That is the inexorable law of his grocery store. He tells everybody to come and buy for cash, and when his customers tell him they have not got the cash, he tells them in his good-natured way: "Call at my counter and get it, and then buy what you want." The funny part of the business is that he does just what he says he will do, and this is how he does it: A customer makes out a list of the things he wants. It is submitted to the cashier. The cashier affixes the price to each item, adds up the amount, makes out a promissory note for the amount, presents it to the customer, the customer signs it, then—without discount—the customer is given the amount in cash and told to go forth into the store and buy the goods he has inscribed on his list. This Tempe grocer has solved a long-lost problem, one which the grocers will, in all probability, be only too glad to jump at. It gives them a promissory note and does away with that infernal nuisance of open debts which, under the laws of this and other States, it takes so long to recover on, with the chances of no recovery.—Los Angeles Times.

ALARMING REPORT OF THE POPE'S CONDITION.

Prediction Made that He Will Not Live the Winter Out—How the Pontiff's Days Are Spent—Vitality Centered in His Brain.

Day with the Pope.

Although it is not true that the Pope is dying, it is learned that his strength has rapidly declined during the last few months. His entourage is of the opinion that he will not survive the winter, and it is added that all his vitality seems to be centered in his brain.

In speaking of the pontiff's failing health, it is well to give a brief review of his daily life. The Pope usually rises at 7 o'clock, his chamber door having been previously unlocked by his faithful body servant, Centra. At night Leo XIII. locks the door of his bedroom with a key which never passes out of his hands, a second door being locked by Centra when his holiness is in bed. The Pope is thus practically a prisoner at night, but Centra is generally within call. This servant is a person of the greatest influence at the vatican; the pontiff relies upon him implicitly, and his trust is well placed.

As soon as the Pope is dressed by his valet in his white woolen cassock and wadded silk gown, he recites the prayers in his bedroom, passing directly afterward into a neighboring apartment, which has been arranged as an oratory. Here he is robed in sacerdotal garments by his private chamberlains, Mgr. Cagiano da Azevedo and Mgr. Bisletti. Mass is then celebrated, to which no strangers are admitted save on Sundays. The service occupies three-quarters of an hour, at the end of which time Leo XIII. returns to his bedroom, where Centra brings him the first of the numerous meals of soup and chocolate upon which he sustains a body described by a French writer as "so thin and meager that it seems to have escaped from one of the passions with which Crivelli and Mantegna decorated the walls of the vatican." If he has decided to give audience to any of the numerous pilgrims always in Rome, he receives them in the library after his frugal dejeuner. Supporting himself against a long table in the middle of the room, the Pope talks for some minutes with each of his visitors, asking their name, their country, and the history of their family. Although his manner of speaking is slow, its tone betrays the keen interest he bestows upon the veriest trifle. In addition, his memory is marvelous. He never forgets a face, and remembers the name of every Roman Catholic who has done the church signal service. To American and to English visitors he talks of the well-known men of their countries with the same certainty of his facts that would mark his conversation with one of his compatriots of Carpineto.

In the course of the morning Cardinal Rampolla, the pope's secretary of state, brings his master the political news of the day. This being discussed and arranged, if it be Tuesday or Friday, the household accounts are gone into and paid. The expenses at the vatican are very heavy, one authority estimating them at £1,000 a day, but, when the immense number of cardinals, chamberlains, servants and the personnel of the many papal institutions who live within the walls of the palace are remembered, it does not seem to be an outrageous cost. The pope is a keen man of business; not one item of expenditure escapes his eye, and he pays the bills from a coffer the key of which never leaves him. In the matter of carrying keys about with him, the pope has reminded more than one person of Goethe, who invariably had his keys, especially those of his library, hung round his waist, like a gaoler. At midday the audience is given to crowned heads or distinguished men. If the visitor is a sovereign the pope receives him in the throne room, surrounded by his cardinals, who retire as soon as the potentate has been introduced.

Lunch of the simplest fare follows, the menu consisting chiefly of eggs. This ended, the pope takes the air in the gardens of the vatican in a carriage, being carried to the garden in a chair through the galleries of the library. Escorted by two gendarmes and preceded by an officer, the carriage proceeds at a slow trot through the long walks bordered with oaks, six chair-bearers following on foot, as best they can, until a cascade overlooking St. Angelo is reached. Here the pope alights, and leaning on the arm of a chamberlain, or supporting himself with a cane, inspects a vine planted by himself at the foot of the Citta Leonina tower, the new battlements upon which have recently been added by the architect Vespignana by the pope's orders. This vine is said to be dearer to the pope than all the wonders of the vatican. He gathers its fruit with his own hands, and last year it yielded a fair quality of wine. Next to the vine the cultivation of roses is the pope's greatest pleasure.

His holiness frequently spends the better part of his day in the tower, reserving the upper story for himself. No one is allowed to enter it save himself, and should cardinals or princes desire urgent audience, they are received in a lower room hung with red silk. Leo, despite his advanced age, takes little rest, and works as industriously in the cool upper chamber of the Leonina tower during the hot hours of the Roman afternoon as he does in his study during the morning. From his windows he can see the city, lying beyond the walks and alleys of the vatican gardens, in the slumberous heat, tier upon tier, with the San Angelo fronting the Tiber, a relic of the temporal power once wielded by the pontiffs.

With sunset the pope's airing is over. As day slowly fades from the sky the chair-bearers in their red liveries appear at the door of the tower and carry him back to his carriage, and thence through the Raphael chambers and the galleries of the library to his private apartments, away from his vine and his roses, from the sunlight and fresh air, to the gloominess and seclusion of the palace. Having recited the rosary in company with one of his domestic prelates, the tireless pope sits down at his writing table and works until Centra attends him to bed, and the long day is done. Such is the major portion of the pontiff's life.

Origin of the Bell.

The oringin of the religious significance of the bell is not far to seek. Primeval man discovered that noise would frighten off troublesome or dangerous animals. There are plenty of stories of how bears, for example, were put to flight by unearthly yells. I have often seen cattle stampeded in that way in the West. When the noise is unusual few animals can resist its terrifying power, especially if they are taken unawares. Primeval man, governed by his imagination, thus came to regard certain noises as having a supernatural character, and so introduced them into his worship. As he advanced in knowledge he improved his means of making them until he developed the bell. He discovered also that noise is a source of enthusiasm, and for that reason he employed it in his worship. Many a time at a revival or camp meeting I have heard the preacher exhort those at the mourners' bench and around it to pray louder and sing louder, himself giving the example, all for the sake of enthusiasm. The bell in worship, Pagan as well as Jewish and Christian, is traceable to the effect which noise has on the mind of man and animal, if the animal has any mind.—Pittsburg Times.

He Knew.

The teacher of the Sunday school class was telling the little boys about temptation, and showing how it sometimes came in the most attractive attire. She used as an illustration the paw of a cat.

"Now," said she, "you have all seen the paw of a cat. It is as soft as velvet, isn't it?"

"Yesem," from the class.

"And you have seen the paw of a dog?"

"Yesem."

"Well, although the cat's paw seems like velvet, there is, nevertheless, concealed in it something that hurts. What is it?"

No answer.

"The dog bites," said the teacher, "when he is in anger; but what does the cat do?"

"Scratches," replied the boy.

"Correct," said the teacher, nodding her head approvingly. "Now what has the cat got that the dog hasn't?"

"Whiskers!" said a boy on the back seat. And the titter that ran round the class brought the lesson to an end.—Boston Courier.

To Rest the Eyes.

A medical journal says that in the continued use of the eyes, in such work as sewing, type-setting, bookkeeping, reading and studying, the saving point is in breaking off work at short intervals and looking around the room. This may be practiced every ten or fifteen minutes. By doing this the muscular tension is relieved, the eyes are rested, and the blood supply becomes better.

The Purse.

For several centuries the purse was always worn fastened to the girdle. A cut-purse got its name from the fact that rather than take the time to loose the purse from the belt, where it was secured by buckles, he cut the straps.

"What we need to do," said the new director, "is to establish a sinking fund." "Humph!" said the old director. "When you've been in here a while longer you'll have more sense. What we need is a fund that can keep its head above water."—Harper's Bazar.

"You can trust the man who sings at his work," said the cheery citizen. "Yes," replied Sinnicker; "I wish some one would persuade the man who works around my wood pile two or three nights a week to sing loud enough for me to hear him."—Washington Star.

Why Nothing Happened.

Once a careless man went to the cellar and stuck the candle in what he thought was a keg of black sand. He sat near it drinking wine, until the candle burned low. Nearer it got to the black sand—nearer and nearer, until the blaze reached the black sand; and as it was nothing but black sand nothing happened.

The Elections.

Yesterday's contest resulted generally in favor of the republicans. They carry New York, Ohio and Iowa, by pluralties much smaller than last year. They gain Maryland and New Jersey, which have generally been democratic, but the democrats in both these states are kicking against the rule of such bosses as Senator Gorman. The southern states have generally gone democratic, except Kentuckey, Ohio and Iowa were divided on the silver question. In New York, there were half a dozen different democratic tickets.

SURPRISE

The friends of Mrs. Wm. Spitler, went out to her home in Union township last evening and surprised her on her birthday. They hitched their teams near by and preceded by the grand mother, they marched in finding her at the supper table, and before she had time to get her breath had presented her a fine stand and other articles. She was greatly overcome by the sudden inroad of friends. Her husband, too, was a little rattled for he was just starting off to a neighbors and seeing the teams hitched there, was about to order them off, in the belief they were "campers" of some sort. Among those present were: Mrs. Henry Spitler, John Spitler, wife and son, of Cedarville, Milton Hollopeter and wife of near Leo; L. Spitler and family and Mr. and Mrs. R. S. S. Reed of this place.

Golden Bells.

October 23, 1895 was the golden anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Dermott in Concord township. To them there is a world of meaning in these two dates.

OCTOBER 23, 1845.
OCTOBER 23, 1895.

And the first announcement would have read:

"Married at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Asher Coburn, Mr. Jacob Dermott and Miss Phoebe Coburn." Rev. John F. Coburn officiating.

This time no announcement was needed, and the venerable minister has long since gone to his reward. But on this 23d of October, his children came together for a family reunion. There were born to Mr. and Mrs. Dermott, five children, one died in infancy, but the other four were present on this occasion; Miller, Marion and Evans, who live near, and Olive, now Mrs. Frank Cunningham whose home is in Paulding Co., Ohio. All the grandchildren were likewise present, so that it could be said:

Father, mother, sister, brother,
All who hold each other dear.
Each chair is filled, we're all at home.
It is not often thus around
The old familiar hearth we're found.
Bless then, the meeting and the spot.
For once, we every care forgot.

Of those present at the first wedding, besides the bride and groom only four are living, and of these two were children only a year old at the time. Two were able to be present at the golden anniversary, Mrs. Ackley, a sister of the bride, and Mrs Eldridge of Defiance, Ohio. No invitations were given outside the immediate members of the family except to the two named above, and Mrs Ackley's daughter, Belle and the husband of Mrs. Eldridge, Peter Eldridge.

It was a happy reunion and closed with oft expressed wishes that this worthy couple may enjoy many more family meetings.

Mrs. Capt. B. D. Gauby of Arcadia, Florida, has been here a few days a guest in the family of her brother, Horace Shoemaker. She will be better remembered here as Mrs. H. C. Feagler. She likes her present home in the land of flowers and fruit, but enjoys a visit to the old home in DeKalb. She will be at Waterloo this week to visit the family of her other brother E. R. Shoemaker.

Sure Cure For Croup.

Henry Wilson, the postmaster at Welshton Florida, says he cured a case of diarrhoea of long standing in 6 hours, with one small bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. What a pleasant surprise that must have been to the sufferer. Such cures are not unusual with this remedy. In many instances only one or two doses are required to give permanent relief. It can always be depended upon. When reduced with water it is pleasant to take. For sale at Robbins & McCords. 48

A Prominent Railroader's Remarks.

TERRE HAUTE, May 1, 1894.

Lyon Medicine Co., Indianapolis, Ind.:

DEAR SIRS—I wish to speak a kind word for LYON'S SEVEN WONDERS. During an attack of la grippe, from which I suffered greatly with stomach trouble, loss of appetite and general bad feelings, I was induced by a friend, who said it would remove all these troubles, to try your remedy. I admit I did not have much faith in them, but tried a box, and one box made me feel like a new man and did all my friend claimed they would. I believe them to be a long felt want in the medicine line.

Yours very truly,

It is truth in medicine that the smallest dose, that preforms a cure is the best. De Witt's Little Early Riser are the smallest pills, will preform a cure, and are the best.

As Will Wolf was coming up from the Junction with some baggage this afternoon one of his horses stumbled and fell at the crossing of Main and Defiance streets and cut its leg in a horrible manner.

It's just as easy to try One Minute Cough Cure as anything else. It's easier to cure a severe cough or cold with it. Let your next purchase for a cough be One Minute Cure. Better medicine; better results; better try it.

A Good Motto: "Crack and try before you buy." Next time you go to the grocers for crackers remember this and put it to practice. If you are a good judge FOX'S XXXX Square Wafers will please you best, no matter how many brands you try.

Will Wile has purchased the stock of groceries of A. J. and G. M. Ralston and to-day moved them to the Watson building at the south end. Mr. Wile will add new goods to this stock and keep a first-class grocery. We hope he may have a liberal share of patronage.

The new fee and salary law made last winter has been pronounced constitutional. This is for the best, because a poor law is better than no law. Officers have been on the anxious seat all the year, as to what salary was the legal salary, and now they can go on and work with minds at ease on that score.

The Eagle M'f'g Co. at Auburn Junction with Bremer and McGuire as proprietors, is now employing six men, making stoves and special lines of heavy hardware. The factory has lately been repaired. The business outlook for the Co. is good. They took off the first heat under the new management to-day.

Don't scold about Crackers being unpalatable, it's because you haven't got the right kind. Get FOX'S XXXX Square Wafer Butter Crackers has led others to imitate them. Be sure and take none of the cheap imitations having the same outward appearance or with similar names. See that the imprint "FOX" is on the Cracker.

Many newspapers are quoting what is alleged to be a section of the game law now in force and effect. Here is the section of the law now in force: Section 2209, Revised Statutes: Whoever shoots or destroys, or pursues for the purpose shooting or destroying, or has in his possession any quail or pheasant during the period from the first day of January of any year to the tenth day of November of the same year shall be fined in the sum of $2 for each quail or pheasant killed, and $1 for each quail or pheasant so pursued or had in his possession.

Mr. and Mrs. Amzia Brown, who lost their house and barn by fire Monday morning were in town to day. They are almost heart broken over their loss. The friends and neighbors, are assisting them in erecting a new house. I. M. Zent furnishes the doors and windows and other material as well as some financial aid. The loss is a very heavy one to Mr. Brown as he is still in debt on his farm.

A dispatch yesterday to some of the large dailies from Allegan, Mich., says that the Noble county, Indiana, officers who have been there from Kendallville, have returned, taking with them a confession from Jim Brown regarding the big Lake Shore train robbery at Kessler Siding, Indiana, September 11, 1893. Jim Brown is in Jail there, suspected of being one of the notorious Smalley gang who held up a Chicago and West Michigan train two months ago at Fennville, Michigan. The officers admit that nearly every male member of the Smalley family is implicated in the crime, and that John Smalley, who was killed by Michigan officers while resisting arrest, was one of the men named by Brown as having taken part in the Kessler hold up. They say that every living member of the gang will be apprehended within ten days.

Fox Leads—Others Follow. FOX'S XXXX Square WAFER Butter Crackers are being imitated by competitors. Do not be deceived by these inferior goods, but insist upon getting the genuine and original XXXX and see that the imprint "FOX" is on the Cracker. A trial will convince you of the superiority over all other.

J. C. Sommers, now at Pueblo, Colo., comes to the front with the subscription to the old reliable COURIER paying up to '97, the first case of the kind, we believe In a characteristic letter that has the ring of the Auburn days, he directs the COURIER man to use a part of it to get a Thanksgiving turkey. "It shall be so done."

Dunn's financial report for Oct. 26, is very encouraging in most lines of business. Gold exports have about ceased to alarm us. Retail trade is reported better. Cotton is selling at $45 a bale as against $29 last October and wheat in the grert centers at 70 instead of the 55 of last October. Exports are 40 per cent better, and imports 34 per cent better than at this time last year.

Do Not Be Deceived. FOX'S XXXX Square Wafer Butter Crackers are being imitated, but as yet unequaled. Dealers have been imposed upon by worthless goods represented to take their place. Insist upon your Grocer giving you Crackers with the imprint "FOX" on them. They are always fresh and crisp.

Mrs. Lottie Cochran at Ontario, California, sent a package of foliage and fruit of the pepper trees that line the famous avenue leading from that town to the hills several miles away. It was a gift to her old club, the L. L. C. which met Saturday at Mrs Ford's. The graceful boughs and slender leaves, as well as the pretty red berries, drew out a great deal of admiration. The pulpit at the Presbyterian church was decorated with them. They are lovely, but the ladies who satisfied a natural curiosity by chewing a few, admit that their beauty is only skin deep.

The case against Dennis Dove over in Wilmington township, came up before Squire Walter Saturday, for a final round up. It was found that the papers were not properly drawn, and so far not good. Prosecutor Welsheimer, was about to draw up new papers, when Mr. Dove concluded it would be the wisest course to plead guilty, and save costs. This he did and was fined a small sum, which with a small amount of costs, he will have to pay. It all arose from one of those unfortunate quarrels that will sometimes arise in the most peaceable neighborhoods. Had the suit gone on to trial it would have been expensive.

The Angola Magnet has the following to say concerning H. K. Scott's dogs:—"As a rule, there's no money in dogs, but Harry K. Scott's are of the exceptional kind. About six weeks ago, his female Cocker Spaniel became the mother of nine puppies—three females and six males—all robust and healthy. Being thoroughbreds, he had them registered at an expense of $2 each, or $18 for the lot. The males he sold for $10 each and the females for $5 each, realizing $75 for the litter. One goes to California, one to Detroit, and several of them to Ft. Wayne."

Will Olds drove up from the country to-day and brought his sunburn and tan with him, for he has acquired a ripe, rich hue since going out of the store onto the farm. Besides he has shown marked ability as a farmer, his crops being excellent. His father, S. N. Olds came up with him.

Convinced Against His Will.

Nearly everyone for miles around Morley, Mich., knows Chas. A. Jones, whose farm lies two and a half miles northwest of that village. His friends, and they were numerous, feared he would not long be spared to them, for the doctor pronounced him afflicted with heart disease and said he might drop dead any minute. This was not very pleasant reflection for his wife, who watched him almost constantly; once she found him where he fell unconscious in the yard. His appearance indicated paralysis, the doctors were called again, but they did understand his case, consequently couldn't do much for him. He was in this condition when he heard of Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer and its effectual use by others. He sent to Nelson Pike's drug store for a sample, and as he expressed it: "I had little faith in patent medicines, but something seemed to convince me that this was a good one and could be relied upon. Do you know I felt better and slept well after taking two doses? I want to say to you that Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer is the most wonderful medicine ever made. It cured me so completely that I never felt better in my life."

Mr Pike, who sold him the medicine, says: "I wouldn't have believed such a cure possible if I had not seen the change with my own eyes; it is certainly the most remarkable cure of my twenty-four years' experience in the drug business." It is equally as valuable for other nerve diseases, such as nervous prostration, spasms, fits, sleeplessness, mental depression, exhausted vitality, despondency, sexual and general debility. Lord Suckville West's latest effervescence takes the form of a tirade against the United States, printed for private circulation. In it he calls attention to the fact that he received an offer of $2,000 for a short season at a New York dime museum. In view of this he certainly cannot claim that he was not properly appreciated in this country.

A fruitful source of altercation, and ill-feeling, is the careless and superficial way in which we look at and into each other. We see in our cursory glance what is obvious and on the surface, especially the faults which annoy us or the manner which displeases us. But we fail to see into the depths of heart and soul; and thus our judgments are shallow and crude.

The total yield of cereals this year is placed at over three and a half billion bushels (3,600,000,000), or 1,300,000,000 bushels more than the production of last year. If we had 70,000,000 people in the country this would give 250 bushels to each family, with 100,000,000 bushels to spare. The figures are large, but no larger than the problem of marketing the surplus so as to get an approximation to its real value.

Remember that is is more blessed to give than to receive, and that by lightening the burdens of some struggling soul we may lighten our own. And when we find some poor fellow being buffeted by the winds of adversity, driven to the wall almost without hope, let yours be the hand stretched forth to him as a brother—let yours be the words that may arouse him to action again and save him from the depths of despair.

If it be true, as stated, that Gen. Harrison is earning legal fees that net him an income two or three times as large as that which the country paid him while he occupied the White House, there would seem to have been found an answer to the much-discussed question, "What shall be done with our ex-Presidents?" They are in no danger of starvation. No man who can step out of a petty compensation of $50,000 a year into a law practice of upward of $150,000 is likely to become an object of public charity. The country has not lost his services.

In selecting Benjamin Franklin as an historic character greatly to be honored, Mr. Medill, who proposes to erect in Chicago's Lincoln Park a bronze statue of Franklin, is, as might be expected of him, loyal to his craft, but he recognizes, as all men do, that Franklin was something more than a printer. He was statesman, philosopher, as well as man of affairs. Among the men who united the colonies and worked for American independence none was more useful, though his field was not the theater of war, than Benjamin Franklin. He was prudent, sagacious, far-seeing. Among American patriots he had probably the shrewdest and hardest head. Without the assistance of France the American revolution would have failed. In procuring the aid of France Franklin, though he had associates, was the great persuasive force. He was one of the very first men of his time. His talents were comprehensive. He would have made a great captain if his field of service had not lain in other directions. Had Braddock followed his advice his campaign against Fort Duquesne, instead of an overwhelming disaster, would have been a success. He was postmaster general in the colonial days, and in that service showed thorough executive ability. Whether his home was Philadelphia or Boston, he was easily its most public-spirited citizen. A shrewd philanthropist, his benefactions are felt to this day. Mr. Medill's choice of a subject for monumental honors is characteristic and felicitous. His gift is generous, public spirited and commendable.

Women Make Poor Spies.

Women are not good detectives, said an experienced secret service man, on being asked his opinion by a New York Herald man. To begin with, there are many places to which a woman cannot go without exciting suspicion and this defeats her object at the outset, but beyond this a woman is unfitted by nature for detective work.

In the first place, she jumps at a conclusion and acts on it in opposition to all human probabilities, possibilities and reason. As a rule, a woman does not reason. She looks on a thing as she wants it to be or thinks it ought to be and will follow that theory. She is led by prejudices, favors or sympathies, regardless of facts. As a detective she is sometimes a success in entrapping a man, but her work generally ends in a blunder which betrays her. She is persevering only when moved by passion. She does not look at a case dispassionately. She at once decides that he or she is guilty or innocent and works on that theory.

A woman enjoys the mysterious, and she is so elated at her position as detective that she is unable to conceal her identity, or the secret investigation of a case.

Women are even failures in running down criminals of their own sex. A woman criminal will mislead a woman detective by working on her vanity, credulity or sympathy, and worst of all, if the detective be attractive and the man criminal handsome—well, a man is better for detective work.

Purity Ladies Go Slumming.

A party of lady delegates to the Purity congress, in session in Baltimore, Md., went slumming on Thursday. They started out at midnight, escorted by two ministers, four newspaper men and two police sergeants. In the first house which the party invaded four young women were seated in the parlor. These saw the ladies in the party as they filed up the steps, and each of them took to her heels and fled into the basement. Mrs. Edholm, the leader of the slummers, followed them, and in a minute or so she had persuaded them all to return to the first floor. There she and her associates stood up in the center of the floor and sang "Jesus, Lover of My Soul." This was followed by a brief prayer and Mrs. Edholm spent a minute or two talking to each of the women about their life in such a place. This program was followed in a number of houses. Most of the women made no objection to the visitors coming into the house, and listened with interest to what they had to say. Some of them were disposed to argue the question with Mrs. Edholm, and one young girl, who did not look to be over 16 years of age, spoke bitterly of the fact that starvation wages had much to with driving young girls to such houses. Many of the girls cried as Mrs. Edholm talked to them.

Frank Lenz's Bicycle.

The bicycle which Frank Lenz was riding on his trip around the world when he was murdered in Asia Minor, arrived at Philadelphia yesterday on the steamship Pennland, from Liverpool. It is consigned to friends in Cincinnati. The machine bore evidence of rough usage, no doubt caused by having lain in the sun for several months before being discovered by those sent in search of the unfortunate man. Some parts of the wheel are broken, and in other parts it is disconnected, evidently the work of the murderous Kurds in their attempts to use the vehicle.—Philadelphia Record.

THE CAMERA A DETECTIVE.

Many criminals have escaped punishment because the public prosecutor has been unable to establish their guilt save by scientific deduction, the jury, in hundreds of well-known cases, refusing to be convinced by verbal or written testimony. Now a new application of photography, with images magnified through the microscope, has come to their aid. A jury may now receive tangible proofs of absolute correctness of evidence submitted. It can follow the expert's flight into unknown regions by means of illustrations; in fact it can see with its own eyes, where formerly it had been asked to make its observations through the eyes of another.

To illustrate the possibilities of photomicrography, it may be mentioned that a man magnified microscopically in a camera would appear as high as Mount Washington. A drop of blood, a single hair, a particle of skin that may be found under the finger nails of a person suspected of murder—photomicrography will tell the tale. It will establish whether the blood found is from a human being or not, whether it is from the person murdered or from that of the supposed murderer. Almost the same holds good with respect to hair. It can be determined whether the hair is from a male or female; be it ever so small, it can be matched with the hair of the suspected person.

To fully appreciate this, it must be understood that human hair differs vastly, "no two hairs alike," says a scientist. A hair possesses a root, a shaft and a tip. The root is imbedded in the hair follicle, while the shaft and tip form the free projecting part. The substance of the human hair is composed of a horny material, with many cells containing the pigment granules. In the thicker hair (in a man's beard hair, for instance), these cells contain air. The hair roots of the female are lank and thin; those from a man's head are club shaped. The tips of the woman's hair show that they have not been cut for a great many years, while those of the man's head clearly exhibit the marks of the scissors where the tips have been cut from the shaft.

When the finger nails of the former are scraped even the minutest particles of skin will be found, and this skin, put under the microscope, will demonstrate its own origin. Like experiments can be made with the accumulations under the finger nails of the murdered person, who, in the struggle with the murderer, may have scratched his victim.

or asbestos cloth, proof against fire, heat, steam, boiling water and all poisonous gases. The invention is airtight, a supply reservoir at the back carrying 100 pounds pressure of compressed air. An air pump enables the wearer to recharge the helmet in forty seconds.

Fresh air is continually forced into the helmet and foul air expelled. The eyelets, or lookouts, are made of clear mica and protected with cross wires. An ear-plate with a special diaphragm renders hearing perfectly distinct. A horn in front of the helmet enables the wearer to signal for assistance at any time, and the weight of the helmet is but five pounds.

MALICIOUSLY FALSE.

REPUBLICAN MISREPRESENTATION OF CLEVELAND.

New York Platform Makes a Groundless Charge—Real Enemies of American Industries Are McKinley and His Followers.

The Real Enemies of Industry.

The platform adopted by the New York State Republican Convention makes the silly protectionist charge that President Cleveland is an enemy of American industry. This groundless assertion is repeated by the New York Press, which claims that it is justified by the President's tariff message of 1887, and that in a speech delivered in 1892 President Cleveland again declared himself opposed to the manufacturing interests of the country.

There is not the slightest excuse for these malicious inventions of the Republicans. The pretense that opposition to granting special favors to monopolies means enmity to industry is too absurd to be believed by even the credulous followers of McKinley.

Instead of atacking our industries, President Cleveland has always objected to protection on the ground that high tariffs hamper industry and injure both employer and workingmen. The strongest indictment which he brought against the McKinley tariff was the undeniable fact that it imposed heavy burdens on the raw materials of many important industries, thus checking the establishment and growth of factories in which those raw materials might have been converted into finished goods. Nor did he fail to point out that the result of trade-restricting tariffs is to lessen foreign commerce by decreasing the opportunities for our industries to find a market for their surplus products. It was because of his position in favoring the abolition of high taxation on the materials of industry that the business men of the country joined with the farmers and workers in electing him President by a sweeping majority over the protectionist candidate.

The real enemies of American industry are William McKinley and his superstitious followers, who want to tie the manufacturers hand and foot with restrictive laws, and to restore a policy which but a short time ago plunged the country into poverty and suffering. Not satisfied with the ruin wrought in 1893 and the first half of 1894, these agitators are clamoring for another opportunity to again wreck the manufacturing interests of the country. They make no concealment of their intention to check the prosperity of the woolen industry by imposing heavy taxes on wool. They wish to shut out foreign iron ores, which are now so necessary to our iron and steel manufacturers. They are resolved that our great furniture industry shall no longer have the benefit of free lumber. And so on through the list of industries.

Republicans would do well to stop talking about enmity to industries. The people know that the Democratic policy means prosperity, while protection means shackles and burdens for both trade and manufacturing. False charges against the tariff reform leader will not blind the public to the acts of the late Republican administration.

B. Harrison, Tariff Reformer.

"It is plain here," says an Indianapolis dispatch to a Chicago Republican organ, "Mr. Harrison's friends will refuse to shoulder any responsibility for the McKinley tariff, and in the event of his nomination by the next Republican convention the campaign will be made on the question of tariff reform largely." Harrison among the tariff reformers! Saul among the prophets!

The Indianapolis statesman may refuse to shoulder responsibility for the McKinley tariff, but he cannot shirk responsibility for his own utterances before he was President and during his Presidency. The country has not forgotten the ex-President's definition of the "ideal condition." He told the farmer's when he was swinging around the circle, that this was the condition in which they would carry their produce to the factory in the farm wagon and carry home the manufactured product. And he professed to be in favor of a tariff which would bring about that condition. Such a tariff would distance even that of Mexico. It would have to be made practically prohibitory and applied not only on every State line but every county line, and not only on every county line but every township line. That would be the ideal tariff to produce the ideal condition.

Perhaps it is the question of tariff reform along these lines upon which the campaign will be made in the event of the nomination of Harrison next year by the Republicans. If Mr. Harrison is in favor of any more liberal sort of tariff reform he has never made the fact known since his appearance on the stage of national politics a quarter of a century ago.

A Forced Issue.

One or two of our Republican contemporaries seem to find it necessary to remind the party in this State with which they are connected that the main issue is the tariff issue, and that it is undesirable to have the discussion switched off from that track and devoted to a variety of State concerns. We dare say that those who are stumping the State in the Republican interest find it necessary to discuss those subjects which seem likely to interest their hearers, and that if under such circumstances the tariff is practically given the go-by it is because these orators are discovering that, so far as popular interest is concerned, the tariff is distinctly a back number. They may, in a few perfunctory sentences, affirm the need of a restoration of McKinleyism, but having done this, and having noticed the apathetic manner in which such statements are received by the audience, the clever stump orators who have their hands, so to speak, on the pulse of their hearers, find that to continue on this theme is to run the risk of having themselves voted bores; hence, to the grief of some of our contemporaries, who sleep, eat, drink and live in the atmosphere of protection, they let the subject drop and take up a number of very much more attractive themes.—Boston Herald.

Frank, Indeed.

Chairman John R. Tanner has cut loose from Senator Cullom as a Presidential candidate. He says the delegates from Illinois in the Republican national convention have for years "frittered away their strength for impossible favorite sons" (meaning Cullom), and that now they should unite with other great States not to secure a presidential candidate, but to "obtain recognition" of the President when elected. The proposition is intelligible in its brutal force and audacity. Hereafter the vote of Illinois in Republican conventions is not to be at the disposal of Cullom nor anybody else as a Presidential candidate, but is to be auctioned off to the best bidder for the offices and spoils of the administration. That is frank, to say the least.

Why Wheat Exports Have Been Small.

Protectionist papers are trying to make capital out of the fact that our exports of wheat have not increased in proportion to the exports of manufactured goods. With the usual Republican dishonesty they claim that the falling off in wheat shipments is due to the Wilson tariff, and that instead of opening up new markets for farm products the Democratic policy has had the contrary effect.

It is hardly possible that any farmers can be run back to the support of the protection swindle by such shallow arguments. That the reduction of tariff duties has nothing whatever to do with the assured foreign demand for our wheat, must be evident to every one who knows anything of the conditions under which our surplus wheat goes abroad. These conditions are the size of the crops in other countries and the price in this country as compared with our competitors. Lower duties certainly did not make bigger crops in Europe, or lower prices for wheat in other countries. On the other hand, it is certain that protection does shut our wheat out of foreign markets. First, by the protection tariffs on wheat levied by France, Germany, Spain and other European nations. Another way in which protection injured our wheat growers was by depriving foreigners of our markets for their goods. Forced to sell in India, Russia and the Argentine Republic, the manufactured articles sold in this country previous to the adoption of the McKinley tariff, Great Britain and other nations naturally developed a trade in wheat with those countries. The result is that a large quantity of the wheat formerly supplied by the United States now comes from other sources. And this is a sample of how protection helps the farmer.

Canned Goods Industry Prosperous.

President Seager of the Western Canned Goods Association reports that the past season has been an unusually active one for the canning business in this country. In quality as well as quantity this year's pack of corn will be greatly superior to last year's. Much larger quantities of both peaches and tomatoes have been canned in the East, and the quality is said to be excellent. Similar reports are made as to apples, peaches, beans, peas, cherries, berries and other fruits.

This satisfactory condition of an important industry is largely due to the Democratic reduction of 50 per cent in the tariff on tin plate. The immediate effects of the McKinley tariff have been the serious hampering of the canning industry by the great increase in the cost of tin plate. At the same time the high tariff hard times, by decreasing the purchasing power of the people, caused a general falling off in the demand for the canners' products. With cheaper tin, and with an improved market for their goods, owing to increased employment and higher wages, the business of the canners is booming. If they read Republican papers they will learn that they are being ruined by tariff reform. But protectionist theories are never disturbed by such little things as facts.

Political Campaigns and Woolen Mills.

For campaign purposes the woolen industry is certainly in a very deplorable condition; but it is otherwise doing fairly well. The Springfield (Mass.) Republican, an excellent authority, says: "Sales of wool at Boston last week reached the unprecedented amount of 11,914,000 pounds. This does not represent the mills to be in a very depressed state. In fact, even the tariff calamity people say the woolen goods market is in a better position than it has been, and the mills are mostly doing well."—Philadelphia Record.

He Doesn't Want to Hear of It.

The shipment of five hundred tons of wash-metal product, which has just been made to England by the Youngstown Steel Company, "is the first consignment of a large order, and in sending the metal to the old country Youngstown's industries competed against the world." Youngstown, it may be added, is in the eastern part of Ohio. Unfortunately, it is so far from the State capital that Governor McKinley may never get to hear of this auspicious shipment.

Not Ruined as Promised.

The imports of hides and skins for the eight months ending with August show an increase of $13,000,000, or more than 100 per cent above the imports of the corresponding eight months of 1894. This increase is due in part to the shortage in American hides, but it shows that the business of making shoes is going on with increasing activity under a tariff which McKinley thought would ruin the country.—New York World.

Stepping Out of the Frying Pan.

One of ex-President Harrison's friends claim that the man who signed the McKinley bill was wholly blameless for any bad political effects resulting from it in 1892. Was Harrison a party manikin or was he President?—Springfield, Mass., Republican.

Hard for McKinley to Explain.

Every factory in Cleveland, Ohio, is working day and night to try to catch up with the orders that they are behind on. This is a little rough on McKinley, and is an argument that it is hard for him to answer when he pleads for high protection.—Peoria Herald.

Pastil to Prevent Fatigue.

Much has been heard of late c. drugs, leaves of plants, etc., with the property of conferring upon mankind the power to withstand fatigue. A pastil which is said to take the place of food and drink was lately tested on a company of Roumanian soldiers who completed a march of seventy-five miles in twenty-seven hours, and whose sole food during that time was in the form of these pastils. First, each man had a pastil every half hour, and later on, three every hour; at the same time the pastils dissolved in a small quantity of water were supplied to the horses which accompanied the troop. At the conclusion of the march both men and officers declared that they felt no fatigue whatever, and spoke highly of the sustaining powers of the new preparation. The pastils are said to contain a large quantity of caffeine.

A Ready Answer.

When Admiral Stephen B. Luce was a young Lieutenant on the old ship Constellation he was known equally for his capabilities as an officer and for his roystering tendencies. His readiness of wit was also a marked quality, as is shown by the following story, that is a favorite in the ward-rooms of the navy to this day: The ship was at Newport and the Lieutenant entered fully into the pleasures of that gay city. As he went aboard one evening, after an afternoon out, the officer of the deck noticed that his step was not as steady as it might be, and in his sternest tones, said: "Mr. Luce, you're tight, sir!" Quick as a flash came the answer: "If Stephen B. Luce, how can he be tight, sir?" The future Admiral heard no more of the matter.—Cincinnati Times-Star.

THE BLUES.

Why do Women have the Blues more than Men?

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

Are not women naturally as light-hearted, brave, and hopeful as men?

Yes; but woman's organism is different from man's.

Women in perfect or good health are rarely victims of this symptom.

Women nearly monopolize the blues, because their peculiar ailments promote them.

When the female organs fail to perform their functions properly, when the dreaded female complaints appear, there is shown nervousness, sleeplessness, faintness, backache, headache, bearing-down pains, etc., causing the dreaded "let-me-alone" and "all-gone" feelings.

When the woman does not understand what the matter is, and her doctor can not or will not tell her, she grows morose and melancholy; that's the blues.

Mrs. Newton Cobb, of Manchester, O., says: "Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will correct all this trouble. I cannot praise it enough. I am pleased to tell every one that it cured me; and if it will cure me, why not others? I am sure my case was severe enough." It will. Get it of your druggist at once.

The Greatest Medical Discovery of the Age.

KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DONALD KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, MASS.,

Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor). He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston. Send postal card for book.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it. Read the label.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime. Sold by all Druggists.

GOWNS AND GOWNING

WOMEN GIVE MUCH ATTENTION TO WHAT THEY WEAR.

Brief Glances at Fancies Feminine, Frivolous, Mayhap, and Yet Offered in the Hope that the Reading Prove Restful to Wearied Womankind.

Gossip from Gay Gotham.

New York correspondence:

COSTLY as are newly fashionable fabrics, they are not one whit behind the trimmings that are displayed for use with them. Women are accustomed to finding new sorts of goods expensive, so in the present extravagant showing of them there is little of the unexpected, but it is carrying the thing almost too far to demand, besides, a big outlay for garniture.

Fur appears in strange companionships, too, and is added to all sorts of dainty combinations of lace, ribbon, spangles and jewels that are put together and sold by the yard. Thus, an inch wide velvet has edges of lace a thumb nail wide and crusted with jewels. Set on the edge of this lace there is a little frill of lace, and under the frill lies a band of fur. This combination is used for collars, belts and for the strapping and loose drooping bands so much used on bodices. It is expensive, but by the use of something of the sort a very dressy effect is given to the plainest gown. Spangled passementerie, however, isn't always made up so exclusively, and in many of its less elaborate forms it is quite handsome enough to prove a great addition to a dress. If the woman who must be content with a trimming of moderate cost will only find some novel way of applying it, she can then be quite as sure of herself in her new gown as if its garnitures cost many dollars a yard. The method portrayed in this small picture is a good one, and though it involves a good deal of passementerie, there is no need of the rare sorts. Spangles were plentiful on the kind used here, which was employed on dark leaf green cashmere. The nine gored skirt was six and a half yards wide, and the fitted jacket bodice had a vest of the same goods with scalloped edge, shawl collar and revers. The bodice's loose fronts had straps and buttons to loop across, and at the top there was a sailor collar of green velvet.

Wherever dressmakers think they are going to when Father Time cuts them off and stops their presenting bills is a doubtful matter, for they are almost unanimous in declaring that stiffening is not used in skirts. Even if they can adjust their consciences satisfactorily to this statement, how are they going to convince their customers that the folds of the new skirts hold their own without such aid? The makers of the material will declare that the weaving is superior, but it is nearer the truth to say that either a stiffening skirt is worn under the dress, or there is just a bit of haircloth or one of its several substitutes to encourage that perkiness that is a part of all the pretty dresses of today. This may seem like a dreadful arraignment in one fell swoop of a lot of women, but how else are such skirts as that just described to be accounted for? Or an even more difficult one to explain without some such method is that of the next picture. How is a woman to attain such precise folds, and to have and to hold, as devisors say, if not by stiffening? However, for the woman who is having new dresses made, the main point is to make sure of 'em, let the means be what they may.

AN ODD STRAP DESIGN.

This second costume, besides proving dressmakers' wiles, is notable for its handsome combination of plain and plaided stuffs, in the former dark woolen suiting, and the latter Scotch plaid velvet—after the general manner that is now deemed admirable. The bodice of the suiting has a yoke in back and front of the plaid, and is slashed twice in front to show insertings of the same. The edge of the plain stuff can be embroidered, or can be finished with silk galloon, and the collar, belt and sleeves are fashioned entirely of the plaid material. A point in this costume that makes it especially tasteful is the use of the same plaid in the hat trimming.

These many uses of plaids in adorning plain stuffs are now safely beyond faddish fancy, and may be safely copied. Of course, the notion is carried to an extreme by women of freakish tastes, as all other fashions are. Such women go in for plain silk stockings when the skirt lining is a plaid to correspond. This comes of following the fanciful rule of having the stocking match the lining of the skirt and not the skirt. Underwear even is being shown run through with narrow ribbon, all bright plaid. There is a prettiness probably about anything new, but there seems a lack of restfulness about a plaid when it appears in underwear. Nor is any advice intended here to further such nonsensical notions, for there are uses a-plenty for plaids that are legitimate and sensible. One has already been shown and described, and another appears in the next sketch, in the plaid panel of the skirt, which is, moreover, a forerunner of the petticoat styles that are to be. A mouse-gray suiting is this gown's chief fabric, and its strap garniture is thoroughly original, while its sleeves are of the newest, having four tucks in the puffs at the shoulder. In some models these tucks are repeated lower down on the puffs, and in some cases there is more extent of tucks than of puffs.

Petticoat styles, fancy coats and ornate jacket bodices originated in the same era, according to fashion's historians, and as these same historians are designers, they should know, for designing nowadays consists in large degree of modifying and adapting old-time styles. Now, these delvers in the modes of centuries past declare that petticoats styles and coats and jackets are to be all the go soon. They said the same several months ago, but never mind, hints of these fashions are now appearing. A suggestion of the petticoat appeared in the last picture, and in the next there's as dainty a jacket as ever was donned in the days of the Louis. It is of mordore-velvet, its fronts turning back in white satin revers that are edged with metal galloon, the turned-back cuffs being to match. A ruffle of lace finishes each wrist, the stock collar also has a narrower ruffle, and two ends of lace hang down in front and are held with a rosette at the neck. The accompanying skirt and the vest are of mordore cloth, the latter fastening at the side.

The dowager has not dressed so magnificently for years. The richest brocades are shown for her, velvets that are overlaid with shot silk design and that glitter with interwoven bullion are reserved for her use, black, purple, plum color, green and all the dark shades of brown and bronze are hers, if she will. Satin that can not only stand alone, but that seems ready to walk, is made for her alone, and she is encouraged to wear all the lace and jewels she can muster. If the granddaughter of the day affects the simplicity of the ingenue, the grandmother of the hour makes up for it by her magnificence. Take a look at the final picture and be convinced of this. Here is a dress of flowered Louis XVI., whose skirt is trimmed on the sides with panels of dark-cream lace, each of which is held in place by three jeweled buttons. Than the silk foundation of the blouse waist is draped with accordion-pleated chiffon, and a high corselet belt of plain silk comes about the waist. At the top where the edge of a yoke would come are put a series of lace points, and a full chiffon ruche finishes the neck. Jeweled buttons matching those on the skirt are put on the sleeves, and the whole is elegant enough to offset the simple attire of a half dozen marriageable daughters.

Blues, too, are the dowager's, if she wants them, but the late lamented cornflower blue is not on the list. It is lamented, however, because it never should have been made fashionable, not because it is now missed, and the only possible use for it at present is to cover it with black chiffon, and use jeweled trimming that will show ruby, green and yellow, so that the glint of the trying vivid shade may be toned down. But there is one other use for it; give it to someone you don't like!

DEDICATED TO THESPIS.

Blaine's Washington Mansion Supplanted by a Model Theater.

On the spot in Washington city where the attempt to assassinate Seward was made, where James G. Blaine died and where Gen. Sickles shot down the man who betrayed him, there now stands a theater. If ever a theater had a "hoodoo" to overcome, this should be one. Since the old mansion, which it has displaced, was built, in the year 1818, a continual succession of misfortune, tragedy and disaster has lingered around the spot. Lillian Russell opened the theater a few nights ago, and all the diplomatic and official life of Washington was present. Among the crowd were many who started at every unwonted noise and looked nervously at the walls between acts. They knew the traditions of the place and feared disaster.

It took a brave man to decide to locate such a hothouse plant as a theater upon the plot occupied by the old Blaine mansion. Ever since it was built the house has been regarded as unlucky. Tragedy after tragedy was enacted either within its walls or just outside its door. The attempted assassination of Secretary Seward was made in the old Blaine house. Gen. Sickles shot down Key in front of the door. Mr. Blaine had not lived in the house a year before his eldest son died. Two other children followed, and finally Mr. Blaine died there. There was probably not another private dwelling in the city around which centered so many recollections of famous men and sensational incidents in the history of this country. The building was first erected in 1816 and was intended for a swell boarding house. It was in those days considered a marvel of architectural grandeur. During the war the house was occupied by W. H. Seward, President Lincoln's Secretary of State. Strangely enough, it was in the same room in which Mr. Blaine died that Secretary Seward's assassination was attempted. Mr. Blaine moved into the building in the fall of 1889, while he was Secretary of State under President Harrison. He declared himself superior to "hoodoos" and was attracted to the house because of its convenient location.

It was not without trouble that the Lafayette Theater, as it is called, was built, and Congress was twice asked to stop the building. The house next door to the Blaine mansion is occupied by Senator Don Cameron, and to say he objected to having a theater with a prospective roof garden right next door to him is putting it mildly. The locality is filled with fine residences. The White House is just across the street, two of Washington's swellest clubs are near by, and the Arlington Hotel is nearly opposite. Each and every one of these strenuously objected to the new theater being built in their neighborhood. There was, however, no law to stop the building, and Congress refused to pass one either for the indignant Senator or anybody else. Now that the theater is up, there is less objection to it. The building is architecturally perfect and will be a really first-class theater. Possibly to guard against the spirit of misfortune which is supposed to hang around the spot, every invention that would help to make the building safe has been utilized in its construction. It is the boast of its builders that there is not enough wood in the place to start a fire in a grate.

Plucking the Ostrich.

The ostrich is first picked when about seven months old, and every seven months after that. The valuable feathes are found on the wings and tail. The third plucking is usually very good, and one hundred dollars is usually realized from each bird at a plucking. If the feather is not "ripe" when plucking time comes it is cut off with shears. A ripe quill stem drops out of its own accord. When the proper time has come to pluck an ostrich, he is cajoled by means of an orange or other tidbit until he is headed for a small, box-like inclosure, just large enough to hold him; a man slips in behind him, and, with a sudden rush, shoves him into the pen and clasps the door shut. Here the bird has no room to kick, and is at the mercy of the shearers. Ostriches cannot get over or under a railing four feet high. This is, therefore, all the fence necessary to keep them confined.

A Small Principality.

One of the smallest monarchies in Europe is the principality of Lichtenstein, wedged in between Austria and Switzerland. It measures about fifty square miles and has a population of 6,000 all told. Lately its parliament of fifteen members accused the sovereign of violating the constitution. Thereupon the Prince simply prorogued the parliament "until further notice," and now all is quiet again along the waters of the Rhine.

A Valuable Dime.

Whoever has a dime of 1894, coined by the San Francisco mint, has a coin for which $5 has already been offered, and when all the facts are known regarding its scarcity it is not unlikely that it will command a much higher premium.

Inquiry at the mint elicited the information that during the fiscal year of 1894 only twenty-four dimes were coined at the San Francisco mint. How this came aboue was told by Chief Clerk Robert Barnett.

"All undercurrent subsidary coins, viz., those containing other than the design now being used when received at the sub-treasury, are not again allowed to go into circulation, but are sent to the mint to be recoined with the current design. In the course of the year 1894 we received a large sum in these coins, but having an ample stock of dimes on hand, it was not intended to coin any of that denomination in 1894. However, when nearly all or this subsidiary coin bullion had been utilized, we found on our hands a quantity that would coin to advantage only into dimes and into dimes it was coined, making just twenty-four of them.

"My attention was first drawn to the matter particularly by the receipt of a letter from a collector somewhere East requesting a set of the coin 1894. In filling this order I found there were no dimes of that date on hand. Subsequently I received quite a number of similar letters, and in each case was, of course, unable to furnish the dimes.

"Plenty of dimes were coined that year at Philadelphia and New Orleans mints, but there are meny collectors who accumulate the coinage of each mint, as each has its distinguishing mark. Those coined here bear a letter 'S' under the eagle. New Orleans used the letter 'O' and Carson City the letter 'C,' while Philadelphia coins are identified by the absence of the letter.

"We receive each year about fifty requests from coin collectors for coins, mostly for those of silver."—San Francisco Call.

THE length of either day or night can be easily and accurately reckoned by the following simple rule: Multiply the hour of the sun's rising by two, and it will give the length of the night; multiply the hour of setting by two, and get the length of the day. Thus, take a day when the sun rises at 6:30 and sets at 5:30. Apply the rule, and you have a night of thirteen hours and a day of eleven. The rule will be found absolutely accurate at any season of the year.

RIPANS TABULES

Mr. A. P. St. John, a citizen of Oregon, Wisconsin, in an interview had with D. E. Williams, of the Oregon Observer, on the 6th day of May, 1895, said: "For a long time I have been more or less troubled with dyspepsia. Having considerable hard work to do, if I followed the cravings of my appetite it was sure to result in those terrible distressing pains of the stomach. When in the most agony I would endeavor to obtain partial relief by some 'grandmother' treatment, which, if of any benefit, was to strengthen the imagination that the distress was a trifle less. At times I have suffered intensely. While visiting my sister Cora I was recommended to try Ripans Tabules, which I soon discovered were a blessing to mankind. Now I am never without them, and am pleased to recommend them as a Godsend to those troubled with dyspepsia."

Ripans Tabules are sold by druggists, or by mail if the price (50 cents a box) is sent to The Ripans Chemical Company, No. 10 Spruce Street, New York. Sample vial, 10 cents.

KESSLER ROBBERY.

JAMES BROWM TELLS THE STORY A PART OF WHICH IS GIVEN BELOW.

The Work was Done by three men. How they Divided the Money.

Saturday's Daily.

James Brown who has been in jail at Allegan, Mich., charged with being one of the Kessler train robbers, made a confession yesterday. As briefly noted in the DAILY Governor Mathews had issued a requisition, for the return of Brown to Indiana and he was taken to Kendallville last night. In his confession he says:

"I went with Abe Smalley and John Smalley into the woods, near Kessler crossing, on the morning of September 12, 1893. We stayed there all day waiting for darkness. Abe and John in the meantime looking up the railroad guide to find the exact time when the express train would come along. About 12 o'clock the train came along and ran in to an open switch, we had set. As soon as the train had been fixed we dynamited the express car. John Smalley kept up a constant firing to frighten the passengers, and Abe and I worked at the express safe. We finally got it open. Abe took four sacks out of the safe, one at a time, and then threw them on the ground. Abe looked around and said, "All right," jumped out of the car, and I followed. Abe and I took the sacks; there were two heavy ones and two light ones. After getting the money we then left the train and took to the woods and waited till daylight. After daylight we opened the sacks, took out the money and counted it. Abe did the counting. There was between $15,000 and $16,000. We divided it up and I got about $5,000, I saw a $1,000 bill and we drew cuts for it. Abe got it. I did mine up in my handkerchief and put it in my pocket We did up the papers that were of no account and buried them in the woods. We stayed about eighty rods from our first camp for three days after the robbery, and finally we got around home to Brinton. I don't know who was in the Fennville robbery. I did not see John Smalley to speak to in August. I saw him go along the road on August 20, 1895."

Referring again to Abe Smalley, Brown said:

"Abe has a scar on the small of his back, done by a Winchester at the Coffeyville raid. He told me about being in the Coffeyville raid, and that he had got shot, and showed me the scar."

Brown told Sheriff where a part of the plunder was secreted, and he, with Detective John Bryne, of Buffalo, N Y, in the employ of the United States Express company, and C. E. Needham, of Elkhart, Ind., claim agent of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern railway, went up to Isabella county to the home of Jim's parents. There they found buried in a tin can, in the yard, $1,565 in currency. In another spot $80 in gold and 50 cents in silver was found buried. The officers also found a shotgun, revolver silver watch and a ladies' gold watch all of which Jim said had been bought with the proceeds of the robbery.

Brown, referring to the prospect of being taken to Indiana for trial says: "If they take me down there and hang me for a woman being killed, they will hang an innocent man. I am innocent of any murder."

Champhor not a Very New Drug.

An ingenious chemist of Dayton, Ohio, has compounded from a number of little known camphors, a balm known as Pretzinger's Catarrh Balm, that has met with a most remarkable sale, and he is now on the high road to fortune and wealth, as it seems to be the only catarrh remedy that is a sure cure. There is nothing new about camphors, & their healing properties are well known. Everybody with catarrh or cold in the head uses "Pretzinger's." This wonderful success has raised the question among a good many as to how old camphor, as a drug, was. But we have to go down the long ages of history to find the starting point. Camphor was used amoung the Phoenicians at the earliest dawn of history; the Egyptians six thousand years ago knew all about it; the Chinese have used for at least five thousand years The Dayton chemist was bright to use so ancient a remedy, and well deserves the fortune he will make out of it. The healing properties of the camphors instantly allay the inflammation of the nasal organs and open up the passages so that easy, comfortable breathing is possible The old scabs & sores yield readily and quickly disappear The horrible choking sensation so common, stops at once. Pretzinger's dose not seem to be a secret remedy at all, and well known physicians prescribe it constantly in their practice. A small sample can be had by sending a two-cent stamp to Pretzinger Bro., Chemists, Dayton, Ohio.

Earthquakes In U. S.

THE RECORD FROM 1638 DOWN TO THE PRESENT TIME.

Scientists are not yet fully agreed as to the causes of earthquakes. For many years they were so imperfectly noted that observations afforded little basis for the study of these phenomena.

Modern authorities on earthquakes believe that it is a vibratory motion propagated through the solid materials of the earth much in the same way that sound propagated by vibrations in the atmosphere. There are several distinct causes believed in, but with no very great certainty. There is a likelihood that whatever produces volcanic action is competent to produce an ordinary earthquake. Both of these phenomena are held to be expressions of the same subterranean force. At all events, there is a clear relation between the geographical distribution of volanoes and the chief earthquake areas.

It has been held that earthquakes, especially those marked by continual tremors, are due to the crushing of rock masses by pressure caused by the secular cooling of the earth. The sudden generation of steam from water finding its way through fissures in the earth's crust, is also held to be a cause.

The earthquakes in the United States have been uniformly very insignificant compared with the convulsions of nature in the old world. There is on record a slight earthquake occurring in New England in January, 1638, another in January, 1662, and a third October 29, 1727, all of them mere tremblings of the earth, inflicting no particular damage. A severe one occurred November 18, 1755, in which the chimneys were shaken down and quite a panic created.

December 16, 1811, the first recorded earthquake in the central United States occurred throughout the Mississippi valley; it was slightly felt in many places, but most severely in the vicinity of New Madrid, Mo. There for several months the earth seemed to be in a disturbed condition. The level of the river rose and fell, boats were sunk, buildings on the shore were shaken; throughout the adjoining country the land would rise, then fall again. This agitation of the earth's surface continued until March 26, 1812, when on the very day on which the terrible earthquake occurred at Caraccas Venezuela, South America, this disturbance in Missouri ceased and did not again occur. There were slight earthquakes on the Pacific coast in that year and in the year preceding. Probably a number of early times, but no record exists of them. However, California was not again disturbed by any shock of the kind worthy of note until October 1865, when slight tremblings were felt at various points, but no great damage was done.

October 21, 1868, the severest reported earthquake in San Francisco occurred, doing great destruction to buildings, but causing no loss of life. October 19, 1870, an earthquake was distinctly felt throughout New England and New York, and extended as far west as Chicago. Two shocks occurred within a few seconds, and it was the severest earthquake ever known up to that time in this country. No lives were lost, but buildings in many places suffered severely. June 18, 1871, a slight earthquake shock was felt on Long Island, and on July 5, 1871, one in California. March 26, 1872, a terrible convulsion occurred in Inyo county, California, nearly three hundred shocks being felt within the space of a few hours Several towns were almost wholly destroyed, thirty persons were killed, and many badly injured. December 22, 1875, shocks were felt at Richmond, not very severe, but enough to create quite a panic and general fright among the the people. August 11, 1884, shocks were felt from Washington to New York, but little harm was reported, August 31, 1886, the severest earthquake ever known on the Atlantic coast from New England southward, but its severest manifestations were at Charleston, S. C, where thirty-one lives were lost and $5,000,000 worth of property destroyed. After this, for four months, slight earth tremblings were felt in the vicinity from time to time. October 14, 1891, there was a slight earthquake shock at San Francisco, and November 27, 1893, another in New Hampshire and Vermont. And the last but not least came Thursday morning, Oct. 31st. 1895.

Keep Cool.

The Dispatch is greatly exercised over what we said about Parrett getting away the night he tried to kill Fretz It even misquotes as well as misconstrues what we said, in order to get up a controversy over the matter. After we had called the attention of our democratic friend the Butler Herald, to the fact that Sheriff Stroh, and not "a Michigan officer" captured Parrett, showing we had no desire to take away Mr. Stroh's credit, still the Dispatch quibbles, and adds:

"Yes, but the COURIER said in announcing the escape of Parrett, that Sheriff Stroh couldn't catch him, intimating that our sheriff was incompetent"

But here is exactly what we did say in the DAILY of Sept. 14, in speaking of the shotgun:

"The gun being with Parrett is likely to remain away, unless the sheriff catches him which he is not paid to do."

There was no intimation that "our Sheriff" couldn't catch the man. But surely there was little likehood that he or anyone else would do so But if the Dispatch proposes to force a discussion of Sheriff Stroh's ability or inability as an officer, it is welcome to begin at any time. The COURIER is able and willing to take its own part

COONS DRINK CIDER.

A recent dispatch says, John Davis of Anderson, one of the largest cidermakers in Indiana, killed 13 coons one morning during the past week under very peculiar circumstances. Mr. Davis' cider mill is built of wood and stands away from his house. He was awakened during the night by a noise in the mill and upon investigation found that 13 coons were on the inside, drinking cider. He fastened the door and locked them in and went to bed. When he got up the next morning he took a coon dog and several hands and began the killing. He found the coons drunk and undergoing all stages of jags. The scenes was a most peculiar one. They had rolled the barrels over, which had been left open to allow the cider to work. They had then drank themselves full of hard cider. In a few minutes all had been dispatched, and their skins were brought to this city as substantial evidence.

EEL RIVER DITCH CASE.

The big ditch case over at Columbia City has been settled and the case taken out of court. How easy it would have been to take this plan at first, before several thousands of good dollars had gone for costs. The fight was caused by owners of land on high ground objecting to help pay for the ditch. But it was claimed they ought to help, as the water from their lands went to swell the amount in the big ditch, which might otherwise be made smaller. The assessments were reduced one half The ditch will be made, but distant landowners will be required to pay only one half the amount fixed at first.

Obituary.

Silas M. Scott was born in Madison county, Ohio, Nov. 10th, 1832, and died in Pierceton, Ind., October 26th, 1895, aged 62 years, 11 months and 16 days. He came to Whitley Co. with his parents when about 4 years of age living in that county all the earlier years of his manhood, coming to Pierceton in 1864, where he has since resided. He enlisted in Co. B, 44th Ind. Regt. and was a faithful soldier until long continued sickness in the hospital at Nashville, Tenn., necessitated his discharge in 1862. Mr. Scott was married to Mrs. Isabel Nokes in 1870, who with one daughter survives him. He was a man of quiet disposition and of good moral character, honest and upright in his dealings with his fellow citizens. He bore his sufferings with patient fortitude. Besides his wife and daughter he leaves a step daughter, four sisters and two brothers to mourn his departure. The funeral services were held in the Presbyterian church Monday, Oct. 28th, at 1 o'clock. Services were conducted by Rev. J. M. Ramsey, interment in the Ryerson cemetery. He had long been a faithful member of the I. O. O. F. and this order with the G. A. R. had charge of the funeral arrangements.

Obituary.

Alvah D. Pipher was born Nov. 10th, 1863, and departed this life Oct. 28th, 1895, aged 31 years, 11 months and 18 days: He was united in marriage to Soloma Bohner March 16, 1892 To this union was born one child, which preceded him to the spirit land seven weeks ago. He leaves a wife, mother, step father, two brothers and two sisters to mourn his early death. Mr. Pipher was employed by the Wabash R. R. Co. as section foreman, he was thorough in his work, and faithful to the company, his men had confidence in him, and highly esteemed and respected him. He was a member of the Odd Fellows of the Auburn Lodge. The order attended his funeral and laid his body to rest in the beautiful Woodlawn with honor and respect. The funeral services were conducted from the home of the deceased's parents at the Junction yesterday at 2 p. m. Interment took place in the Woodlawn cemetery, Rev. J. D. Brosy officiating.

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. Caillouette, Druggist Beaverville, Ill, says: "To Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with Lagrippe and tried all the physicians for miles about, but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about my in. What Is A Sucker?

A sucker is a fish, is not worth the little worm it takes to catch him, but the human sucker is caught on an empty hook, and hooked in the gills at that.

A sucker is the fool at the county fair who puts his money on the wheel of fortune expecting to beat the shark at his own game.

A sucker is the "hoodoo" who buys packages of soap with $10 bills in them for five dollars.

A sucker is the fellow who signs a receipt for a carload of grindstones and finds the next week that he has signed a note for $200.

A sucker is a youth who stakes his money on the pasteboards when he don't know a bobtail flush from a boiled owl.

A sucker is the farmer who buys his goods from a traveling peddler when he can buy them of his home merchants for 25 per cent less.

A sucker is a windbag who sits around on the street and abuses everybody behind their backs and imagines people don't get to hear of it.

A sucker is a business man who sends his job work to some snide office out of town, and expects his home paper to blow up the town and benefit him as much as his more enterprising neighbor.

A sucker is the "kicker" who opposes every improvement, and rails at every every "hustler" in town, until some other town springs up near him and his property depreciates 75 per cent and he cannot sell it at that to get out of debt, until the sheriff helps him out.

A sucker is a smart Alexander at twenty who knows more than his grandfather did at thirty.

Queer Quakes.

Among the many queer things caused by the Earthquake in Indiana, were these: A clock at Laporte, stopped; the court house bell at Terre Haute made four strokes; bricks came loose and fell at Martinsville; articles on shelves were thrown off at Elkhart; a man fell out of bed at Valparaiso; three shocks were felt at some places, and only two at others; at some points the movement seemed to be north and south and at others, east and west; chimneys trembled, hotel guest were frightened from their rooms, and inmates of the blind asylum at Indianapolis firmly believed that burglars were breaking into the building, the children of the orphans' asylum were scared into praying for their lives. In many places in the southwest, the ground cracked open. The earthquake seemed to have its center not far from the state of Missouri, and it is noteworthy that the last general shake up, that of 1811, had its center in that state. It was then that a large tract of land near New Madrid sank down several feet, and remains so to this day.

Surprised Her.

Wednesday's Daily.

The members of the W. R. C. and G. A. R. sprung a little surprise on Mrs. Ed. Mason last evening, that being her 48th birthday. They brought abundant refreshments and had a lovely time generally. This included a serenade by the "big three," who are Clyde Myers, Carl Shomberg and Ed. Mason jr. There were also songs and speeches, and Mrs. Mason was presented a fine rocking chair.

Among those present were: George Gordon and wife, G. W. Bates and wife, R. H. Weamer and wife, Mr. Green and wife, Joe Culbers and wife, Hiram Cupp and wife, Mr. Prosser and wife, Ed. Mason and wife, jr. Mrs. Ann Silver, Mrs. Jacob Thomas, Mrs. Rebecca Dickinson, Mrs. Altenburg, Mrs. Cowan, Mrs. Michael Douglas, Mrs. E. Metcalf, Mrs. Horace Snoeberger, Mrs. Sam. Campbell, Mrs. Robert Simpson, Mrs. Julia Sherlock, Mrs. Clara Zimmerman, J. N. Wilson, George Potter, Henry Wolf, Thomas Hanam, Adda Douglas, Lessie Pence, Vera Zollars, Libbie Hosler, Lulu Berry, and Charley Mason. Those from abroad were, Mrs. Hamilton, of Butler, and Gus Hull of Colorado. About 11:30 the crowd dispersed each one feeling that it had been an evening well spent and wishing her many happy birthdays.

NEW DIPHTHERIA CURE.

Prof. L. L. Blake of the Kansas university has discovered a remedy and preventive of diphtheria if the results of experiments already tried are to be relied on. It is a mixture of salt and water, about two-thirds of the weight of the mixture being salt through which an electric current has been passed. This current produces chloride of oxygen and ozone in an active state. The mixture is used as a gargle. The treatment has been tried in a number of ways and has been found to instantly and completely kill microbes wherever found. Local physicians believe the discovery is a valuable one.

The World's Fair Tests showed no baking powder so pure or so great in leavening power as the Royal.

Auburn Gets There.

The latest of the extraordinary things that Auburn gets is the selection of W.H. COURT

Thursday's Daily.

A good deal of time has been spent on the damage case of Norris vs the B. & O. and to day the attorneys took a whirl at it, as the witnesses got done yesterday. The case of Frank Gaskell brought by his "next friend," Kyle Gaskell, is set for hearing Dec. 30. This is the damage case brought against J. O. Keller of Ft. Wayne a year or two ago for injuries to Gaskell, one of his employes by reason of what was claimed to be a defective machine. Wheeler vs Simon, plaintiff, gets $245. It was on a note, McClellan Strong, Zimmerman being attorneys for plaintiff, and McNagny and Marshall for defendants. The Ft. Wayne Organ Co. vs Wm. Gunsenhouser, note, resulted in a judgment for plaintiff of $96. rs Samuel Weaver asks to be appointed guardian of Elmer Weaver, Non-comp, but the judge took it under consideration. As we go to press at 4 p. m. the judge has just instructed the jury in the case of Norris vs the B & O. so cannot give the result till to morrow.

Friday's Daily.

We left the jury last evening just going out to wrestle with the Norris case for damages against the B. & O. for putting him off a train. They worked at it until three o'clock this morning when they reported they had agreed on a verdict. It was for Norris, giving him $1 50 damages. This seems to be about what everyone expected, as he did not expect a great sum, but was satisfied with enough to show that a wrong had been done him.

THE GARRETT CASE.

As soon as the jury went out in the Norris case Thursday afternoon, the judge called up the case of McIntyre vs City of Garrett, and the rest of the afternoon, and until nine that evening the attorneys of each side presented their views of the case. The history of the case is this

W. H. McIntyre, two or three years ago put an electric light plant into that city on the strength of contract with the city, and with the B. & O. road, each agreeing to pay him a fixed sum for ascertain number of years. A little over half or this time has expired, and now the town proposes to put in a light plant of its own, in spite of the fact that it must still pay a fixed sum to Mr. McIntyre for his lights until the contract expired. And it would eventually result in the loss of his plant, as without the patronage of the city, it would be comparatively a dead plant. It was to save himself from this loss, that he began an injunction suit against the city to prevent them running down the value of his property and perhaps also, breaking their contract with him. It appears he had before this offered to sell out to them but they would not buy. The grounds on which he relies to prevent them from putting in a new electric light plant are two. The town is already in debt, and could only assume $19,700 more, whereas they have already made arrangements to put in water works which would cost $27,000 or more, which of itself would exceed the limit by $7,300. Now in addition to this the city wanted to put electric lights in, in connection with the water works, making a total debt of not less than $45,000, which fact McIntyre uses to prevent them from going on with the light plant, though he would not interfere if they only put in the water works. The second reason he uses against them is the fact that certain numbers of the council are to take stock in the light plant, so that the city will not need to go into debt so deeply. The arrangement then is, that when the city gets partly out of debt it shall have the privilege to buy out this electric light company at $600, a very small sum, and in the meantime, the electric light company is to furnish 17 arc lights and 25 incandescent lights to the city, free of cost, McIntyre considers the course the council is taking is illegal and argues that body has no right to take stock in a company which itself has passed an ordinance to create. The city on the other hand, claim they have a constitutional and legal right to so create a company or corporation and take stock in it if they choose. They call up cases to show that cities have been permitted by the courts to create debts in excess of the legal amount, 2 per cent on the assessment, when it can be shown that there is a need of it, or that the town can be benefited thereby. These conditions and opinions we gather from the statements made by attorneys on both sides Mr. McIntyre is represented by Judge McClellan and Frank Roby, and the city by Judge Zollars and Charles Worden, both of Ft. Wayne. The opening speeches were very able and exhaustive, and many spectators listened to the learned gentlemen with great interest. Many witnesses are over from Garrett, and it looks as if the case would last several days.

The jury was discharged for the term after finishing the Norris case, as court closes one week from Saturday, and the Garrett case is before the judge alone.

Saturday's Daily.

Last evening the taking of testimony in the Garrett injunction case was going on. There is an unusual condition about this matter. It has become a sort of double case, the case of McIntyre vs city of Garrett, and the B. & O. R'y., vs city of Garrett are going on at the same time, the two cases being identical, both aiming to restrain the city from creating a debt in excess of the constitutional limit in it efforts to have both waterworks and an electric-light plant. As noted before, Judge McClellan and Frank Roby represent Mr. McIntyre, and the B. & O. is represented by J. E. and J. H. Rose. The city is in both cases represented by Judge Zollars and Charles Worden This double headed case makes it pretty lively, especially as the matter is greatly mixed up, so that even the city officers do not seem to understand it. This also, compels Judge Penfield to examine witness some, so he can get a clear idea of what is being investigated. Altogether we have had few civil cases in which there were so many points of interest, or in which attorneys could show what old Pap Sloan of Waterloo used to call "legal acumen." Last evening was spent in examining two witnesses, W. J. Martin, the city clerk and Mr. Schrock, one of the council, Mr. Martin admitting that he did not attend the council meetings regularly as he had a deputy to attend to that much of his work. Mr. Schrock admitted he had not attended a number of the meetings, He seems to have opposed the adoption of the plan by which the city would have created a debt beyond the limits. He remembered that certified checks as forfeits, had been received on two of the bid, one on the bid for sale of bonds and one for the construction of waterworks, but one had been sent back and another given to Mr. Schrock to keep. The examination of these two witnesses took till after nine, when court adjourned till this morning.

It should also be noted that not only is this double case going on with a sizzle but a second very important case is being tried in another room, before Judge Adair. It is the great Knight ditch case. In this Rose & Rose represent the remonstrants and Mr. Hartman represents the petitioners. Several days were spent on this case a week or so ago, and yesterday it was taken up again, and the last witnesses were examined. To-day arguments will be heard, and then it goes to the judge. It involves the interests of about 100 farmers.

This morning, C. W. Camp, the mayor of Garrett was put on the stand, and while he seems to know a little more about what the city council has been doing in the city's business, he has a good deal of the poor memory that seems to have attacked all its members. The disease seems to be epidemic over there. We do not believe these officers would swear to a lie; therefore we must take their oft-repeated sworn statements, that they "don't know" and "can't remember" what has been going on in the city council for the past six months. We wonder right here, if there is any other similar body of corporation officers who know so little as to what they have done, are doing, and expect to do in the matter of their town's municipal business.

Mr. Camp testified that he had not signed any bonds, but that the coupons had been signed. He said that councilmen Clevenger, Reyher and Hershberger each subscribed one share of stock or $100 and he on behalf of the city signed for 190 shares. He don't know whether the total expense of the two plants was to be $40,000 or $45,000. He was not clear as to the cost of the lot that was purchased for the location, except as he saw it published in the Auburn Dispatch in its list of real estate transfers. The cost of putting down the wells was to be at the rate of $3 a foot for some and a less price for others. They would be put down from 150 to 200 feet and he thought the total cost would be about $1800 for wells alone. On the night of the decision of the council as to the organization of a new company to put up the plants, the council adjourned and the stockholders met at the Ross house and elected officers and did other business. He said he could not say as to whether any stock, has been paid for, but Mr. Worden interrupted to say that a part of it had, by which we suppose he meant so much of it as he, and Judge Zollars had taken. It was here suggested by the judge that Mr. Worden could explain a good deal of the business under discussion but Judge McClellan laughingly suggested it would be poor policy for the plaintiff to take one of the opposing counsel for a witness and the matter was dropped.

Ft. Wayne papers are bringing out candidates for congress on the democratic ticket. It is pretty early for this especial industry, particularly in view of the recent cold wave that struck democracy from several different directions.

WILL WED

ONE OF AUBURN'S POPULAR YOUNG MEN WINS ONE OF COLUMBIA CITY'S BRIGHT YOUNG LADIES.

Monday's Daily.

This evening, at the home of the bride in Columbia City Ralph Moody, will wed Miss Daisy, daughter of Valorus Brown, the well known lumber dealer.

It is with pleasure that the DAILY records this coming event. The groom is the second son of County Clerk D. D. Moody, and the bride is equally well known in our sister city, of Columbia. Mr. Moody has been making frequent trips down there lately, and during the baseball season, it was understood that his services were needed to keep up the reputation of the Columbia City nine in its struggle for the first place in Northern Indiana. But when the ball season closed no such reason appeared to call him over that way. The DAILY hereby enlightens all those in doubt and will add its voice to the congratulations that will be pouring in on them in a day or two. We presume they will settle down in Auburn, in which case we help to make them welcome.

Squire Walter's Court.

Quite a suit is going on in this court and about a score of witnesses are waiting to take a part in it. It appears that Chris Ashelman sold a lot of straw on his farm east of town to Green Lahnum Lahnum was to let John Kruse jr. have one load, but he now comes into court with a complaint that Kruse had taken six loads. Chris Ashelman is here on business and was detained as a witness much against his will as he wanted to start back to his home at Toledo at noon.

KESSLER ROBBERS.

Another Member of the Gang is in Jail.

Dick Smalley who was one of the leaders in the big Kessler train robbery is now in the hands of the United States marshals. A dispatch dated Nov. 7th, at White Eagle, Oklahomo, says:

"Dick Smalley, wanted at Allegan Mich., for train robbery, was arrested yesterday near Round Pond, Okla., by deputy United States marshals. While returning to Round Pond to jail their prisoner escaped by jumping through the car window on the Rock Island. He made his way overland to White Eagle, a distance of forty miles, closely pursued by Sheriff Worcester, who arrived here at 11 o'clock last night. It was learned that Smalley had boarded the blind baggage of a southbound Santa Fe train at this place at 9 o'clock, but was kicked off by the train crew. He then concealed himself in a hay shed near by, and was found at 4 o'clock this morning by officers. He was taken back to Round Pond for safe keeping. Smalley is charged with other thefts in this vicinity. A reward of $1,000 was offered for his capture."

According to the confession made by James W. Brown who was captured at Allegan, Mich., and who is now in the Noble county jail, Dick Smalley is the man who is also wanted here for the Kessler train robbery. From the dispatch it will be seen that a reward of $1,000 offered for his capture in Oklohoma and there is also a reward of $1,000 offered by the United States Express Co., for the arrest of the Kessler train robbers. There is no doubt but what Dick Smalley is the man who Brown says helped to rob the Lake Shore train. It will be remembered that it is now past two years since this robbery took place. It now looks as if the victims would be brought to justice. According to Brown's confession there is yet but one who is at large. And yet it will be remembered that the passengers who were on the unlucky train that night say there were a dozen or more of the robbers. It is believed by officers that the confession of Brown is correct. Smalley will probably be brought back to Indiana as soon as the officers are through with him in Oklohoma. The Daily will however keep its readers posted as the matter further develops.

The Populists

Only one populist was elected to the Kentucky legislature last week who is fully committed to that doctrine. He may hold the balance of power when the legislature comes to select a U. S. senator. Two or three other members were elected on mixed tickets but will probably act with their old parties. The populist party seems to be breaking up all over the country. As there never was enough of their so called principles to make a party, and as we have often said there was never a public need of more than two parties. A third party is always a damage to the country because it generally holds the balance of power and will either block all legislation or make demands that are against public interests.

The Recent Rains

Caused us to have a lull in business. We were pleased to have the rains, even though we should not have made expenses Beside the infinite good these rains accomplished in a general way, they also gave us a chance to rearrange our stock and get in shape to serve you in the best possible manner.

We have made many additions to our stock, among which we might mention a number of new ladies' and misses' Garments, not the discarded bargain kind but the very nobbiest, most stylish to be had and at prices that will please you. Also quite a bunch of new clothing, hats, caps, suspenders and neckwear. We have done the bulk of the clothing business of the town for a number of years and this year will surpass them all. Do not fail to see our stock before you buy.

EVENTS OF INTEREST

THAT OCCURRED DURING THE PAST WEEK.

The Insurgents Defeated in a Battle in Cuba—Gov. McKinley to Practice Law at Canton—Shot by Stage Robbers—Fatal Explosion at Chicago.

Killed by His Pet Bear.

Walter Billings, a well-known resident of Lowell, Mass., was killed by a tame bear at Lakeview Park in the presence of nearly a hundred persons. It is not known what caused the animal to attack Mr. Billings, as it had always been very docile, he having had charge of it since it was a cub. The bear knocked him down, and after squeezing the life out of him proceeded to devour the body. A number of carpenters near by drove off the furious beast with wooden stakes, and rescued the body, which was in a frightful condition. While the men were removing the body the bear returned to the attack and had finally to be shot. Mr. Billings was horribly bitten, his whole left side and his throat being chewed.

The Earthquake's Work.

A special from Brazil, Ind., says: The discovery was made recently that the Courthouse, a three-story brick structure, was rendered unsafe by the recent earthquake. A committee was at once appointed to investigate the matter. They found the building cracked in several places, and at other points it had began to crumble. The committee decided that it was unsafe and a constant menace to the lives of the occupants and recommended a new structure. The building was put up twenty years ago, when Brazil was made the county seat. It has also been discovered that Floyd Graham's fine brick residence, on South Meridian street, was badly damaged by the quake.

Gov McKinley to Practice Law.

Columbus special: The Governor and Mrs. McKinley are preparing to return to the old home. Within a week after the inauguration, they will leave the capital. They have nearly completed arrangements for their departure, and will go to Canton, and occupy the house in which they lived twenty-five years ago as bride and groom, and began housekeeping. After the blare and blaze of Governor Bushnell's inauguration Governor McKinley, of course, becomes a private citizen. He will be "William McKinley, Attorney at law," and his shingle as such will wave in the breezes of Canton. He has decided to resume the practice of law as soon as he goes out of office.

Opened for Settlement.

The President has signed the proclamation opening the Nez Perces ceded lands to settlement on November 18. The proclamation recites the provisions of the law and directs that under the regulation issued by the Secretary of the Interior the lands shall be opened to settlement according to the terms of the treaty. The price of the agriculture lands is fixed at $3.75 per acre, and of timbered lands at $5 per acre. It is not anticipated that there will be a great rush for the lands.

Human Bones Found in the Ruins.

Fred Copp's barn, near Kenton, Ohio., burned the other night. Next morning bones were found in the ruins, which are thought to be human bones. The theory is that a tramp crawled into the haymow to sleep, lit his pipe, fell asleep, and his pipe, falling in the hay, set it on fire, burning him to death. This is the sixth barn that has been burned at night in that locality recently.

A Fatal Shot.

Louis Stackhouse, a young man of Greenfork, Ind., was accidentally shot by Moses Hatfield, a prominent citizen of the town. Stackhouse and some other boys were annoying Hatfield by putting a "tick tack" on the window of his house, and, to frighten them, he fired a revolver in the air. The bullet struck a tree, glanced downward and lodged in the abdomen of the young man. He may die.

Four Killed.

An explosion occurred in the works of the Iroquois Furnace Company, at South Chicago, by which four workmen were fatally burned, and three others badly hurt. The men were engaged in transferring some boiler plates, when the blast was overthrown and were caught in the hot shower of cinders and mass of heated iron.

Father and Son Burned.

The 5-year-old son of Prof. R. S. Crockett, of the Vanderbilt Training School at Elkton, Ky., fell head foremost into the fire while playing, and received burns that will result fatally. His father, attracted by his cries, went to his rescue, and received serious if not fatal injuries.

Big Battle Reported.

The Spanish Minister at Washington has received an unofficial dispatch from Cuba confirming the reports of an engagement between the Government forces and the insurgents. Thirty-six insurgent dead were left on the field, indicating a heavy loss in killed and wounded.

Murdered by a Madman.

Near Grogansville, Rockingham County, N. C., an insane father named Reed attacked one of his daughters with a knife, cutting her throat from ear to ear. He then seized an ax and buried the blade in her body, killing her instantly.

Shot by Stage Robbers.

A special from Stockton, Cal., says: While the stage from Oakdale and Angels was changing horses at Chinese Camp, George Morris, the Assistant Postmaster and express agent, was shot to death by robbers. Five thousand dollars in coin was shipped from Oakdale, and the robbers were evidently aware of this fact. Morris had the money at the time, and when called upon to surrender, opened fire on the robbers. One of the men had a shotgun and returned the fire, riddling Morris' body with buckshot. They then left without taking the money

Saw a Sea Serpent.

William Myrtle of Monroe, Mich., was fishing on the Rasing River, when he saw what seemed to be a huge snake swimming near his boat. He raised his oar to strike it, when it darted its ugly head several feet into the air. Myrtle says it resembled that of a pug dog, with a long, tapering neck like a giraffe.

Blown Into Mince Meat.

Two miners named Samuel Kent and John Polkhinhorn, both married, were blown into mince meat in the ninth level of the Tamarack, Jr., mine near Calumet, Mich. The two men had forty pounds of dynamite in sticks and were fixing fuses when the explosion occurred.

TRADE OF THE COUNTRY.

The Elections Absorbed Some Consideration Last Week.

R. G. Dun & Co., in their Weekly Review of Trade, says:

The liabilities of firms failing in October were $16,179,586, against $10,772,943 in five weeks last year, and $24,954,132 in 1893. Failures for the week have been 280 in the United States against 261 last year and forty-five in Canada against forty-two last year.

It has been a broken week, and just before and after elections in the most important States operations rarely have much significance. Stocks and products are weaker, and there is some decrease in the number of establishments at work, but for reasons having nothing to do with questions of government. The controling power at present is the effort to readjust prices after the remarkable rise of last summer in important materials and products, with the struggle of great combinations to prevent decline.

The purchase of competing interests now gives the H. C. Frick Co. ownership of 11,686 out of 17,924 coke ovens in the Connellsville region, and practical control of more than three-fourths, and an advance in the price of coke to $2 is expected, as the Carnegie company has been buying up supplies for months in advance.

Roloff's Orders.

Havana special: Roloff, the insurgent leader who has been operating in the province of Santa Clara since he landed there on June last, has issued an order to the peasants of that province to remove at least three miles from the towns and forts of Santa Clara under penalty of being shot. Captain General Martinez De Campos, in order to counteract the effect of this order is reinforcing the garrisons of the towns in the province of Santa Clara and has orderd the country people to reconcentrate around the towns and has granted the farmers the use of all available lands near the towns.

Firemen Injured.

Fire started in Keen's shirt factory, Broadway and Bleecker streets, New York, which extended across the street, and is estimated to have done damage to the amount of $1,000,000. The comparatively new building of the Manhattan saving institution was destroyed. Two other buildings were damaged by fire and water. Twenty-five firemen were injured in the building and there were many narrow escapes.

Nicholson Law Hit Again.

At Logansport, Ind., Circuit Judge Lairy in court declared void that part of the Nicholson temperance law which applies to restaurants and saloons being run in adjoining rooms with doors between them. Judge Lairy holds that the accused must be found guilty of a violation of not only one clause affecting restaurant convictions but of all the provisions of the said section without which the law is in operative.

Poles to Help Cuba.

The Poles of Cleveland, Ohio, have started a movement looking toward the sending of about 300 recruits to join the Cuban army. The force will be composed entirely of Poles, mostly from Cleveland, Chicago and Buffalo. A meeting will be held soon, when it is proposed to formulate plans for getting the men to Cuba.

Train Robber Dick Smalley Caught.

Sheriff Worcester of Round Pond, O. T., arrested Dick Smalley, who is wanted at Allegan, Mich., and Albion, Indiana, for train robbery, and for whose capture there was a reward of $1,000. James Brown, who is under arrest for the Lake Shore hold-up at Kessler, Ind., confessed that Smalley was one of the robbers.

Dr. Smith Heard From.

A cablegram was received in Philadelphia, recently, from Dr. Donaldson Smith, dated Aden, bearing the one word, "Successful." This news establishes the safety of the plucky Philadelphian, who for the past year and a half has been exploring the wilds of Eastern Africa.

Incendiary Fire.

The general store of William Gillespie, at Georgetown, a village west of Logansport, Ind., was set on fire by incendiaries and entirely destroyed. The carriage shop of George Nethercut was also fired and entirely destroyed. It is thought an attempt was made to burn the town.

A Fatal Accident.

At Crab Orchard, Ky., Dr. W. A. Walls, a prominent physician, was instantly killed by accident. James Jones, Deputy Marshal, was walking along the street with him when the latter's revolver dropped from his pocket and was fired off, the ball penetrating Walls' bowels.

Hinshaw's Last Hope.

Danville (Ind.) special: Judge Hadley overruled the motion for a new trial for Rev. William E. Hinshaw. His attorneys gave notice of an appeal to the Supreme Court. Hinshaw will be taken to Jeffersonville this week.

Seventeen of Them.

The Russian warship Yakut has captured seventeen foreign sealers in the sea of Okhotsk, all of them having slaughtered seals on board. One schooner which was chased by the war ship succeeded in escaping.

Tin Plate Strike Spreads.

The 300 sheet mill men at the Union Steel works at Alexandria, Ind., are out on a strike, caused by the firm hiring a nonunion man, and it may end in closing the plant, throwing 800 men out of work.

IT WAS A LANDSLIDE.

REPUBLICAN VICTORY NEARLY UNIVERSAL.

New York, Iowa, Ohio, Maryland, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Nebraska, Kansas, and New Jersey Go with the Surging Tide.

Results of the Election.

A landslide in Maryland, a Republican victory in Kentucky, and the return to power of Tammany in New York City were the features of the elections.

In Maryland the Democrats met a veritable Waterloo. The whole State seemingly repudiated Senator Gorman and the indications now are that a Republican will succeed Senator Gibson. Baltimore went Republican by from 5,000 to 10,000. Lowndes' election as Governor by a majority of anywhere from 10,000 to 20,000 is conceded by the Democratic committee.

In New York the Republicans elect their entire State ticket and carry the State by an increased majority. Conservative estimates place the figures at from 50,000 to 60,000. New York City is carried by Tammany, but the combined Democratic vote of that city and Brooklyn shows a loss of about 12,000. The Legislature is solidly Republican.

New Jersey was carried by the Republicans by from 18,000 to 20,000. John W. Griggs is elected Governor. Cities and precincts expected to give large Democratic majorities were found to have gone the other way when the returns came in and the general result was considerable of a surprise.

Massachusetts Republicans re-elected Gov. Greenhalge by increased majorities. In spite of its being an off year the ticket went through with more to spare than it had last year.

Big Majorities in Pennsylvania.

Pennsylvania went Republican with increased majorities. The voting early in the day indicated but little interest, and a probable falling off of the votes of both the big parties. In the late hours, however, this was overcome by the rapidly increasing number of electors, who appeared at the pools. The vote was fully up to expectations and the majorities will average 80,000 and better. In Philadelphia alone there was a heavy increase in the Republican vote. The city went Republican by 60,000. This may send the toal majority in the State over 100,000.

In Ohio Bushnell, the Republican candidate, is elected Governor over Campbell by from 80,000 to 100,000 majority. His vote exceeded that of McKinley right through the State. In addition to electing Bushnell and the rest of the State ticket the Republicans have fully three-fourths of each branch of the Legislature, thus enabling them to elect a Republican successor to Brice in the United States Senate.

Iowa surprised the Democrats and even the Republicans by giving Gen. Drake an estimated plurality of 60,000. The Legislature will be overwhelmingly Republican, and a Republican successor to Senator Allison is thus assured. The vote throughout the State was light, farmers in many sections being too busy in their fields to take the time to go to the polls. The Populists showed a large gain in their vote, many free silver Democrats giving their ticket support.

In Nebraska T. L. Norval, Republican candidate for the Supreme bench, is probably elected by 15,000 majority. Maxwell (Pop.) polled less than 60,000, while Phelps (Silver Dem.) got about 25,000. Mahoney, the straight Democratic candidate, will not receive to exceed 10,000. Forty-two precincts out of seventy-six in Omaha gave Broatch (Rep.), for Mayor, 800 plurality. His total plurality is estimated at 2,000.

Kentucky Goes Republican.

Kentucky has been conceded to the Republicans on the Governorship by the Democrats. The chairman of the Republican State committee claims the election of Bradley over Hardin by 15,000 and asserts that the Legislature will be close.

In Virginia the Democrats elected three-fourths of the Legislature. Little interest was taken in the election all over the State. In many counties there was so little at stake that many negro voters remained at home.

The Utah Republicans elected the State ticket and carried the Legislature by a safe majority. Re turns from 215 precincts out of 320 give Wells, for Governor, a plurality of 2,482, and Allen, for Congress, a plurality of 1,072.

The contest in Mississippi was one-sided. Not more than half the Democratic vote was polled, and the majority ranges between 30,000 and 40,000. The principal interest centered in six or eight of the strong Populist counties, where there were lively contests over the county offices.

In Kansas the election of David Martin, the Republican candidate for chief justice of the Supreme Court, is conceded

The Republicans carried Chicago and Cook County by pluralities considerably less than those given their ticket one year ago. The Democrats made gains in almost every ward of the city, but their combined gains were not sufficient to overcome the Republican excess in 1894. Farlin Q. Ball, Republican, defeated Richard W. Morrison, Democrat, for the vacancy on the Superior Court bench by 36,098 plurality. For the full term on the same bench Judge Henry M. Shepard, Democrat, was elected without opposition to succeed himself. Judge Shepard received a total vote of 134,339, which was only about 2,000 less than the combined vote of Ball and Morrison. The Republicans also elected five of the Drainage Commissioners, which gives them control of the new board.

HORROR IN DETROIT.

Boiler Explosion Wrecks a Building—Seventeen Persons Killed.

At about 9 o'clock Wednesday morning the boilers in the Journal Building, corner of Larned and Shelby streets, Detroit, exploded with terrific force. That portion of the building, about forty feet wide, immediately collapsed, burying scores of people in the ruins. A great many girls and women were employed in the building. Within a short time nine unidentified bodies had been taken from the ruins, and many more were inaccessible. While the work of rescue was progressing, voices could be heard from imprisoned sufferers.

Shortly after 9 o'clock the ruins broke out in flames, and the great clouds of stifling smoke seriously impeded the firemen in their work of rescue. A number of stereotypers at work on the fifth floor went down with the wreck. There were from twenty-five to thirty at work in the building. The large building was cut cleanly in two from front to rear by a gap of forty feet wide, at the bottom of which was left an almost solid pile of timbers, bricks and debris.

From revised lists of tenants and employes it is thought there were nearly fifty people in the collapsed section Up to midnight Wednesday seventeen bodies had been taken to the morgue and twenty-seven persons were still unaccounted for.

It is almost certain the explosion was caused by the oil tank which fed the boilers. Boiler Inspector McGregor gives it as his opinion the calamity was caused by the ignition of gas generated at the tank.

The most shocking scene attending the holocaust was the struggle for a body between Coroner Butler and an undertaker. The latter clung to the stretcher while the body was being carried out through the crowd, and as the spectators were becoming excited over the ghoulish scene, the police, in the interests of order, rushed the undertaker outside the fire lines and would not permit him to return.

The property loss will be entire for the owners of the building and tenants. It is not believed that the ordinary insurance policies cover the loss by explosion. The loss on the ruined part of the building is about $20,000. The Evening Journal loses about $10,000 by the destruction of its machinery, etc. The total loss of the other tenants is placed at something over $30,000.

SHE'S NOW A DUCHESS.

Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt Married to the Duke of Marlborough.

Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt was united in marriage at 12:30 o'clock Wednesday, in the Protestant Episcopal Church of St. Thomas, New York, to Charles Richard John Spencer Churchill, ninth Duke of Marlborough, Marquis of Blandford, Earl of Marlborough, Earl of Sunderland, Baron Spencer of Wormleighton, Baron Churchill of Sandridge, Prince of the Holy Roman Empire and Prince of Mindelheim, in Swabia. The church edifice was guarded by fifty police officers, specially detailed to hold in check the immense crowd of spectators who began to gather as early as 8 o'clock in the morning. As upon previous occasions when American heiresses have bestowed themselves upon titled foreigners, the ceremony was witnessed by that select and exclusive body known as "society." Following the ceremony at the church, for which over 4,000 invitations were issued, there was a breakfast and reception at the home of Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, the guests for the latter function being limited to 300 in number.

WM. VANDERBILT — MRS. VANDERBILT.

St. Thomas' Church was converted into a veritable conservatory of rare tropical foliage and vines. The bridesmaids were composed of eight of New York's handsomest girls.

The bride was attired in a magnificent gown of white satin. Revers of lace were draped from shoulder to shoulder and upon the left shoulder over the lace was a spray of orange blossoms. The train to the gown was five yards long, and was fastened to the shoulders just below the neckband. The bridal veil, of Brussels velvet, was fastened to the coiffure with a tiara of orange blossoms. The lace which adorns the bride's veil is an exquisite piece of point d'Angleterre and she is the third generation to wear it. The lace was first worn when a bride by her maternal grandmother. Miss Vanderbilt's wedding-gown and lingerie worn at the ceremony cost $6,720. Her white satin slippers with diamond studded buckles alone costing $175.

After the ceremony the orchestra struck up the march from "Tannhauser" and the bridal party left the church, going immediately to Mrs. Vanderbilt's house, where, after a brief reception to the duke and duchess, a wedding breakfast was served. Among the guests were the members of the diplomatic corps, the officiating clergy and bishops, the members of the bridal party and the members of their immediate families.

Fred J. Spiesman has been charged by the coroner's jury with the murder of his wife at New Whatcom, Wash., and the police are now in search of him. His house burned, and among the ruins was found the body of his wife. An investigation showed that she had been murdered and the house set on fire to conceal the crime.

Richard Barnett, a Lake Shore and Michigan Southern conductor, was shot by train robbers who lay in ambush. His wounds are serious.

DENVER UP IN ARMS.

FIFTY GUARDS GARRISON THE COURT HOUSE.

Excitement Over Alleged Tampering with Ballots—Women Talk of Lynching—March in a Body of 150 and Threaten the County Clerk.

Fearful of Mob Law.

Taxpayers of Arapahoe County (Colorado), of which Denver is the seat, have arisen in revolt against the perpetuation of chronic officeholders. Thursday night the court house was in a state of siege and fifty armed guards patrolled the inner corridors, while outside sentries halted everyone who attempted to enter the grounds. Inside the court house were the ballot boxes and outside the indignant voters, angry at the manner in which the returns had been "manipulated," and the alleged counting out of one or more of the candidates on the taxpayers' ticket.

Wednesday night County Clerk Lebert who was a candidate for re-election, conceded the election of George J. Kindel, one of the taxpayers' candidates. He, however, refused to allow any representative of the taxpayers to remain within the walls of the court house where the ballot boxes were stored, and Thursday morning it was announced that Kindel was defeated and that Lebert had been elected by a majority of 100. The conclusion was instantly reached the ballots had been tampered with. The public had anticipated some such crooked work, and the report spread rapidly throughout the city every one of the candidates on the taxpayers' ticket has been counted out.

Crowds soon gathered in the vicinity of the court house and George J. Kindel, the candidate whose election was the chief object of attack, came running to the court house with a shotgun. He ran all the way from his store in the lower part of the city and stopped only long enough to hear the approving remarks of several merchants. His appearance created excitement at the county building. He inquired for Lebert, then left. No sooner had he gone than a force of deputies cleared the halls. Kindel during the afternoon spoke before the Ladies' Civic Federation, and when he concluded they marched to the court house in a body to the number of 150, and left the impression that trouble would occur unless a change of base was made. The crowd in the court house got nervous. Rumors of vigilantes and visions of ropes appeared, and word was sent out that watchers would be permitted to sit beside the ballot boxes Thursday. The answer was to the effect that it was for the alleged doctoring of the returns Wednesday that the people were angry. A host of deputies was turned into the corridors and the remaining citizens driven out of doors without regard to age or sex. Then the doors were barricaded and the regular clerks were allowed to go home from a side door, with a warning not to return during the evening save at their own risk.

LONG DROUGHT BROKEN.

A General Rain Comes to the Relief of the Farmers.

The drought was broken in the Northwest and a generous fall of rain has come at the last minute to save the crops. The farmers have been in despair for weeks at the continued absence of moisture, with fields drying up, wells and cisterns empty, and the prospect staring them in the face of a destruction of crops. In many places there was a more immediate danger from prairie fires. All these fears have been set at rest by the opportune rain. Prairie fires have been quenched, farm lands drenched, and wells and cisterns filled, giving rise in some sections to meetings of thanksgiving.

In some sections of Illinois it is the first rain that has fallen for nearly three months. In Michigan, while the rain was general, it was not copious enough to be of any lasting benefit. It is doubtful if the ground was wet to the depth of one inch, so that the most benefit to be derived will be the keeping of the tops of wheat and grass green for a few days longer. Copious rains have fallen throughout Central and Southwest Missouri, and the prospect for winter wheat is greatly improved. Wheat out of the ground is looking fine and growing vigorously. A considerable amount planted during the drought has not come up, but this rain is expected to bring most of it out. In Nebraska it is believed to be in time to save all fall seeding, although the grains are not probably as heavy as they would have been but for the extended dry weather.

The recent rains throughout Ohio have had a wonderful effect upon the fall pasturage that had been burned out by the heat and drought of the summer, fields everywhere being as bare of vegetation as if swept by fire. The rains have caused the grass to sprout and farmers are no longer compelled to give their stock dry feed as was the case the previous two months. The present moisture has also helped the wheat, and it gives promise of taking root sufficiently to stand the rigors of a hard winter. The snow and rain storm which has prevailed throughout Wisconsin has done a great amount of good. In some sections it has been three months since there has been any rain. All of the forest and marsh fires which have been burning for weeks in the central and northern portions of the State have been extinguished. Iowa farmers and stockmen have been complaining much of the lack of water in wells and springs. Thousands of cattle have been the last few weeks been driven to rivers and flowing creeks for water, the ordinary supply being exhausted The rainfall must be heavy to relieve this want and the needs of the long winter months.

Telegraphic Brevities.

Col. von Hannekin, the German officer who was military assistant to Viceroy Li Hung Chang, has arrived in Berlin from China, charged with a special mission and fully empowered to arrange for the reorganization of the Chinese army on the Russian, French or German model.

George Alexander, the well-known actor and theatrical manager, who has planned to reopen the St. James Theater, with "The Divided Way," was charged in a police court at London with gross misconduct on a street. The magistrate, addressing Mr. Alexander, said that the policeman's evidence was corroborated but he would give the actor-manager the benefit of the doubt, and consequently the discharge of Mr. Alexander was ordered.

The Union Shoe and Leather Company, of St. Paul, Minn., has closed a contract with Warden Hert and the directors of the Prison South, for the use of 250 convicts, to be employed in an immense shoe and leather plant soon to be started in the penitentiary. This will give employment to all of the idle men in the institution, and will make it more than self-sustaining.

William Robinson, sixty years of age, who lives on a small farm near Fountain City, in Wayne County, was a member of the Thirty-sixth Indiana Regiment, and served from 1861 to 1865. After the war he went to his little farm, and has lived the life of a hermit ever since. He has not been shaved since the war, and only has his hair cut once a year. He seems to enjoy life, and doesn't care to see visitors.

Work that has never been witnessed before off farms in the vicinity of Hagerstown, may be seen in progress in some localities now, made necessary by the unprecedented drought. The corn in shock is so dry that it cannot be husked till dampened, and some farmers are hauling water to the fields and wetting the shocks before husking. It is a singular fact that though we have had the most severe summer and fall drought in the entire history of the State, there has been no time when the four staples of corn, wheat, potatoes and fruit were all at one time so low in price.

The 2-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Amos Hart was killed by a train on the I. & V. road, just north of Martinsville, where the road runs directly by their home. Mrs. Hart was driving some hogs from the track. The little girl followed her without her knowledge and sat down on the end of a crosstie. The step of the cab crushed the little one's skull and knocked her from the track. The train was just beginning the descent of a heavy grade, and the engineer, in his endeavor to stop before reaching the child, reversed his engine and applied the airbrakes with such vigor that many passengers were thrown from their seats.

Charles Stonerock, a lad living at Miami, was probably fatally injured in a game of shinny by being struck on the head with a shinny club in the hands of one of the players. The blow fractured his skull and his recovery is doubtful. The blow was accidental.

A bogus postoffice inspector was run down at Chesterton. He entered the postoffice and wanted the books, claiming to be in search of a missing money order. He failed to show the proper credentials, and Postmaster Maroney had him arrested. He refuses to give his name or residence. He is about forty-five years old and well dressed.

Joseph Kelly of Whiteland, Johnson County, has found his mother and sister in Arkansas, after thirty-three years. When a boy his parents lived in Columbus. He ran away from home, and for ten years lived on a farm near Martinsville. Then he went back to Columbus, but found his parents were gone, and could get no trace of them until two weeks ago.

J. V. Ayer, Secretary of the Brazil Brick and Pipe Company, of Brazil, was seriously injured in a singular maner. He had bought some cider and put it in a tin can. The family drank of it, and it made them all sick. He went out to examine the cider, and held a lighted match over the can, when it suddenly exploded. He was badly burned about the head and face.

CHAPTER XII.—(Continued.)

"Father, have you ever told the Colonel about me and Sergeant Lynn?"

"You and Sergeant Lynn?" he repeated, vaguely.

"Our engagement, father. Have you told the Colonel about it?"

"Why, no, Jenny, I can't say that I have."

"I think he ought to know," said Jane, in her soft, low voice, which somehow now gave the Quartermaster a greater idea of firmness than Mrs. Knox's shrill and more dictatorial tones.

"You are thinking a lot of nonsense, child," put in her father, good-humoredly. "The Colonel is not an old woman, to be so eager after every bit of regimental gossip. You must find another reason before I go and bother him about a little thing like that."

"Then do it just to please me—because I wish it," pleaded Jane, too earnest to betray any trace of confusion in her manner.

"Well, if you put it that way," said the Quartermaster, "I may as well haul down my colors at once. You've been spoiled all your life, my girl, and it's too late to start a reformation now. Your mother will be very angry, I'm afraid. You see she reckons on that engagement coming to nothing, and it will be a blow to her. She is hoping great things for you, Jenny."

But more was to happen to agitate Jane that day.

A well-known voice struck upon her ear with a deadly chill, and turned all her loving warmth to ice.

It was Jacob Lynn standing a few paces away from the veranda, calling and beckoning her to join him. Mechanically she obeyed, descending the low, broad steps with a laggardness that told too plainly of the aversion she felt.

She went bravely up to her fiance, and touching his shoulder to attract his attention, she began:

"It seems you don't believe in me, Jacob?"

"How can I?" he answered gruffly, not turning to meet her gaze.

"I gave you my promise," she remonstrated, gently.

"A promise only!" he retorted. "Do you think I can credit its fulfillment?"

"It shall be fulfilled. I swear it!"

He turned now and looked down at her sadly, incredulous still. But she did not avoid his scrutiny—instead she invited it.

"You don't want anything else, Jacob?" she asked, gathering up her gown from contact with the wet grass, and making a movement to go in.

"Want!" echoing her words with boisterous merriment. "Why, I want you; I want my wife, Jenny. When is she coming home?"

"You ought to be satisfied," she said, and ran away from him lightly up the steps.

But as she reached the veranda a thought seemed to strike her, and she turned back slowly to where he still stood.

Thinking she had changed her mind, and was shy in saying so, he went forward eagerly to meet her, and bent his head low to catch what she was going to say.

"No, no, it is not that, Jacob. You must wait for that until we are properly engaged," she told him, with a cold, flickering smile.

"Then what is it, Jenny?"

"This application for leave to marry—to whom does it go first?"

"To the Colonel."

"O-oh! That is all, Jacob."

"Good-night, my love."

"Good-night."

CHAPTER XIII.

Mrs. Knox, happily unconscious of what had passed between Jane and her father, and equally so of the conversation which occurred afterward between Jane and Jacob Lynn, was living in a fool's paradise. The only name Jane mentioned while relating the story of her week's visit to Cawnpore was that of Valentine Graeme, and her mother had immediately concluded that he was to take the place of the obnoxious sergeant. She showed her conviction so unmistakably that Jane, first amused, grew afterward almost angry.

"Graeme is a very good Scotch name," declared Mrs. Knox, complacently, three mornings later, as she adjusted the work on the plate of her sewing machine.

"Mr. Graeme's father was a brewer," put in Jane, slyly.

"Many of the best families go into trade. I suppose he is very rich," said Mrs. Knox.

"I dare say. He is not good-looking," returned Jane, undergoing without wincing the piercing scrutiny to which her mother subjected her.

Was the child laughing at her or expressing her real opinion? And was she mistaken in her conjecture? Mrs. Knox wondered.

"He is a gentleman," she persisted, feebly.

"They were all gentlemen that I met at Cawnpore."

But though Mrs. Knox was silenced for the moment she was not quenched, and after awhile returned to the attack.

"I don't want to lose my daughter. I should like you to marry in the regiment, Jane," she began, rather nervously.

"I thought that was just what you did not wish," retorted Jane, now thoroughly incensed; for the open discussion, which seemed so natural and desirable to her mother, to her seemed coarse and almost indelicate. The tears welled in her eyes, and she was scarlet from mortification.

Mrs. Knox drew herself up stiffly, but did not respond. The reference to Sergeant Lynn had alarmed her. She knew it was best to let sleeping dogs lie, and was sorry she had said so much.

Mrs. Knox went on busily turning the handle of her sewing machine, and bringing out apparently endless yards of completed work. Jane's head began to ache with the monotonous noise, and putting down her embroidery, she went and stood beside the open window. Presently she started, and smiled a little consciously.

"Mother, here comes Mr. Graeme!"

The whizzing of the wheel ceased with a sudden jerk, and starting from her seat, Mrs. Knox went over to her daughter's side.

"So it is, Jenny; and he is coming here to call. How you could say he was not good-looking passes my comprehension. I always thought him handsomer than any of the rest of the officers."

"Mother, what you think will never be!" she warned her gravely.

"Don't be too sure," was the confident reply. "Stranger things have happened."

She bustled out of the room, smiling back encouragingly to her daughter, and calling upon her not to be long in coming to the drawing-room.

Jane stood and watched the Adjutant as he came nearer to the bungalow. No, she had not stated the truth when she had denied his comeliness, for he was decidedly good-looking, in a happy, common-place way.

Lounging along in his cricketing flannels, his hands thrust into his pockets, and whistling a tune as he came along, unaware that any one was watching him from the window, Jane thought him more likable and attractive than she had ever fancied him before.

She found Mr. Graeme in the drawing-room, discoursing in his happiest vein with Mrs. Knox, but he stopped short, and jumped up to greet her as she entered.

"The other fellows were all at luncheon, so I thought I'd just run across and ask how you were after your journey," he explained.

"You must stay and lunch with us," said Mrs. Knox.

"Miss Knox must come and see the result of the cricket this afternoon," put in the Adjutant.

So, late in the afternoon, Mrs. Knox and Jane, having promised Mr. Graeme, strolled over to the cricket ground, which was gay with flags and the colors of the contesting sides.

The artillery from a neighboring station had challenged the —th Hussars, and a number of people had assembled to see how the contest would end. But the interest was withdrawn from the game as Jane hesitatingly approached, in her pretty soft white cotton gown and large white hat, glancing nervously at the crowd of gayly dressed ladies, who as yet had scarcely decided to receive her among themselves. Most of them had heard of Jane's short but brilliant triumph at Cawnpore, and some of them had seen her there. The General's wife, a kindly, portly lady of middle age, to whom Mrs. Dene had introduced her, beckoned her smilingly to sit down beside her, and asked to be introduced to Mrs. Knox. Then the Hon. Barry Larron came and stood beside them, and the Quartermaster's wife felt as if fortune could have no further favors to bestow. A furtive glance around had assured Jane that Colonel Prinsep was nowhere within sight, and she felt more at ease.

"Which side is winning?" she asked Major Larron.

"Our side, of course; we always do," he answered.

"Who is playing now?" asked Mrs. Knox.

"The Colonel is in; he and Mr. Graeme have made a tolerable score, but the highest score was made by Sergeant Lynn."

"Was that the man who was in just now?" asked the General's wife.

"Yes. They were lucky in getting him out for fifty runs; he is generally a very brilliant player; but he has not been very steady lately, and that spoils a fellow's game."

Mrs. Knox glanced at Jane, but the girl made no sign of having heard Major Larron's remark.

Just then a murmur of disappointment broke from the crowd. Colonel Prinsep had been bowled out, and they cheered vociferously as he came toward the tent. He was stopped, however, by Sergeant Lynn, who divested him of his pads and gloves, at the same time speaking to him in an evidently confidential manner.

At last the conference between the two unconscious rivals came to an end, and the Colonel came on alone toward the tent.

CHAPTER XIV.

When Colonel Prinsep left Jacob Lynn he meant to make his way straight toward Jane, whom he had seen as she arrived; but Mrs. Knox stood in his way, and common courtesy compelled him to stay and talk to her a moment—indeed, she seemed eager to speak to him.

"Was not that Sergeant Lynn who was talking to you just now?" she asked, directly she had shaken hands with him and exchanged the usual greetings.

"Yes. He is very anxious to run his head into a noose, and seemed to expect my congratulations thereon," answered the Colonel, smiling.

"On—on what?"

Not noticing her scared expression, he returned quietly:

"On his engagement to be married. He is going to send the necessary papers in before long, I suppose, and wished to bespeak my approval."

"Don't give it—don't, I beg you!" cried Mrs. Knox, in uncontrollable excitement.

The Colonel looked at her fixedly. The little woman always excitable, was now shaking with agitation, and she returned his gaze with one of breathless suspense.

"You think perhaps I ought not to have spoken?" she said, timidly.

The Colonel was too polite to press the matter, and seeing she had no more to say, he went on quickly to where Jane was walking up and down between Major Larron and Valentine Graeme, who had just joined her.

As he overtook them Major Larron was called away by a lady of his acquaintance, and he took his place beside her.

At a sign from Mrs. Knox, who was coming up then with another officer of the regiment, they bent their steps away from the cricket ground. The sun was down, and after the manner of the Indian climate, the air at once grew chilly. Jane shivered in her white frock, and Valentine Graeme, with what Stephen Prinsep inwardly termed officious haste, wrapped around her the warm white shawl he had been carrying.

"Have you heard anything of Captain Dene yet?" asked Jane, quickly, to hide the embarrassment she felt at his rather marked care of herself.

"Oh, yes; he is getting on capitally; the Colonel heard from Mrs. Dene the other day."

"Let the Colonel speak for himself, Val," said that gentleman, laughing.

"I beg your pardon, sir," said Mr. Graeme, rather taken aback.

"Did Mrs. Dene send any message to me?" asked Jane.

"She said she would write to you soon."

"Then we'll have to come to you for news," put in Graeme, who seldom let an opportunity slip.

Just as they were leaving the cricket ground Sergeant Lynn came suddenly in their path. He had not seen who was coming, and fell back immediately with a salute.

"How do you do?" said Jane, bravely.

A quick gleam of pleasure flashed into the Sergeant's eyes, but he scarcely knew how to acknowledge the brief recognition. They all passed on. The Colonel and the Adjutant both liked Jane the better that she had not been ashamed to speak to a former friend in their presence, but both felt the awkwardness of the situation, and were perhaps relieved that no stranger had been present.

Jane walked on, pale but composed, and looked neither to the right nor to the left.

"By the bye, I suppose Captain Dene's illness will prevent our theatricals coming off just yet," observed Val, presently; "and the Colonel did his part so well."

"And so did Mrs. Dene," said Jane.

But Mr. Graeme shook his head.

"I never thought so. She is very graceful, and looks the part completely, but she lacks experience and pathos. Now you would be perfect in it."

But Jane, unwilling to be praised at her friend's expense, made no reply.

They had reached the gate of their compound, and she stopped to say good-by.

"You are coming to see the polo tomorrow?" asked the irrepressible Val.

"Perhaps," she answered, smiling.

"I shall go and interview Mrs. Knox, and make her promise to bring you," he said, and went off with his long, swinging stride.

Stephen Prinsep and Jane looked after him for a moment, and then looked at each other—on his side with a gaze so tender as to be almost a caress, on hers with a sad, almost agonized expression.

There must be an explanation soon, and then she would lose all which might have made her life so fair.

"Jenny!" At the sound of her name spoken by him thus, as though with the right to call her so, she turned a little paler. "Jenny, when can I speak to you alone?"

"Alone?" she echoed, in confusion, a warm blush mantling in her cheeks.

"Alone!" he repeated firmly. "Can you not guess what it is I have to say?"

* * * * * * *

That night, nearly an hour after his wife had gone to bed, the Quartermaster was startled by a faint rapping at his office door. He had stayed up to finish some of his accounts, and having completed them, was leaning back in his chair, having a quiet smoke.

"Come in," he called out in Hindoostanee, thinking it was a servant asking for admittance.

To his surprise, when the door opened, it was Jane who slowly entered in a flowing wrapper of blue and white, her unbound hair falling about her shoulders, her eyes dim with weeping.

"Why, childie, I thought you were in bed long ago! Are you in trouble? You look as if you had been crying."

"I came to speak to you about something else, about what I asked you the other day," she said, timidly.

"About Sergeant Lynn."

She nodded affirmatively.

"I have done nothing yet about speaking to the Colonel. You see, there is always the Adjutant or some one in the orderly room when I am there. It would give the subject too much importance to ask a private interview."

"Why not go to his house?" suggested Jane.

"I might do that," he answered thoughtfully.

"Do, father. Will you go to-morrow morning?"

"There is no hurry, is there?"

"Yes; if Jacob spoke to him first he would think—I don't know what he would think!" she broke off excitedly.

"Well, let it be as you please. It is not worth arguing about. You will have to take my part against your mother; if she blows me up," he added, with a boisterous, good-humored laugh. "There, run off to bed, my girl; and don't spoil those pretty eyes of yours by any more crying. Not a sweetheart in Christendom is worth it, as you will know when you reach my age."

Laughing still at his own joke, he stooped, and kissing her affectionately, pushed her gently from the room.

(To be continued.)

A Reformed Parrot.

In our cabin we had a menagerie of tame beasts and birds. When I was spoken to by this parrot, while passing, I turned and closely inspected its face. It winked.

There was something in its mere wink so pious, and something so unctuous in its voice, that I feel confirmed in my suspicions that this was the penitent parrot. Without being in the least annoyed by any one, and while seemingly gazing out in a dream over the blue, this bird would suddenly break out with a volley of mariners' patois and oaths enough to turn the air purple around it.

At length, when it was heard that some ladies had declared they would never sail in a ship with such a bird again, it was resolved that the parrot must be cured of its bad habits, and so it was. Its oaths were invariably followed by a ducking.

A large bucket of salt water was emptied on the poor bird's head each splash accompanied by a remark, "You've been swearing." Polly was thoroughly cured by this.

Once, when the boat had shipped a heavy sea which gave the reformed parrot a severe ducking, the bird, conscious of its own innocence, descended from its perch and repaired to the place of poultry. There it walked up and down before the deluged fowls, saying: "You've been swearing! You've been swearing!"

A Dakota Verdict.

There is deep indignation here over the acquittal of Alice M. Giles, who was tried last week for the murder of her husband. The prosecution developed what seemed to be absolute evidence, much stronger than was adduced in the trial of William Davidson, last week, for the same crime, for which he received a life sentence. The defense in the Giles case succeeded in getting one man on the jury whom it could rely upon to hang it. The State found this out shortly after the commencement of the case, and could only hope for a disagreement. Imagine the surprise of every one—even the lawyers for the defense—when the jury came in with a verdict of "not guilty." After the jury had been discharged, one of the jurymen told the story of the verdict. The jury stood 10 to 2 for conviction, but after being out 36 hours the ten went over to the two, because, as some of them afterward said, they had to "get home to cut their hay." Another said he voted for acquittal because a new trial would be "such an expense to the county."—Belle Fourche (S. D.) dispatch to Minneapolis Journal.

The Bitter End.

"To the bitter end" is a phrase of nautical origin. Admiral Smyth's "Sailor's Word Book" says that the "'bitter end' is that part of the cable which is abait the bitts, and therefore within board when the ship rides at anchor. And, when a chain or rope is paid out to the bitter end, no more remains to be let go."

ALL BY ELECTRICITY.

ROCHESTER (N. Y.) USED NO PRINTED BALLOTS.

Adopts a Machine Which Registers a Ballot Every Time a Button Is Pushed—When the Voting Is Done the Total Appears in Figures.

Counting Is Unnecessary.

For the first time in its history, and, in fact, of the history of any large city of the United States, Rochester, N. Y., used no printed ballots at the recent election. The Flower City of the Genesee has led its American sisters in the matter of ballot reform and adopted for use at all municipal, State and national elections the Myers American ballot machine, invented by Jacob Hiram Myers.

The Myers machine is a "push the button" affair, and thousands of tiny springs concealed in the back of the machine "do the rest," so that when the polls are closed the inspectors simply have to unseal and unlock the back door of the booth, and the vote is displayed to view. Opposite each candidate's name is his total vote. The inspectors have only to jot down the figures, make the proper subtractions, and the result obtained is the majority or plurality, as the case may be, of the leading candidate. Fifteen minutes after the polls closed the returns of the entire ninety-three election districts of the city were in the offices of the newspapers, and the news of the election was on the streets almost before the election inspectors of other cities had begun to make their counts.

Here is a brief description of the Myers machine: It is seven feet high, five feet long and five feet wide. The voter on entering the cabinet or compartment is alone in an obscure, concealed room, having white walls and which is brightly lighted. He finds against the steel partition a number of vertical columns or "ballot push knobs," projecting three inches from the partition and painted the same color as the ballot cards beside them. To the left of each column of knobs are securely fastened the permanent ballots of each political party (no loose ballots being used or deposited). These permanent ballots contain in large print the name of the candidate and the name of the office to which he is intended to be elected. The ballots for the same party adjoin each other, and commencing from the top are arranged downward in the order of the importance of the office to be filled. This arrangement brings all the candidates for the same office on the same horizontal or cross line, making choice easy. Each particular party has at its head the party name, "Democratic Ticket," "Republican Ticket," "Labor Ticket," etc. The voter pushes the knob inward about two inches, when an unseen retaining latch locks it, prevents repeating, and at the same time locks all other "push knobs" on the same cross line, which prevents voting for any other candidate for that particular office. The same result follows after voting for one candidate on any cross line, no matter what column. A voter can vote rapidly a straight ticket by pushing the knobs of his choice from top to bottom, or he can split his ticket by going to other columns. Any ticket can be voted in ten or fifteen seconds, and there is no reason why the average elector should stay inside the booth longer.

On the reverse side of the steel partition, which is kept sealed until the polls are closed, and opposite each candidate's name, is a mechanical counter labeled with the same name, to identify it after the polls close. No knob can be voted a second time, and it is only returned or released, ready for the next voter, by the elector who is in the booth opening the exit door. This door can only be opened on the inside, and to open it the retiring voter must pass into a vestibule, allowing the inner self-locking door to close, which locks him out of the voting apartment. When the exit door is opened the knobs are released, ready for another voter. The illiterate vote by color and the blind by the sense of touch. A blind man at Lewiston, N. Y., recently, unassisted, voted a mixed ticket in eighteen seconds.

When the polls close the full election board, in the presence of watchers, unseal, unlock and open the sliding steel doors of the counter compartment, and without touching any of the mechanism (which it is impossible to do), they transcribe the totals to the tally sheet from the plain figures on the dials over each candidate's name. The machines were adopted this year by the Common Council of Rochester principally to avoid the trouble of learning the new Raines voting system. The cost to the city for each machine was about $800. The use of ballot machines for voting has been permitted also by the Legislatures of Michigan and Connecticut, and other States have amended their constitutions to allow voting by this new method.

Jacob Hiram Myers, the inventor, was born in Bellefonte, Pa., in 1841. He studied but never practiced law. He served as a volunteer during the war, after which he superintended the manufacture of grain binders. Later he gave his attention to preparing specifications for special bank vaults and safes. This led to the idea of inventing a ballot machine that would protect the elector. He gave an exhibition in 1887 and since then the business he established in Rochester has rapidly been growing. Now Inventor Myers says he cannot fill all of his orders. The wealthiest capitalists of Richester are interested in the great ballot machine factory that has been established at East Rochester.

THOMAS C. PLATT.

Happy Home Life of the Great Republican Leader.

Thomas C. Platt is one of the most interesting men of his time. For twenty years he has occupied the same rooms in the Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York. When he went there he had a growing family of three boys. All are gone now, but Mr. and Mrs. Platt still remain. When they took the rooms there were three connecting ones in the suit. All alone now, they still keep their suit, the three rooms, the same as when they went there to live. And there one of them, at least, can always be found.

Though dubbed a boss in politics Mr. Platt is not a boss in his own home. Once within the walls of his rooms the attitude of boss is thrown off. For many months a daily visitor to the Platt parlor was a curly-haired little tot of 4 years, who used to shout with joy as the elevator was raised, and whose delighted cry of "grandpa, where's grandpa?" was a familiar sound to the dwellers on that floor. The baby's gone now. And the sorrow was one of the keenest ones of the ex-Senator's life. But there are other little ones in the rapidly growing family of T. C. Platt and descendants, and "grandpa" bids fair never to be a boss at home any more than he is now. They pull the paternal beard, steer the paternal footsteps into a defenseless corner and proceed to make a raid upon the paternal pockets like the bold highwaymen, holding up each pocket at the point of several set of prying fingers.

"BOSS" PLATT AT HOME.

In politics they are mugwumps, having belonged to every party under the sun. To-day they are high protectionists, placing a heavy tariff upon their kisses and favors. To-morrow they shower them with Democratic freedom. Next day they are Populists, wanting to follow the most public paths, taking grandpa to the circus and placing a hand upon popular sentiment by joining street crowds and street parades. An hour later they show anarchistic tendencies by declaring for an equal division of everything in grandpa's pockets, and leaving the richest as poor as the poorest. They really show no stability; and, most remarkable of all, they carry with them one grown-up, gray-bearded, elderly gentleman as an enthusiastic follower. At home, it is said, T. C. Platt does not know his own politics.

MILWAUKEE'S GROWTH.

Its Marvelous Strides During the Past Fifty Years.

One of the leading cites of the West, both in population and commercial importance, is Milwaukee, Wis., which celebrated its fiftieth anniversary as a city recently. Like most Western cities its growth has been rapid. It was formerly a trading post for the French and Indians. One of the first white settlers in the place was Solomon Juneau, the founder of the city, who settled on the present site in 1818. He at once recognized its importance as a possible commercial center, but it was fifteen years before any more white people began to settle there. The year 1835 marked the arrival of a full stream of immigration which was to flow in greater or less volume steadily from that time on. In 1845 Milwaukee had a population of 9,000 and was incorporated as a city. It has ever since been recognized as the metropolis of the State of Wisconsin and its commercial importance was admitted by the centering there of important business enterprises.

The Milwaukee of to-day is a city with a population of over 250,000. The annual product of its manufactories is valued at $108,000,000. It is the largest barley market in the country. The pioneer town fighting its way out through the marsh and brush has developed into an important and beautiful city.

New Opera House.

Ready For A Grand Opening By A Splendid Company.

As noted by us from time to time, the Henry Opera House has been rapidly nearing completion and now the finishing touches are being given it, and it will be ready to open up at any time. The first evening will be Nov. 25, one week from next Monday, when an entire week's entertainment will be given by the "Carrie Louis Comedy Comedy Company" which has the reputation of the best on the boards. The star, Miss Carrie Louie, is a veritable 'Queen of Comedy," and her company are artists in their several lines. As they remain the entire week, and give a change of play each evening our people will have a week of amusement such as is not often our privilege to enjoy. All get ready to give the new opera house a successful opening and grand christening.

TOO-TOO BAD.

The Dispatch still insists on airing its opinion of Sheriff Stroh in spite of the resolution we have shown to carrying on a discussion of the personal merits of any officer. We had made it plain that there was no such desire on our part. But we do not propose to keep quiet under needless attacks. Last week the Dispatch, on rather a low plane, talks about the "Kid" and the "Vet" and makes itself silly in a general way over the matter, and of course we shall not follow it on that plane. It simply forces us to say, what we have been silent about, that Sheriff Stroh has not been a success in the way of capturing criminals, and had we been disposed we could have called attention to this several times. It will be remembered by all, that for several months after Mr. Stroh took the office, one crime after another would be committed here or elsewhere in the county, and the criminals go unmolested. The case of the men who passed the bogus dollars, is in point. They were chased across the fields till they reached the woods, and then they utterly disappeared and have not been heard of since This was one of many. Mr. Stroh is a good fellow in a general way, but he has not made a brilliant record in catching criminals, except in the Parrett catch, and if it had not been for the letter to that girl at Butler, it is doubtful if even Parrett would have been caught. We have never failed to give credit where it was due, even to a republican officer, and have seldom or never made a matter personal, unless forced to do so, as in this case. The Dispatch and all other republican papers might as well understand right now, that we know as much about the men they elected in last year's landslide, as they do.

Convinced Against His Will.

Nearly everyone for miles around Morley, Mich., knows Chas. A. Jones, whose farm lies two and a half miles northwest of that village. His friends, and they were numerous, feared he would not long be spared to them, for the doctor pronounced him afflicted with heart disease and said he might drop dead any minute. This was not very pleasant reflection for his wife, who watched him almost constantly; once she found him where he fell unconscious in the yard. His appearance indicated paralysis, the doctors were called again, but they did understand his case, consequently couldn't do much for him. He was in this condition when he heard of Dr. Wheelers Nerve Vitalizer and its effectual use by others. He sent to Nelson Pike's drug store for a sample, and as he expressed it: "I had little faith in patent medicines, but something seemed to convince me that this was a good one and could be relied upon. Do you know I felt better and slept well after taking two doses? I want to say to you that Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer is the most wonderful medicine ever made. It cured me so completely that I never felt better in my life."

Mr Pike, who sold him the medicine, says: "I wouldn't have believed such a cure possible if I had not seen the change with my own eyes; it is certainly the most remarkable cure of my twenty four years' experience in the drug business." It is equally as valuable for other nerve diseases, such as nervous prostration, spasms, fits, sleeplessness, mental depression, exhausted vitality, despondency, sexual and general debility. Sure Cure For Croup.

Henry Wilson, the postmaster at Welshton Florida, says he cured a case of diarrhoea of long standing in 6 hours with one small bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. What a pleasant surprise that must have been to the sufferer. Such cures are not unusual with this remedy. In many instances only one or two doses are required to give permanent relief. It can always be depended upon. When reduced with water it is pleasant to take. For sale at Robbins & McCorkle. 48

Lyon Medicine Co., Indianapolis, Ind.:

DEAR SIRS—I wish to speak a kind word for LYON'S SEVEN WONDERS. During an attack of la grippe, from which I suffered greatly with stomach trouble, loss of appetite and general bad feelings, I was induced by a friend, who said it would remove all these troubles, to try your remedy. I admit I did not have much faith in them, but tried a box, and one box made me feel like a new man and did all my friend claimed they would. I believe them to be a long felt want in the medicine line.

It is truth in medicine that the smallest dose, that preforms a cure is the best. De Witt's Little Early Riser are the smallest pills, will preform a cure, and are the best.

A fine baby boy made its appearance at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Rainier last night. The COURIER is always pleased to announce these new arrivals.

It's just as easy to try One Minute Cough Cure as anything else. It's easier to cure a severe cough or cold with it. Let your next purchase for a cough be One Minute Cure. Better medicine; better results; better try it.

The pension list has increased during the past year till it has passed the one-million point. And yet there are those who claim that Hoke Smith is down on pensions.

G. W. St. Clair, up in Branch county Mich., send in his subscription adds they have had very dry weather, but that corn and potatoes are abundant as well as apples, and all, other fruit. There is some hog cholera there, but his people are well and like their new home.

A. M. Gardner who is agent for an Automotic Gate is in the city. He will be located in some one of our vacant store buildings, where a sample of his gate will be on exhidition. We will have more to say about it later.

A funny scene took place on the public square this afternoon at three o'clock Will Ryan blacked his face with shoe blacking and blacked Charlie Rugman's shoes. It was an election bet between two democrats, Charlie asserting that the democrats would lose Ohio, and Will claiming they would win.

G. W. Clay, the local agent for the Prudential Life Insurance Co. has secured a house, and will make his home here His goods will be here this week, and his wife by Saturday or Monday. Their home was at Connersville, Ind. We are glad to add them to our list of citizens.

The Anderson Herald asks "Where ar the democratic editors who at Maxenkuckee last summer asked for a 50-cent silver dollar?" We assure friend Campbell, that nothing of the sort was asked for, the resolutions passing over that very unimportant subject with a sort of hop skip-and jump. After the editorial meeting had adjurned a few "democratic editors," under the lead of C. H Bliss, the man who led the DeKalb county populists into the republican fold a year ago, did meet and talk, and talk, and resolve and resolve——and that was all. No, one swallow don't make a summer.

Say, why don't you try De Witt's Little Early Risers? These little pills cure headache, indigestion and constipation. They're small, but do the work.

The firm of Brown Bros. shoe dealers, at Waterloo, failed yesterday. Liabilities not known.

There are many good reasons why you should use One Minute Cough Cure. There are no reasons why you should not, if in need of help. The only harmless remedy that produces immediate results

If a person happens at the Junction at about 12:30 o'clock, he is reminded of the fact that that is a great railroad crossing. Passenger trains reach there at that time from four different directions.

The big engines in the Detroit Journal Printing Office exploded yesterday, wrecking the building and killing a number of people. It is not known how many are killed, and will not be till the piles of brick thrown down are removed The fires under engines set fire to the ruins, and those not killed outright were burned. Many are hurt. Full account on our telegraph columns.

H. A Shull and Mrs. A. D. Goetschius, started to-day over the Wabash, for a long trip to the great west. They go to Montana, where Mr. Goetschius has for many years made his home. Mr. Shull we suppose goes mainly to visit his son Josiah, and daughter Rebecca, who reside at Philipsburg, Montana. The COURIER's best wishes go with both of them.

Yesterday Miss Vanderbilt and the Duke of Marlborough were married. Both are spoken of as very worthy young people. The Duke is a descendant of that John Churchill, Duke of Marlborough who won the famous battle of Blenheim over the French in 1703, besides many victories for the English. He received from Parliament, for these services, besides a title, the famous old manor of Woodstoch, a part of the crown property, and this the family still owns.

Indianapolis papers are advertising a lecture course in that city which contains among the list of speakers, a lecture by Eugene Field who was buried yesterday in Chicago. It is a sad reminder of the late popular poet and writer of children's stories.

All diseases of the air passages especially catarrah and chronic, Bronchitis, as well as first stages of consumption can be cured. I am treating these diseases with great success by the use of the latest and most improved medicines and instruments. Dr. W H. Nusbaum, Auburn, Ind. 42tf

Dr Nusbaum went out into the country this afternoon to the residence of J. S. Weaver, to perform a surgical operation on Mrs. Weaver's hand. She has had some sort of felon or blood poisoning, for some time and it has made it necessary to remove one finger entire, and some of the bones of the hand. It will be remembered that their son was similarly afflicted not long ago.

Mrs Inez McDowell, who reached here last week from a long visit in the south has gathered up a fund of useful and interesting knowledge of the people and conditions down there. The hands that work on the levee improvements are all negroes and a bad lot generally. She thinks northern people would not care to live there.

The Ft. Wayne papers are making up a list of available candidates for congress next year, J. M. Robinson, Perry Randall, S. M. Foster and S. M. Hench are among those annual so far. All are good men and we know of nothing against any of them. If DeKalb county has no candidate, we will gladly help to boost one of these men into the place. Next year is a presidential year and party lines may be drawn closer than last year. Still it may be as well to make up our mind, that even on congressman, we may look for a hat fight.

Mayor Taggart, of Indianapolis, is proving something of a surprise and considerable of a disappointment to the "personal liberty" crowd, the free and easy, wide-open contingent who expected to do pretty much as they pleased when he set to be mayor. In issuing an order Thursday for the suppression of gambling Mayor Taggart said; 'No gambling will be permitted in this city while I am mayor, and the sooner the gamblers realize this the better it will be for them. They might as well understand new that I mean what I say. Every gambling game that is started will be raided, and there can be none without the police finding it. This is not a question of politics. It is a case of right, of obeying the laws and humanity. This law will be rigidly enforced for the protection of the wives, mothers and sisters. It is for the protection of the young men and the boys of this city, for it is a notorious fact that more young men have been led astray through gambling than from any other cause. The matter is settled." It would be a good thing if Mr. Taggart was mayor of Auburn awhile. There is considerable gambling going on in our beautiful little city. It is known that some men make a business of playing poker.

Steuben Republican: The DAILY COURIER at Auburn has been enlarged to a seven column paper. The demand for advertising space was the cause, which is a very pertinent one both for the publisher and the men who plant their ads in the paper.

A wedding occurred at Decatur, Ind., recently, at which the youngest couple ever united in marriage in the United States were made man and wife. The bride, Flora A. Worner, is just thirteen years old, and the groom, Charles M. Dutcher, is fourteen. The parents of both are prosperous farmers in that county and raised no objection to their children's early union.

As Dr. Buchtel was returning from a trip in the country yesterday he stopped at the residence of J. J. VanAuken on south Jackson street. He had tied his horse to the hitching post and as he unhitched and got in the buggy to come up town in some way did not turn out far enough to miss the past. The front wheel of the carriage struck it and as a result the cross bar of the shafts was badly broken from the quick jar. The pieces were tied together by the doctor and T. P. Scott and he then returned to the barn.

Every thing nice and clean, at the old Baker stand on 8th street. M. N. Ward, Proprietor,

Last Thursday was the greatest day ever known in the amount of cash paid out on postal money orders and Chicago postoffice was the place. That day over $105,000 was paid out on money orders, and it took the clerks in charge of that department about all that night to finish up their work.

Mr. Hines of New Era who with his wife were seriously hurt by their horse getting scared at the Lake Shore train one week ago this morning was in town to-day having his head dressed by Dr. Nusbaum. Mr. Hines expected to return to his home on the 9:34 train but missed it and was compelled to remain till this afternoon. He says Mrs. Hines is seriously injured internally and is entirely helpless. They are both aged people.

In Nebraska, the democrats had two distinct tickets in the field, and those who opposed free silver polled twice as many votes as the free silver democrats did. If a western state stands that way surely there are not as many here. The trouble seems to be that they do the most talking and people seem to think they are numerous.

Mrs. Susie Grimm died at her home near Cedar Chapel church Monday from child-birth. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Amos Hilkey who lives in south-west Jackson township and a sister of Mort Hilkey who resides here. It is sad to relate that she is taken away at so early a period in life. Her funeral was held to-day.

Trade papers report that there are 8,300,000 bags of visible coffee in the world. This is in addition to the invisible coffee served at boarding houses.

The most bushy-headed people in the world are found among the savage tribes, where both professional piano players and foot-ball teams are unknown.

A Chicago dry goods man estimates that the women of that city spend over $1,000,000 for big sleeves to their silk dresses alone. The expenses of a well-armed nation are always heavy.

It is said that a firm of American publishers has offered Sarah Bernhardt $160,000 for her autobiography. If Sarah tells the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, the figures are low enough.

Mrs. Lulu Lare, of San Francisco, proposes to get a divorce and then come to Chicago. We do not see why it is necessary to get a divorce in order to come to Chicago, but if it is of course her action is justifiable.

The coal men, as we understand it, sincerely regret the necessity of steadily advancing prices to the consumer. As that is the only way they have of making money rapidly, however, there appears to be no alternative.

And yet there are those who claim that woman is not as well fitted as man for higher education.

The forthcoming reminiscences of Mary Anderson's life on the stage and her impressions through her professional career will be eagerly received, and should be read by all stage-struck young women. If a woman of "Our Mary's" genius, and one who achieved the success before the footlights that she did, can declare, as she does, that the day when she voluntarily turned her back upon it all and left the stage forever was the happiest moment she had seen, what can the boards offer other women?

The brief biography of Mr. George Tyson, late president of the American News Company, whose death was reported recently, is full of instruction and encouragement to all poor boys. He began his active career at the early age of eight by serving a newspaper route while attending school. He served with distinction in the war. He achieved success in business, and he "attributed his success in life to unflagging industry and correct business methods." No memorial could say more in fewer words. Their meaning should be carefully considered, not only by the poor boys who have their way to make in this world, but by the boys who are not poor and who wish to avoid the mistakes that lead to failure. Any boy who will cultivate the habit of unflagging industry and follow correct business methods may feel secure of his future.

The intelligent objection to prize fights is not merely on account of the brutality of such exhibitions. The respectable public is disgusted with the spectacle of barroom brawlers and bullies, with not sufficient capacity to earn a decent living in any legitimate employment, pocketing enormous sums as the profits of a few minutes' degrading "sport." The student or mechanic who has spent years of hard work attempting to fit himself for useful employment is unable, as a rule, to earn in a lifetime the fortune which one of these ruffians receive as his share of a single exhibition. True, people have a right to squander their money on these creatures if they desire to, but the moral effect is bad. The rising generation will not so easily believe that honest labor is the royal road to success when it has before it conspicuous evidences that ignorance and brutality win the quickest and largest returns.

That traditional "bull in a china shop" could hardly do more damage in a little while than a whole herd of cattle in a furniture store, as was witnessed in Louisville the other day. The cattle were being driven along the street, when six or seven made a dash into the store, following the lead of a big bull. The proprietor pushed a lady customer out of the back door, and got behind the door himself, shouting to the clerk to drive the cattle out. The clerk picked up a bedslat and approached the bull, but when the animal gave a snort and put down his head the clerk thought that he had business upstairs. The bull started to follow him, but was diverted by seeing another bull in a large plate glass mirror. He charged the mirror, and when the glass shattered around him he plunged about the store, reducing the furniture to fragments, an occupation in which the rest of the cattle heartily joined. What else would have happened no one knows, for at that moment the drovers came in and presently the cattle were peacefully pursuing their way up the street.

The French have had a hard time in reaching Antananarivo, but the reports indicate that they have got there at last, and they may be expected now to hold on to what they have gained and thus to establish their supremacy in Madagascar beyond the probability of dispute. The French have had colonies on the island for two centuries or more, and have had pretty constant quarrels with the natives. Finally, they tried the experiment of a protectorate, acquiesced in by the other powers, under which the Hovas were to maintain their own government, but the French resident was to represent them in all their external relations. This partnership did not work, and when the Malagasy government undertook to grant independent concessions to foreigners the French asserted their sole right to all such privileges, with sundry other demands that led to war. The coast towns have been long in the hands of the French, but the Hovas retired to their capital, far in the interior, and it has cost much time and money and many lives to get at them. If the success now reported prove complete we may expect to see Madagascar made in effect, though probably not in name, a French colonial dependency.

In the various steps taken by the United States toward providing a satisfactory defence of our coasts against attack by foreign war ships there has been a peculiar hesitancy in adopting the latest devices, quickly followed by an extraordinary advance beyond the results obtained abroad. Thus we long delayed the adoption of breech-loading rifled guns, but very soon after we decided to use them we had no superiors as gun builders. Similarly, although nickel steel armor was first manufactured in Europe, the high development that has been given to it has been due to the navy department of this country. Recently Great Britain, being convinced of the value of the wire-wound gun, has discarded the built-up system of manufacture and has constructed all the heaviest guns for her latest battleships on the wire-wound plan. The United States navy and army ordnance experts have not yet fallen into line, but when they do there is no doubt that our wire-wound guns will surpass those now building in England by as much as our Harveyized nickel steel plates surpassed the compound armor that so long was regarded as the best the British works could make. Already the extraordinary endurance and the unequalled power of the Brown segmental wire-wound gun have begun to attract attention abroad, and its construction in this country will soon set the pace for gun construction throughout the world. It has no equal.

In the invention of an electric automobile plow science has made another stride in the direction of the horseless age, and one which the farmer will be likely to regard with peculiar interest. The steam plow, which is already familiar on the vast farms of the West, has the drawbacks of great cost, cumbersome size and the difficulty of securing supplies of fuel and water for the engine. In the electric plow, which is a German invention of recent origin, many of these defects are remedied. It may be operated from a central plant in a distant town by means of wires strung on poles to the farm, or it may be more conveniently run from an ordinary steam engine and dynamo on the farmer's own premises. The plow is a huge two-wheeled affair with a motor fastened upon it connected by wires with the dynamo. In operating it a stout cable, anchored at each end, is stretched from end to end of the field, and the plow moves by working the cable over a shaft. When the end of the furrow is reached the plow is tipped over, the current reversed and the furrow in the other direction is begun. According to the October consular reports, in which the operations of this instrument in Germany are described, the novelty has been moderately successful. On heavy soil it plowed eight acres to a depth of about ten inches in ten hours. The cost was about $1.29 an acre, much cheaper than a man and team could have possibly done the work. In view of the experiments of Germany it is not impossible that the rest of the world will yet take up the invention and thus deal another blow to the defenseless horse. If there was a single function in which the horse seemed to be secure and indispesable, it was that of plowing and performing farm duties. If he is to be driven fairly from the farm as well as from the city, where is he to find employment?

Had One Bath that Year.

The late Sir Charles Napier had the credit of not being very partial to ablution. Wicked men say that when he went out to take the command-in-chief of the army, after the reverse of Cillianwallah, he proceeded, immediately after landing at Calcutta, to see Lord Dalhousie at the Government House. He was, of course, cordially received. "I am very glad to see you, Sir Charles," said the Governor General; "you have not come before you were wanted. We must have a long talk together. But in the first place we must have dinner, which will soon be ready, and there is just time to get a bath first." "Thank you, my lord," responded Sir Charles; "I shall be quite ready for dinner, but I don't want a bath—I had a good wash at Alexandria!"

Just Like a Yankee.

In the good old days of M. Blanc (writes George R. Sims), it was the custom at Monte Carlo, directly a suicide was found, to stuff his pocket full of bank notes. This was done to prove that his losses at play were not the cause of his hurried departure from this world. The last person who received this generous treatment was an American. He was found lying in one of the quiet alleys of the beautiful grounds, with an empty bottle, labeled "Poison," by his side. The secret agents of the bold Blanc instantly stuffed his pockets full of gold and notes, preparatory to giving information to the police. No sooner had they filled him as full of lucre as he could hold than the suicide leaped to his feet, raised his hat, exclaimed, "Thank you very much!" and went off to enjoy himself with his newly acquired wealth.

CLEVELAND AND CUBA

GROVER EXPECTS THE INSURGENTS TO LOSE.

Attitude of the President in His Coming Message Will Be Conservative—Members of the Cabinet Are Now Very Busy Preparing Their Reports

Capital City Chat.

Washington correspondence:

THE members of the Cabinet are now very busy on their annual reports. Mr. Adee, the Second Assistant Secretary of State, who has written the foreign affairs portion of the President's message for a generation, has been buried for several days in his room building the foundation for the President to erect a foreign policy. It is his annual duty to furnish a brief, reciting events of importance that have occurred in the civilized world since the last message to Congress was written and such facts relating thereto as may interest the President. It is understood that the message will be particularly strong on the Monroe doctrine and conservative on Cuba, notwithstanding the opinions and predictions of the Hon. Don M. Dickinson. I have it straight that the President doesn't expect the Cuban revolution to survive the winter. He thinks it will be crushed out as soon as the weather will permit an active campaign by the Spanish army.

Secretary Carlisle's report, at the time this is written, has not been begun, although several bureau officers of the treasury are preparing material for it. The first copy of Secretary Morton's report is finished and is being revised. It will be longer than usual, and packed with information of interest and value to farmers, live-stock growers, packers, fruit men, and particularly to those who are seeking foreign markets for agricultural products.

The report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue will show that the total consumption of beer in the United States for the last fiscal year, ended June 30, was 33,469,661 barrels, which was an increase of 191,000 barrels over the consumption of 1894, but a decrease of 353,211 barrels from the consumption of 1893. Therefore, it would appear that hard times have something to do with beer drinking. A barrel of beer in brewers' measure contains 31¼ gallons. The people of the United States, therefore, drank 1,045,926,906 gallons of beer last year. The largest consumption of beer in the United States was in New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois and Wisconsin. The total sales in the city of Milwaukee alone were 2,000,000 barrels, or about one-sixteenth of the whole. Kansas is credited with only 6,000 barrels of beer.

The report of the Secretary of the navy will be of unusual interest this year for the reason that it will contain a sort of review of the work of rebuilding the American marine, which has now been practically completed upon the plans that were adopted at the end of the Arthur administration and the beginning of the Cleveland administration ten years ago.

England Must Fight.

It is the unanimous opinion among diplomats here that England must fight or lose her foothold in the East, and that ever since the close of the Japanese war she has been seeking a pretext for descending upon China to counteract the success of Russia and restore her own prestige. It is believed to be the intention of Great Britain, sooner or later, to occupy Nanking, just as she seized and held Hong Kong forty years ago. Nanking is the greatest city in the interior of China and commands the commerce of the Yang 'tze, which is the greatest river and furnishes transportation for the most productive and prosperous portion of the empire. And as soon as Russia takes possession of Manchuria, the northern province, and starts her railroad down the Liao-Tung Peninsula, John Bull will find an excuse to occupy Nanking and organize a provisional government of his own there, supported by a British fleet. It matters not what the pretext may be, England will demand exactions which the Chinese Government cannot comply with, and nothing but the combined powers of Europe can compel her to loosen her foothold when it is once obtained.

Commercial disaster threatens England both in Japan and China. Those countries have been the largest and most profitable markets for British manufacturers, but her trade is decreasing rapidly and before many years Japan will supply the Asiatic market with almost everything it needs. The enormous increase of cotton factories in Japan and their rapid introduction into China will soon be felt by the manufacturers of Manchester. Since the treaty of peace between China and Japan was signed four companies, with capital of not less than $1,000,000 each, have been organized in Shanghai to construct cotton mills; two in Nanking, one in Hankow and two more at Hong Kong, which will get their raw material from America and eat a great hole into the English trade. It is true that three-fourths of the capital to be invested in these mills comes from England and is largely furnished by the cotton manufacturers of that country, who realize the evolution in trade and will move their mills from England to Asia as rapidly as they can. India has practically ceased to consume British cottons and is able to furnish almost her entire supply. Japan will be in the same situation within the next two or three years and China will follow rapidly after.

THANKSGIVING APPOINTED.

By Proclamation the President Names Thursday, Nov. 28.

President Cleveland has issued a proclamation designating Thursday, Nov. 28, as Thanksgiving Day. The proclamation follows:

"The constant goodness and forbearance of Almighty God which have been vouchsafed to the American people during the year which is just past call for their sincere acknowledgment of devout gratitude. To the end, therefore, that we may with thankful hearts unite in extolling the loving care of our Heavenly Father, I, Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, do hereby appoint and set apart Thursday, the 28th day of the present month of November, as a day of thanksgiving and prayer, to be kept and observed by all our people. On that day let us forego our usual occupations, and in our accustomed places of worship join in rendering thanks to the Giver of every good and perfect gift for the bounteous returns that have rewarded our labors in the fields and in the busy marts of trade; for the peace and order that have prevailed throughout the land; for our protection from pestilence and dire calamity, and for the other blessings that have been showered upon us from an open hand. And with our thanksgiving let us humbly beseech the Lord to so incline the hearts of our people unto him that he will not leave us nor forsake us as a nation, but will continue to us His mercy and protecting care, guiding us in the path of national prosperity and happiness, enduing us with rectitude and virtue, and keeping alive within us a patriotic love for the free institutions which have been given to us as our national heritage.

"And let us also on the day of our thanksgiving especially remember the poor and needy, and by deeds of charity let us show the sincerity of our gratitude.

"In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

"GROVER CLEVELAND.

"By the President:

"RICHARD OLNEY,
"Secretary of State."

She Killed a Boy.

While public sentiment at the national capital cordially supports the action of the Grand Jury of the District of Columbia in indicting Miss Elizabeth M. Flagler for shooting and killing Ernest Green, a colored boy, who was stealing pears from the premises of her father, there is a strong current of sympathy for the young lady running through all classes of society. Her whereabouts at present are unknown to all except her family and intimate friends, but it is believed that she is in Baltimore undergoing a course of treatment for nervous prostration brought on by the tragedy. It is not likely that the case will be brought to trial before January, and there is no necessity for her appearance in court until then. Miss Flagler is the daughter of Gen. D. W. Flagler, U. S. A., chief of the Ordnance Bureau of the War Department. She was born and reared in Rock Island, Ill. She is tall, dignified and graceful, and has refined and pleasant features and soft brown eyes. It is recalled that when the terrible result of her recklessness was brought to her notice she was the first to run to the wounded boy's assistance, and she rubbed his hands and applied ice bandages to the bleeding wound. When informed that the boy was dead she refused to believe the unwelcome truth and continued her efforts to revive him. The following day she offered $50, which had been set aside for her summer vacation, to the parents of the boy to defray the expenses of the funeral. Some years ago, while living at Watertown, Mass., she was seized with pneumonia, from the effects of which she never fully recovered, and since which time she has been somewhat of an invalid. One of the effects of the malady is an instability and ungovernable temper when aroused, and to this is ascribed the unfortunate circumstance which will culminate in her trial for manslaughter.

Notes of Current Events.

The Secretary of War has relieved Maj. Henry J. Nowlan, Seventh Cavalry, from duty at Fort Grant, Ariz., and transferred him to Fort Sheridan, Ill.

Anson Crisler is being held by the Kansas City (Mo.) police, charged with murdering Edward Illston, whose body was found in a clump of bushes near Topeka.

Mrs. Mary Frohman, aged 70, living eight miles west of Nashville, Tenn., on her farm, was robbed of $1,500 by a masked man. She always cherished a hatred for banks and kept her cash in her house.

Commissioner General Stump, of the Immigration Bureau, says there is no reason to fear an influx of Japanese into the United States, and denies that the alien contract labor law has been violated by them.

Probably the most dramatic scene of the kind ever seen in a Brooklyn church occurred in the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church on the occasion of the farewell sermon of the Rev. T. De Witt Talmage.

At Elwood, Ind., the combination of local gas companies to prevent the establishing of pumping stations in the gas belt by foreign syndicates has been made effective, and the matter will be taken to court.

Miss Bob Tansey Myers, daughter of the millionaire tobacco manufacturer of St. Louis, has succeded in marrying the man of her choice, Graham E. Babcock, of Coronado, Cal. They eloped to Glenwood Springs, Colo.

Hugh Woods, the best ball player in the Elwood (Ind.) team, in a spirit of bravado, on a wager, ate a handful of gum camphor. He became unconscious in a short time and remained in that condition over five hours.

The new woman certainly has very lofty aspirations. Orders have had to be issued by the commanders of United States men-of-war that henceforth women visitors will not be permitted to climb up the rigging to the mastheads.

The Buckley & Douglas Lumber Company let contracts at Manistee, Mich., for the largest salt plant in the United States. It will have a capacity of 2,000 barrels a day. Both the grainer and vacuum pan processes will be used and a warehouse capable of storing 275,000 barrels will be built.

At Dallas, Texas, it is said all members of the Dallas Artillery Company are to be dismissed from service in disgrace for refusing to turn out as escort to Gov. Culberson at the State fair. The trouble is the sequel to Gov. Culberson's course in preventing the Corbett-Fitzsimmons fight taking place in Dallas.

In the disbarment proceedings brought by J. H. Crist, district attorney of Santa Fe County, N. M., against T. B. Catron, delegate to the Fifty-first Congress, and C. A. Spiess, his partner, the New Mexico Supreme Court handed down an opinion dismissing the charges and holding the evidence for the prosecution untrustworthy.

Chili's Aggressive Policy.

It is supposed by some good judges of the course of affairs in South America that Chili has an ambition to dominate the whole of that continent and that its alliance with Peru means a war with the Argentine Republic within a year. Chili possesses the most serviceable army and navy in South America, and its aggressive dealings with its neighbors show that it is well aware of the fact. The Argentine congress recently held a secret session to consider the hostile attitude of Chili, and Brazil also is watchful of the growing Chilian military establishment.

ARE MAKING THREATS

REPUBLICANS WOULD REPLACE M'KINLEY DUTIES.

This Causes Woolen Manufacturers to Hesitate to Make Improvements—High Tariff Advocates Form a Conspiracy of Misrepresentation.

G. O. P. Plans Outlined.

It is the purpose of the Republican leaders to pass in the House at the coming session of Congress a bill restoring the duties on wool. They hope to procure the passage of such a bill in the Senate also, and thus to invite a veto from the President. In this way the question as to a tax on wool, the manufacturers' raw material, is to be kept open for two years to come, with the understanding that the Republicans, if they shall obtain control of legislation in 1897, will restore the high McKinley tax, or even impose a tax greater than that which was repealed a year ago.

What may be the effect of this agitation and this policy upon the domestic woolen industry? After the tax on raw material was removed, it became expedient for the manufacturer, who could for the first time freely select from and blend the varying wools of the world, to adapt his machinery and methods to the new conditions, in order that he might compete advantageously with the products of foreign manufacturers who had for many years enjoyed the freedom which had been withheld from him. Some domestic manufacturers have made the required improvements; others are beginning to make them; others have been intending to make similar changes. The work of improvement was delayed by the condition of business during the first six months of the new law. With respect to these changes, the American Wool and Cotton Reporter said last week, in an article relating to the growing popularity of worsted fabrics and the displacement of carded woolens by low-priced worsted goods:

"Old-fashioned wooled manufacturers are being daily superseded by manufacturers whose mills are equipped with the best and latest improved machinery. Several changes among the mills which have been reported during the past few weeks have served to accentuate this point, and others are pending which will illustrate more conclusively than ever the evolution of the worsted manufacturer."

But if the manufacturers shall become convinced that there is to hang over them throughout the next two years the danger of the restoration of the old tax on their raw material—a tax which, in the fiscal years 1893 and 1894 was, on clothing wool, equivalent to 59¾ per cent.—and that the policy of the Republican party is to restore that tax, or to impose even a larger one, if it shall obtain control of the law-making power in 1897, will not this tendency to take advantage of the freedom now enjoyed by improving antiquated plants be discouraged or effectively repressed? There will be no sense of security, no feeling on the part of the manufacturer that he can invest his money safely on a basis of free raw material. He may become the innocent victim of vindictive partisan politics. Who will be clearly responsible for his discouragement, if he shall be discouraged, for the repression of growing activity in the woolen industry, and the obstruction of progress, if there shall be repression and obstruction? Undoubtedly the Republican leaders, if they shall persist in the policy now foreshadowed, for the support of which there has been formed a conspiracy of misrepresentation.

The industry is not in a condition of "deplorable depression" at the present time, although these conspirators say it is, but their purpose is to bring about such a condition if this end can be accomplished by the policy which they have undertaken to support, and, if possible, to carry into effect.—New York Times.

Alger Calls McKinley Down.

Gen. Russell A. Alger, of Michigan, one of the leading Republicans of the West, was recently interviewed on the issues of next year's presidential campaign. He said: "It is generally understood that the Republican party once in power will revise the tariff. I don't mean by revising the tariff that we shall go back to the extreme measures of the past."

This declaration by an eminent Republican is evidence that the sentiment of his party in the West is opposed to a restoration of McKinleyism. When Gen. Alger denies that if the Republicans are successful next year they will go back to the extreme measures of the past, he is, of course, referring to the late unlamented McKinley tariff, which is very much of the past. But why this refusal to revive the high protection corpse? If extreme measures were good five years ago, surely they are good to-day. Have not the monopolies which paid for class legislation in their behalf in 1890, just as strong claims as ever on the men and party which they bought? Does not Gen. Alger know that the protectionists want not merely extreme measures like the McKinley tariff, but laws which shall be prohibitive of all imports, as that tariff prohibited many articles?

The difficulty in which Gen. Alger finds himself is that of many Western Republicans. They advocate tariff revision, but are afraid to say that they want another McKinley law. They know that the people of the West want no more high protection. They are ashamed to admit that the Wilson tariff is working well, and so take refuge in vague declarations against extreme measures. But their trimming and evasion will not help them. The contest next year will be between the forces of tariff reform and of trade prohibition. There will be no room in the Republican party for moderate protectionists, and they will be compelled to either become Democrats or to join the worshipers of the McKinley idol.

The Benefits of Foreign Trade.

The Reading Stove Works have just sent a large consignment of wood burning stoves to Australia, and are busily engaged in filling another larger order of the same sort for Cape Town, Africa. During the debate on the McKinley bill it was contemptuously asked by a high protectionist, venting his fine scorn of foreign markets: "What's abroad to us?" Such trade items as the above show that "abroad" can be a good deal to us; it can be bread and butter to the moulders of our State; and it can be vastly more under the freer conditions which our foreign commerce now enjoys.—Philadelphia Record.

We Export Manufactures Now.

The new tariff act has already, it seems, fulfilled to some extent the expectations of tariff reformers, as is indicated by the official returns of exports of manufactures in August last and in the eight months ended with August. The figures show that with free raw materials we are fast adding a foreign market to the home market protectionists value so highly and wish so resolutely to prey upon. The exports of manufactures in August were worth $19,050,924, a gain of $2,800,000 over August, 1894. In the eight months ended with August the total of exported manufactures was $129,440,864, a gain of $11,390,723 over the like period of 1894. If the rate of gain indicated is kept up during the calendar year there will have been an increase of $17,000,000 in exports of manufactures, or largely in excess of the record of any preceding year in our history. It would be $37,000,000 greater than the like exports in 1892 and 1893, when the McKinley act was in force. Our workmen get employment in manufacturing for foreign countries, and the demand for their labor and their wages are increased by this inroad into foreign markets. The protectionist policy is one of abstention from foreign markets. The wish is to control the home market, where wages can be dictated to workmen and prices to consumers. But the Democratic policy is to add to the employment gotten in manufacturing for the home market, the employment to be had in manufacturing for the foreign market. Free raw materials enable us to make this addition, and the increased exports of manufactures in August and preceding months show that we are doing it.—Baltimore Sun.

Our "Ruined" Tin Plate Industry.

According to the hired organs of monopoly the business interests of the country are in a terrible condition, all on account of losing their dear McKinley tariff. Except inadvertently in their news columns the Republican papers never admit that industry is flourishing, or that business is any better than during the years of the McKinley panic. Even the official statistics of trade and manufacturing are suppressed by these newspapers, which fear lest their readers may discover that the reduction of the tariff has been followed by a general business revival.

As an instance, the report of Special Treasury Agent Ayer on the tin plate industry in the United States for the year ending June 30, 1895, has been practically ignored by the protectionist press. The report states that the production of commercial tin and terne plates was 193,801,073 pounds, against 139,223,467 pounds for the preceding year, an increase of about 39 per cent. Of this 160,576,934 pounds, or about 83 per cent., were made from sheets rolled in the United States, against about 62 per cent. made from such sheets during the preceding year. Forty-eight firms were producing during the last quarter of the fiscal year, against forty for the same period of 1894. The number of rolling mills for rolling black plates completed on June 30, 1895, was 144, against 71 on the corresponding date of 1894.

This is a splendid year's record for an industry on which the McKinley duties were reduced nearly 50 per cent. by the Wilson tariff. No wonder that the Republican papers are trying to conceal the facts about tin plate.

The Taxation of Beer.

The proposition to provide for any deficiency in public revenues which may arise through the failure of the income tax to become operative, by the imposition of an additional tax of one dollar on each barrel of beer, is vigorously opposed by the protectionist organs. The same spirit which prompted the McKinleyites of 1890 to increase the duties on articles of necessity for the people, rather than to raise the tax on whisky, now leads them to declare against a tax on a luxury which would easily be borne by its consumers. They fear that with higher taxes on beer they would have no excuse for agitating for a restoration of McKinleyism, and are therefore urging the Republican members of Congress to oppose all measures for increased internal revenue taxation.

The attitude of the Republican press on the question of providing additional revenues shows clearly the hypocrisy of the professional protectionists. There can be no question that between tariff taxes on articles of general consumption and internal revenue taxes on whisky, beer, etc., the latter would bear less heavily on the great majority of the American people. Yet because of their blind faith in the benefits of high tariff walls, the Republicans reject the better tax and will do all in their power to restore the McKinley tariff on food, clothing, and other necessities.

Testimony to Democratic Prosperity.

Under the heading, "Boom in the Mill Centers," the New York Tribune, a leading protectionist organ, says: "Two features of the cotton market that attract attention are the great activity, positively amounting to a boom, in the American mill centers, and the strength of spot markets in the South. This telegram came from Fall River yesterday: 'Sales of goods tremendous, being 401,000 pieces for the week. Market firm. Stock reduced.'" Now let us all weep over the ruined cotton industry, wrecked by the wicked Wilson tariff.

Carnegie's Contracts.

Andrew Carnegie appears to have known what he was talking about when he said that our iron mills needed high protection no longer. His company has just accepted an order for 1,100 tons of ship armor for the Russian government. In thus demonstrating the ability of American manufacturers to compete successfully with the "pauper labor" of Europe in its own market Mr. Carnegie has invited a fresh dose of abuse from the McKinley newspapers.—New York World.

Smoke that Offends Republicans.

ERYSIPELAS AT 81.

PHYSICIANS FAVORED AMPUTATION OF THE LIMB.

It Was Not Done, and the Patient Was Cured by Internal Remedies.

From the Republican-Register, Galesburg, Ill.

Biggsville, twenty-nine miles west of Galesburg, Ill., on the line of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, is an old, quiet little town. In earlier days it was noted as a good business point.

It was here that a representative of the Republican-Register found Mrs. Rhoda Talcott, 81 years of age, who told him, in the presence of her grateful daughter, Mrs. E. Sloan, the following story, which is given as nearly as possible in her own language:

"Yes, it is with great pleasure that I can give my testimony to the great value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Over thirty years ago I was taken with a chill and erysipelas set in. For sixteen weeks I was not able to walk a step. The physicians proposed to take off one of my limbs, but finally decided not to do so. It mortified in spots, which had to be cut or burnt out. After I was able to get about with the use of crutches, every two or three months erysipelas would set in again, and I suffered intensely from it. I had a good many different doctors: Dr. Fitch, of Sheridan, Iowa; Dr. Brown, of Chanute, Kansas; Dr. Scarft, of Burlington, Iowa; Dr. Trembly, of Oakland, California; Dr. Searle, of Galesburg, Illinois, and a doctor in Kansas City, but obtained no relief, and after treatment from all these physicians, instead of getting better, began to get very much worse. The other limb broke out in two places with sores about the size of a silver dollar. I could not sleep nights without the aid of morphine. My limbs were so badly swollen that I could not put on my shoes or walk a step without either having on a heavy bandage or a silk or rubber stocking. About a year ago I read of and was told by a neighbor about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I concluded, as a last resort, to try them, as I felt certain I could find no other relief. From the very first after I commenced to use the pills, I began to improve, and since that time I have not been troubled at all. I would not have done without the Pink Pills for anything, as they have most certainly prolonged my life. My general health is much better than it has been for a good many years, and I am now 81 years of age. Have not only used the Pink Pills with success, but have recommended them to my friends whom I thought needed such treatment, and several have tried them and found relief."

Mrs. Sloan said that just before commencing to use the Pink Pills, she thought her mother could live but a very short time, and was most agreeably surprised after she had taken the pills.

Mrs. Talcott has made her home with her daughter for five or six years, and she can most cheerfully certify to the benefit her mother has derived from the use of the medicine.

The reporter also called on Mr. George Kelly, the son of one of the prominent hardware dealers in Biggsville, who has used Pink Pills. He was troubled with pains in the stomach and back, and from the very first he commenced to get better, and now he is not troubled at all.

John McKee, the druggist in the village, stated that he had sold a great many of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and that they most certainly give the best of satisfaction and have accomplished great results. Quite a number of the villagers are now using them.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, by addressing Dr. Williams' Med. Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

Lincoln's Modest Fee.

M. D. Hardin, one of the oldest Illinois lawyers, tells of an instance where Mr. Lincoln was retained to assist two other lawyers in the conduct of a case of the greatest importance. "I will not say now what the case was," said Mr. Hardin, "but it was one of the greatest moment to the State and of importance to the nation. The decision arrived at grows more stupendous in its results every day. Even at the time of its settlement those connected with it knew it meant a great deal, and the two men who had been his colleagues consulted together after the trial as to the amount of the fee to be charged. They decided that $5,000 was the least they would take and concluded to send their bill for that amount. But they waited for Mr. Lincoln and laid the case before him. They asked him what he thought they ought to charge. He pondered over the matter for a time and finally said he thought his share out to be about $50. That was, he thought, pretty good pay, considering that he had only given a little over a day to the case."—Chicago Times Herald.

How to Send a Stamp.

Comparatively few people know how to send a stamp in a letter. Nine out of ten stick it so carefully down that the recipient always loses his temper and generally his stamp, in the effort to release it. It is really more exasperating than when the sender forgets altogether the stamp he should have inclosed, for then at least, it is not wasted. Even the most extravagant of us seldom have souls above saving a stamp, for it is, strangely, far dearer to us than the two cents. The tenth sends it loose, when it is apt to slip out and vanish, as these totally depraved small things have a trick of doing. The proper way is a very simple one. Cut with a sharp penknife two parallel slits at the top of your letter, and slip in your stamps, which will thus travel as safely as if in a special paper case.

A Folding Lifeboat.

A lifeboat that can be folded into each stateroom of a steamship and readily extended for use has just been patented. The inventor claims to have realized a lifeboat, the frame of which is composed of practically rigid material, a supplementary stem and stern post being firmly secured to the keel, the whole making a frame-work for a boat, which is made of one or more layers of sailcloth and an outside coating of rubber. The occupant of the boat buttons a watertight cover about him, leaving only the head projecting. The boat is unsinkable, and if overturned instantly rights itself.

A Bronze Catamount.

A statue in bronze of a catamount is to be erected on a granite pedestal to mark the site of the old tavern at Rennington, Vt., in which were held the councils of military and State officers in revolutionary days. The tavern had a swinging signboard, on which was painted a catamount as an emblem of defiance to the British lion.

Fame Among New Zealand Schoolboys.

A curious test was tried in Lyttleton, New Zealand, the other day by a schoolmaster, who set out before 200 boys the names of six famous men—Livingston, Stonewall Jackson, Gladstone, Howard, the philanthropist, Searle, the champion sculler, and John L. Sullivan, the pugilist. The boys were asked to vote as to which was the greatest man of the lot, and out of the 200 votes Sullivan got nearly 140, most of the balance being cast for Searle. By way of accounting for Sullivan's large majority the schoolmaster explains that some of the boys were under the impression that Sullivan, the New Zealand boat-puller, was meant.—Westminster Gazette.

Is Daily Curing Backache, Dizziness, Faintness, Irregularity, and all Female Complaints.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

Intelligent women no longer doubt the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It speedily relieves irregularity, suppressed or painful menstruations, weakness of the stomach, indigestion, bloating, leucorrhœa, womb trouble, flooding, nervous prostration, headache, general debility, etc. Symptoms of are dizziness, faintness, extreme lassitude, "don't care," and "want to be left alone" feelings, excitability, irritability, nervousness, sleeplessness, flatulency, melancholy, or the "blues," and backache. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will correct all this trouble as sure as the sun shines. That causing pain, weight, and backache, is instantly relieved and permanently cured by its use. Under all circumstances it acts in perfect harmony with the laws that govern the female system, is as harmless as water. It is wonderful for Kidney Complaints in either sex.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills work in unison with the Compound, and are a sure cure for constipation and sick-headache. Mrs. Pinkham's Sanative Wash is frequently found of great value for local application. Correspondence is freely solicited by the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., and the strictest confidence assured. All druggists sell the Pinkham remedies. The Vegetable Compound in three forms,—Liquid, Pills, and Lozenges.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

NOTES ON EDUCATION.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO PUPIL AND TEACHER.

Establish a Spirit of Justice in the Child—Teachers Should Have Higher Pay and Better Training—Methods in Teaching Rhetoric.

Justice and Injustice.

Justice and injustice are closely akin in childhood. A child early detects injustice in others, though he is not delicately susceptible to it in himself. The same is largely true of children of larger growth. At first with the young child injustice is little more than a change of habitual action. Whatever disturbs his uniform activity, whatever occurs that he does not expect, is to him an injustice. With him, justice is the expected, injustice the unexpected.

One of the highest missions of home is to establish a spirit and habit of justice in the child, so that he shall have a keen sense thereof as applied to himself. This should be well done before the child comes to school, but, if it has not been acomplished, it should receive early and persistent attention.

Recent child studies reveal the fact that most children get the impression that the teacher is unjust at times. Their estimate of punishments is almost invariably based on the fact that some one else ought to have been punished also, or that some one should have been punished more severely, or himself less so. These child studies have revealed the fact that almost the only view a child has of punishment is its justice or injustice, and that he almost invariably argues himself into the position that it was unjust. In no case yet discovered, I think, has a child complained of the severity if he said, "I deserved it."

This being the case, it shows conclusively that the punishments usually lose their virtue because they become an excuse for the child's conduct. The irreconcilable differences between capital and labor are largely the result of the habit of most men to argue themselves into the belief that they are right and the others wrong. Capital sees clearly the injustice of a strike that will not allow other men to work who wish it; the case is clear that any man has a right to work if he pleases, regardless of the wishes of other laborers. Labor sees clearly the injustice of capital that reduces wages without reducing the rent of houses owned by the employer, that reduces wages whenever business does not pay, but does not, of its own accord, raise them when business pays largely. The case is clear that if it is right to cut, it is right to raise. Both capital and labor are usually right in their estimate of the specific injustice of the other, but neither is ever right in its estimate of its own injustice or of the justice of the other. It is so of other relations. Every man wins his case before he gets into court and when his lawyer makes his plea, but the cold common sense of the jury sees justice as does only one of the contending parties.

It is of greater service to the child and to mankind for a teacher to train children to estimate justice and injustice with the personal element eliminated than it is to secure 100 per cent. in arithmetic, or even in spelling.—American Teacher.

Higher Pay and a Better Training.

The great cause which hinders education in this country is the fact that the people, the citizens, the voters, have no genuine love for education and no real appreciation of what learning is. If their interest and their appreciation amounted to anything, they would see to it that the school trustees and school commissioners were themselves persons of education and cultivation. And any school that is conducted by teachers who are uneducated and untrained in the art of teaching is likely to do as much harm as good. By laws we protect litigants from falling into the hands of pettifoggers who have not been admitted and licensed to practice at the bar after a regular course of instruction. So, too, we protect sick people from the ignorance of physicians not regularly graduated from a school of medicine. But our teachers, though after a perfunctory examination they acquire a certificate to teach, in six cases out of ten are young women with no heart in their work, and but an intention to follow the trade until they are invited to marry; in two other cases they are young men who wish to support themselves while studying what they consider a real profession; in another the teacher is incompetent; while in the remaining case of the stated ten the teacher is likely to be seriously pursuing a life work because he or she is interested in the work and conscious of its high nobility. Here we have four classes of teachers where there should only be one. And until there is only one the public schools in the United States will continue to be what they are to-day—a reproach to our boasted civilization, a refutation of our much vaunted pride in free education.—Ex.

How to Conduct a Public Meeting.

Allow pupils to announce a meeting by posting notice in the schoolhouse and grounds. Let the meeting be called for a particular purpose—perhaps to protest against the closing of a particular street, or the building of a particular place. Take some local subject, which is not personal. Let the meeting be called for a definite hour.

When the school is assembled ask the boys to nominate a chairman. Follow the rules as they are given in Cushing's manual. Certain pupils should be prepared to discuss the different sides of the question. Allow anyone to speak on the subject. Have a time limit. Close by having a resolution drawn up and voted upon. The teacher should not usurp the place of the chairman, but should simply be one of the company. It is a good idea in a case like this to trust the boys to do what is right and proper.

Favor Free School Books.

The question of furnishing free text books to the students in Chicago schools was discussed with much interest at the special meeting of the Board of Education the other night. Trustee Errant explained the object of the meeting and said he believed the text book question should be settled at once. Secretary Graham then read the communications from several cities in regard to their school book system. Edwin P. Leaver, superintendent of public schools of Boston, wrote that Boston purchased the text books and loaned them free to the public school pupils, the latter course being recommended in the fact that many of the books, especially those used in the upper grades, lasted many years. He said the system is more satisfactory than any system that preceded it.

From New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Minneapolis similar communications were read, each indorsing the free text and reference book system in high terms, the custom of loaning the books predominating.

After this B. J. Rosenthal declared that he had been made a complete convert and believed the system was the grandest acquisition to the free school system that could be made and believed it should be adopted.

Substitution of Teacher for Text-Book

In our schools it is rare to find recitations that may be regarded in the light of instruction. In the thought studies, where scientific work is particularly required, the mechanical teachers attempt to do little, if anything, beyond hearing the pupils recite their lessons, either in the words of the book or in their own words; the progressive teachers, in addition to hearing the pupils recite what they have studied from the text-books, will take pains to explain obscure matters, to elaborate, and, when possible, to illustrate points by means of pictures, charts and apparatus of various kinds. But is is clear that, even in the latter instance, the recitations are based on lessons studied in advance from the text-book, so that they still must be regarded as lesson-hearing, though in a modified form. True instruction will not be obtained until the teacher is substituted for the text-book, as it is then only that the principals of teaching can be properly applied. To suggest the removal of the text-book, without recommending anything in its stead, might justly be regarded as destructive criticism; but surely no one can construe my remarks in this light when I offer, as a substitute, the teacher herself.—Dr. J. M. Rice, in the Forum.

Teacher and Pupil.

Teacher—Why did you have your hair cut so short, Bobby? Bobby—So that you couldn't pull it, ma'am.—Albany State Journal.

Tutor—What can your highness tell me about gold? The pupil is mute. "Perfectly right; silence is golden."—Neckarzeitung.

Teacher—If your father were to hear of your bad conduct it would make his hair turn gray. Bobby—I beg your pardon, sir, my father hasn't any hair left.—Amusing Journal.

Lady Teacher—Children, you should always respect your teacher. Now, Willie Green, tell me why you should respect me? Willie—On account of your age.—New York Weekly.

Teacher—You say one and one equal two. Now, is there any way to absolutely prove that one and one do not equal two? Child—Yes, sir. "How?" "Get married."—Detroit News.

Teacher—There is a passage that reads, "All my days will I wait till my change cometh." Can anyone tell me where the quotation can be found? Willie Doo—In the dry goods stores after they buy something.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

"Tell me," said the teacher, "what is the difference between wrought iron and cast iron?" "Well," replied Will, smiling, "the shoe worn by a horse is a wrought iron shoe, but when the horse loses the shoe from its foot it becomes a cast iron shoe."—Golden Days.

Uncle—Well, Bobby, what did you learn at school to-day? Bobby—I learned that the world is round and turns on hinges, like that globe in the library. Uncle—Well, what do you think of that? Bobby—I think, uncle, they are asking me to believe a good deal for a small boy.—New York Dispatch.

Teacher—Johnnie, what does d-o-g spell? Johnnie—Dunno, teacher. Teacher—Why, you must know what d-o-g spells, Johnnie. Just think a moment. Johnnie—No, I don't, teacher. Teacher (impatiently)—What is it that gets up and runs out of the house when your mother shakes a stick at it? Johnnie (brightening up)—Oh, I know—father.—Philadelphia Call.

Methods in Rhetoric.

The following plan for teaching English are gathered from many sources, mostly from the observations of Prof. Henry C. King, of Oberlin:

Formal study of text books in rhetoric.

Monthly, weekly, or daily practical exercises in composition writing.

Regular rhetorical exercises with individual training.

The entire school turned into a literary society one afternoon a week.

A combination of composition writing with the study of literature once a week.

A combination of composition writing and elocution once a week.

Divide the school into sections for rhetorical work two hours a week through the entire course.

Give a half-hour daily to a combination of literature, composition writing and text book study of rhetoric.

Study carefully the style of a great variety of authors and apply it to original exercises.

Organize the school into a reading club, meeting monthly or weekly.

Have the writing done almost entirely in the presence of the teacher.—Journal of Education.

Where Ships Sail.

Some interesting maps showing the present condition of sail navigation have been compiled by Dr. Gerard Schott. The two main voyages for German sailing ships are the saltpeter trips to the west coast of South America and the rice trips to India and the Straits of Malacca. The Congo is one of the hardest places to reach from the Lizard, taking as long a time as the Cape of Good Hope and Patagonia. It takes as long to reach Australia as Zanzibar. It requires forty days to reach New York, which is one of the most inaccessible ports for a sailing vessel, especially in winter, but the return voyage takes only twenty-five days. To Panama the trip is also forty days, but the return is sixty days. Australia is equally distant by the Cape of Good Hope or by Cape Horn, though the latter is preferred on the trip home, as the dangers are less.

The Czar's Prison Life.

All men must some day die, and all know that they must die, but the czar walks and talks, eats and drinks, and sleeps under the perpetual shadow of death. If half the accounts be true which come from the splendid and solitary recesses of the Russian palaces no month passes without some intimation that the enemies of his throne and person can menace him through all the triple barriers of guards and safeguards which surround his imperial majesty. He may find words of treason in the golden cigarette case which he opens when he would smoke on the back of his dinner menu, upon the blotting pad when he signs dispatches, or beneath the pillow of his coach. The trusted attendant of his privacy may be sold to the conspirators; his kitchen may not be safe against them, nor his study, nor even the chapel where he worships. When he walks abroad his path must be heedfully cleared and protected, the walls and floors of his palace must be searched before he visits them, and his journeys by railway necessitates a minute inspection of the line, with often a cordon of soldiers to keep it from point to point. Amid all his grandeur and vast power "he doth live a man forbid;" peace and security cannot be so much as known to him, for the strongest nature is not proof against the cowardly torture thus perpetually inflicted. One does indeed become in a certain way indurated even to such an existence as this, and the patient fortitude of the czar is said to be remarkable.—London Telegraph.

Both Trolley and Cable.

A rather unique device is in use by a San Francisco railway to overcome a 25 per cent. grade on an electric line. There are two trucks on this grade for cars going in different directions. On the grade there is a conduit like that for cable roads, and it contains an endless cable passing over pulleys at the two ends. An up-going and down going car are attached to this cable by the men stationed at the grades, and the two cars then work together by the use of their own motors, the one going down hill assisting the one which is going up. The system was tested a few weeks ago for the first time and was found to operate successfully. It has since been working to perfect satisfaction. It was found that the power of the down-going car is far more than is necessary for hauling the ascending car under any possible conditions of load.

When Wrinkles Seam the Brow,

And the locks grow scant and silvery, infirmities of age come on apace. To retard and ameliorate these is one of the benign effects of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a medicine to which the aged and infirm can resort as a safe solace and invigorant. It counteracts a tendency to rheumatism and neuralgia, improves digestion, rectifies biliousness and overcomes malaria. A wineglass before retiring promotes slumber.

How the Boa Kills.

The boa constrictor is capable of swallowing deer, calves, or men whole. It first crushes its victim's bones by the strength of its folds. It usually catches its prey by hanging from the branch of a tree near the places where animals go to water; and its destructive powers are pressure—for it has no poison fangs.

NEW CHATTANOOGA LABORATORY.

One of the Largest in the World—Wine of Cardui has an Immense Sale.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., Nov. 9th.—The immense new laboratory of the Chattanooga Medicine Company was commenced to-day. Nearly an acre of floor space is now used in making McElree's Wine of Cardui and Thedford's Black-Draught, but this new annex doubles the capacity of the plant. This business has become one of the largest in the country and now sends its leading product, Wine of Cardui, to every part of the world. A branch office has been established at St. Louis for the Northwestern trade.

How to Make a Will-o'-the Wisp.

Of course you know that a real will-o'-the-wisp is the effect of hydro-carbon gas generated by decomposing organic matter in a marsh and in a state of combustion. But did you know that you could produce this phenomenon in your homes? Take an open-mouthed glass jar and place some baking soda in the bottom, over which pour a little diluted sulphuric acid, muriatic acid or strong vinegar. Then the jar will fill with carbonic-acid gas.

Now lower a lighted candle into the gas until it goes out, leaving the top of the flame still burning upon the surface of the invisible gas. The flame will be fed by the gases coming from the smouldering wick. This will-o'-the-wisp lasts but a short time, but it may be reproduced by raising the candle until the wick relights, then lowering it again. In order to make a success of this experiment see that the air of the room is very still.

RIPANS TABULES

Mr. Wm. J. Carlton, of Elizabeth, N. J., says: "I consulted a physician in the country this summer where I was spending my vacation, about a chronic dyspepsia with which I have been a good deal troubled. It takes the form of indigestion, the food I take not becoming assimilated. After prescribing for me for some time, the physician told me I would have to be treated for several months with a mild laxative and corrective—something that would gradually bring back my normal condition without the violent action of drastic remedies. I recently sent to the doctor (Dr. Thomas Cope, of Nazareth, Pa.) a box of Ripans Tabules, and wrote him what I understood the ingredients to be—rhubarb, ipecac, peppermint, aloes, nux vomica and soda. He writes back: 'I think the formula a very good one, and will no doubt just suit you.'"

THE RECENT EARTHQUAKE HAS INCREASED THE SUPPLY.

Auburn May have plenty.—Why not Investigate.

The question whether the earthquake affected the pressure of gas, is attracting general attention throughout the country. The local gas managers at Indianapolis, say the pressure has not increased but reports from the immediate vicinity of the gas belt say there the pressure has increased 60 per cent at some points. Two abandoned wells at Muncie have blown out their water and are necessitating packing. At Marion oil wells are giving people trouble from additional pressure. At Kokomo, Russiaville and Westville much, trouble has been caused by increased pressure. At Summitville two new wells failed and at Alexandria three abandoned wells threw off their water and are showing a good pressure of gas.

These results, if they are accurately reported show that the earthquake has had a material effect on the production or pressure of natural gas, whether the action was direct or indirect. If such wonderful changes have been made in the gas wells at the above named places there is a possibility that a good supply may again be had in Auburn. The matter should certainly have the attention of those who are interested in the wells that are down here. Auburn gets all modern improvements and of the recent earthquake has added any to the supply of natural gas, lets boom the town.

The Old Violin.

Hugh McGuire of Goodland, Kansas, was notified a few months ago of an express package in the Goodland office. It contained a fiddle sent to McGuire from a friend in Washington, D. C. It was reported that this musical instrument was all which his dead uncle had left him in his will when he died two years ago, and McGuire became indignant and decided not to remove it from the express office. McGuire was the only heir, and he anticipated a small fortune. Later advices bore out McGuire's fears, for when the will was opened it was ascertained that his uncle had left him only the old violin. One night this week McGuire dreamed the fiddle was full of money. He told his wife about it and as she believes in dreams, decided to appropriate $3 from her own pin money and pay the charges. She went to the express office and loaded the box into the wagon and took it home, and when opened the fiddle was found to contain $1,800 in money and a deed to 160 acres of fine tobacco land near Richmond, Va.

Can Be Depended On.

Croup is a terror to young mothers. To post them concerning the first symptoms and treatment is the object of this item. The first indication of croup is hoarseness. In a child who is subject to croup it may be taken as a sure sign of the approach of an attack. Following the hoarseness is a peculiar, rough cough. If Chamberlain's cough remedy is given as soon as the child becomes hoarse or ever after the rough cough has appeared it will prevent attack. It has never been known to fail 25; and 50 cent bottles for sale up Robbins & McCord. 48

A Nice Big Deer.

Dr. Ford kills a Big One Before Sunrise.

Cook Ford received a letter this morning from his father, Dr. J. H. Ford, who with several other Auburn people are at Armstrong Creek, Wis. The letter is as follows:

CAMP MEEK,
Armstrong Creek, Wis., Nov. 6, '95,

DEAR COOK:—I killed a nice big buck this morning before sunrise, one half mile from camp. I shot him with a wire cartridge, one shot went through his heart, one broke two ribs, and one broke a hind leg. He was eighty yards off. He ran about one hundred yards and tumbled over. I went up to him and cut his throat, then I yelled at the top of my voice, "Big Injun Me." The weather is warm, no snow on the ground. I think we will get several deer if we have some snow. We are all well and happy. You may give this to the COURIER if you want to.

Card Of Thanks

We wish to thank our friends and neighbors for their assistance through the burial of our dear son Alvah D. Pipher.

MR. AND MRS. MATHIAS CUPP.

Obituary

Jacob Dick was born in Indiana county, Penn. July 8, 1850, Died at his home in DeKalb county, Ind., Oct. 28th, 1895 aged 45 yrs. 3 mo. 20 days.

The deceased was a son of Christopher and Elizabeth Dick, the mother dying in 1850 and the father in 1890.

Jacob came to DeKalb county, with his father in 1866 and was married to Mirzelas Beard, Dec. 26 h, 1878, since which time he has resided in Richland township. To the above union were born six children, two having preceded him to the Glory world.

He was converted to Christ and united with the Lutheran church until May 18 1884 when he and his wife united with the Brethren in Christ and remained a faithful member until death.

The last sickness though brief but severe, was endured with patience and trust in Christ as his Savior. A short time before he passed away he called his wife and children to his bedside and kindly admonished them how they should live, that they should be kind, true and good, and be prepared to meet him in Glory.

What a solemn hour when the final farewell is made between husband and wife, and a father and children having exported all his friends and neighbors to be faithful and meet him in heaven he calmly fell asleep in Jesus, leaving a wife, a son, three daughters and many friends and neighbors to mourn his departure.

Daniel Gonser.

As briefly noted in yesterday's DAILY, Ex-treasurer Daniel Gonser died at his home in Ashley Tuesday, Nov. 5, at the age of 69 years, and 11 days. The funeral services will be held at that place to-morrow, Nov. 8, at 10 a. m. in the M. E. church, Rev. W. D. Trover of this place officiating. The interment will be at Fairfield Center.

Mr. Gonser was among the best known and most highly regarded of the older citizens of the county, and many have lately noted the appearance of failing health plainly shown in his emaciated face and form, and feared that his life would not be long spared, so his death was not unexpected.

Mr. Gonser was elected county treasurer at the then October state election in 1876, receiving a majority of 248 over T. J. Sexton. He was re-elected in October 1878, with a majority of 353 over Willis Andrews. Previous to his serving as treasurer, he had been county commissioner.

Lakes Going Dry

As an example of the widespread effects of the long dry season, we quote briefly from notes on Minnesota and south Dakota:

Cottonwood County, Minnesota—Many lakes dried up; the largest lakes lower by seven or eight feet.

Blue Earth County—Surface area of thirty lakes reduced one-half; Rush lake, once a mile wide, has disappeared, and the owners of adjoining farms are dividing up the land.

Lyon County—Lakes that coverd one or two square miles ten yeass ago "now raise crops or are hay meadows."

Meeker County—Numerous lakes which were from two to six miles in circumference and in which fish were plentiful are now mere mud holes. "Within the last ten years our natural water supply has decreased over 50 per cent."

Mille Lacs County—Large lakes remaining; "only the beds are in evidence." Five years ago among the lakes of the county there were two or three each of which had an area of five or six miles.

Dickey County, N. D.—Seven lakes mentioned, all of which have disappeared. "There is not a lake in the county now."

Lake County, S. D.—Herman and Brant lakes, 3,000 acres each, practically dried up; Lake Madison, on the shore of which a Chautauqua association erected a hotel and other buildings is now "nothing but a mud hole."

Coddington County, S. D.—Ten years ago there were a dozen large lakes, from three to thirty miles in circumference, and many small ones. Of six large ones mentioned, all but one are "entirely dry." Lake Pelican was eight miles long and two miles wide. "To day there is not a drop of water in it."

Keeps It For La Grippe.

W. A. McGuire, a well known citizen of McKay, Ohio is of the opinion that there is nothing as good for children troubled with colds or croup as Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He has used it in his family for several years with the best results and always keeps a bottle of it in the house. After having la grippe he was himself troubled with a severe cough. He used other remedies without benefit and then concluded to try the children's medicine and to his delight it soon effected a permanent cure. 25 & 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord 48

TO THE SUFFERERS OF RHEUMATISM.

After using Groff's Rheumatic Cure for some time in my practice I take great pleasure in saying that it is a most wonderful remedy for Rheumatism; in fact, it is the only one I have found for the cure of this disease in all its various orm. Dr. E. E. Tull, Chicago.

A Household Treasure.

D. W. Fuller, of Canajoharie, N. Y. says that he always keeps Dr. King's New Discovery in the house and his family has always found the very best results follow its use; that he would not be without it, if procurable. G. A. Dykeman, druggist, Catskill, N. Y., says that Dr. King's New Discovery is undoubtedly the best cough remedy; that he has used it in his family for eight years, and it has never failed to do all that is claimed for it. Why not try a remedy so long tried and tested. Trial bottles free at Robbins & McCord's drug store. Regular size 50c and $1. 3

Surprise Party.

Monday night the young people gave Maude Lockwood a surprise. It was her 17 birthday, and they came when she was away from home. When she got back she found them all there. They gave her several beautiful presents. A nice lunch was served and a good time was had by all. Those present were: Ethel McKay, Mayme Buckley, Dolly Husselman, Gertie Caruth, Ethel Ruffner, Rowene Tefft, Nellie Franks, Clara Sumers, Maud VanAuken, Gay Simon, Tom Todd, Charlie Schaab, Eddie Little, Harry Trentman, Eddie Baker, Ford Walters, Fred Beidler, Paul Davenport, Harry Lewis, Ray Silver.

The Country Daily.

The Warsaw Times says:—"Whenever anyone picks up a paper belonging to some one else, and peruses it, he should know that he is using what some one else has paid for. Is it right; is it proper; is it fair treatment of its publishers? No one ever attempts to use any other property of his neighbor in such a way. Borrowing is the bane of the publisher of a country journal, because it greatly contracts a field already too small for a daily journal, with its great cost of production, and its consequent slim patronage. Moral:—Don't borrow; but subscribe and pay for your home daily. It is an enterprise deserving of most liberal treatment on the part of the people it serves." And the Columbia City Post does not believe in this practice either and adds:—"Now what's the use, General, in finding fault with the borrower in that way? He can't afford to take the daily, for he smokes at least 30 cents worth of cigars on week days and 10 cts. worth on Sunday, and takes a schooner or two between times. His wife would enjoy reading the paper no doubt but her husband thinks she has enough to attend to in cooking, the meals, washing, baking, scrubbing, sweeping, patching the children's clothes and darning stocking. There are some such thoughtful men."

The above is as true as the good book itself. Only a few evenings ago we passed by one of our business houses on Main street just after the news boy had delivered the daily. A gentleman, who by the way owes several dollars on subscription to the Weekly COURIER, was first to pick up the Daily and peruse it. The merchant who paid for the paper was compelled to stand and look on until the borrower had finished reading the news.

CORUNNA.

It beats Ohio how the dickens went, don't it?.

The boys had bushels of fun hallowe'en night.

Mrs. S. M. Britton is very sick with lung fever.

Mrs. Bloodhart started for Shelby Ohio, last Tuesday to join her husband who has been there for some time. We understand they will make that there future home.

Ed Smith's little girl fell from a chair one day last week and dislocated her elbow joint. She is doing nicely, so Dr. Phillips reports.

Rev. M. A. Boughman spent last Sunday with friends in Auburn.

David Shaffer is clerking for Loomis & Co. and Ed. Gushwa has taken David's place at J. H Knauer's store.

Milo Thomas expects to move into his new store room this week. We think Milo has one of the nicest business rooms in DeKalb county.

The Wigent boys received a telegram last Thursday from Columbia City announcing the death of their brother. Byron went the same night and stayed until after the funeral, returning on Saturday.

Rudy Battershell went home to Edgerton, Ohio, last Tuesday to vote.

We understand that about all the wells in Corunna and vicinity have gone prohibition.

Dr. Phillips reports births as follows: Chas. Krebl and wife, a son; and C. E. Bertsch and wife, a daughter.

David Shaffer has moved into the Levi Hartman property.

A COOK BOOK FREE.

"Table and Kitchen" is the title of a new cook book published by the Price Baking Powder Company, Chicago. Just at this time it will be sent free if you write a postal mentioning the COURIER. This book has been tried by ourselves and is one of the very best of its kind. Besides containing over 400 receipts for all kinds of pastry and home cookery, there are many hints for the table and kitchen, showing how to set a table, how to enter the dining room, etc.; a hundred and one hints in every branch of the culinary art. Cookery of the very finest and richest as well as of the most economical and home like, is provided for. Postal card is as good as a letter. Address Price Baking Powder Co., Chicago Ill.

Deer Slayers.

Emmet Refner writes home from Dunbar Wis., where the DeKalb hunters are:

"I went out Friday and killed two nice deer, and shot another, but another fellow got him. Saturday I killed another, but to-day failed to see one. Geo. Boots killed one yesterday and I will kill one to-morrow I think. The boys are broiling some meat on the coals now and say it is fine. I have seen six nice deer since the law came in and shot five of them."

Dr. Miles' Heart Cure, Cures Heart Disease.

Mr. Geo. L. Smith, of the Geo. L. Smith Mantel Co., Louisville, Ky., writes Feb. 26, 1894: "For about a year I was a terrible sufferer from heart trouble, which got so bad I was obliged to sit up in bed to get my breath. I had to abandon business and could hardly crawl around. My friend, Mr. Julius C. Voght, one of our leading pharmacists, asked me to try Dr. Miles' Heart Cure. I had used little more than a bottle when the pain ceased and palpitations entirely disappeared. I have not had the slightest trouble since, and today I am attending to business as regularly as ever."

Got The Ciscoes

Friday's Daily.

Nothing like fishing and camping out and cooking your own grub and especially like catching ciscoes in Lake James. Don Garwood, Geo. Stealy and Dr. Buchtel, as noted yesterday were up to Lake James to catch a lot of fish and more particularly to catch the kind known here as "cisco." They succeeded splendidly getting about 70 including those taken by Jacob Stealy, George's father, who was with them. And they do say that Don Garwood got over into the water with the view of capturing a few with his hands.

SUDDEN DEATH

Mrs. Augustus Mead Died at 2 O'clock This Afternoon.

Monday's Daily.

Mrs. Mead has been in as good health, apparently as usual, but at 9 o'clock this forenoon, had an attack of neuralgia of the heart. Dr. Vesta Swarts was summoned and gave her medical assistance and when she left, she thought the patient was better. But this afternoon she grew worse, dying at the hour stated. She was a prominent member of the Presbyterian church and a lady generally highly regarded. Her sudden death is a sad one.

Lake War-Ships.

The English have built three armed vessels on the Lakes in apparent defiance of the treaty of 1816. But that is no reason why we should go to this extra and needless expense. Yet there are plenty of people who insist we ought to go to work and blow in a few hundred thousand dollars in the same foolish business. There is no likelihood that we will ever have a war with England and if we did, ships on the Lakes would be of little use. Thing are not now as they were in 1812.

Indiana's Centennial.

Thursday's Daily.

The DAILY began a series of articles on this subject yesterday, and will continue them as we have the space, and trust our readers will give them a careful persual. It has always been our opinion that we have known too little of our own state history. Compelled by our state school law to study the history of our entire country a worthy plan, as far as it goes, yet we have used books in which the very interesting history of our own state, has been given but a very small space. In fact, it has been passed over, as not very important. But the most important events, those having the greatest influence on the future of the great central portion of the United States, took place on Indiana soil. The expandition of Gen. George Rogers Clark into Indiana and Ilinois, his capture of the British posts at Kaskaskia and Vincennes, conquered for our use, the great country lying outside the little line of the Thirteen Original States. When the opportunity came, we purchased the adjacent country, which brought us to the Rocky Mountains The next opportunity gave us a second adjacent territory which took us to the Pacific coast. But without the portion conquered by Clark, we would have had little excuse and little chance, to secure the two additions beyond. In brief this shows us the importance of Indiana's history, and the importance of the coming celebration of our state centennial. And it is this, that the series of articles we speak of, will treat of. Indiana should make her 100th year, 1900, a grand one On July 4, of that year, her territory was separated from the great body of land known as the "Northwest Territory" and given a separate territorial government and called in remembrance of her important Indian tribes by the name "Indiana."

Obituary.

Wanted In.

BUT THE COMBINATION LOOK WAS TOO DEEP FOR HIS MIND.

Friday's Daily.

The guests of the popular Hollister House, who seek the shelter of its hospitable walls, are numerous, but they always seek admittance by the front door If they call at the back door, they get the cold shoulder, now better known as the "marble heart." This fate befell a late caller last night. But he was probably not a guest, but some fellow with an ambition to be a burglar and get into state prison. About two o'clock this morning Mr. Hollister, whose family apartments are at the west end, was awakened by the sound of a gentle turning of the tumbrils in the combination lock at the door opening out onto the landing of the stairway at the north west corner. He at first thought little of it, as it might be one of the girls employed at the Hotel, who knew the combination. But the noise kept up so long, and was so quiet and gentle that he came to the conclusion that a burglar was abroad. He arose and went to the door, but the fellow evidently heard him, for the sound of steps going hastily down staire, was plain, and by the time he got the door opened, the retreating steps could be heard going around the Kiblinger corner and turning onto Main street. Sherm did not follow. He is not proud, but he has no ambition to extend his acquaintance among burglars and people of that sort. He feels sure that nothing but the combination lock prevented the fellow from entering. But he wishes all that fraternity to understand that his money is tied up in lands and lots, and it will be a vain quest for them to turn his pockets inside out in a search for cash. And if the DAILY should reach the gent in question he wishes him to understand that lock can't be opened by anyone who has failed to "get onto the combination."

Thanksgiving.

Governor Matthews has issued the following proclamation:

STATE OF INDIANA,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

Again, as a grateful Christian people, it becomes our pleasing duty to render thanks to an all-kind Providence for mercies and blessings bestowed during another year;

Therefore, I, Claude Matthews, governor of the state of Indiana, in obedience to a well established custom, designate Thursday, November 28, as a day of public thanksgiving and prayer, and recommend that the usual secular pursuits be suspended on that day, and that all the people of the state unite in praise and thanksgiving in their accustomed places of worship and around the family altar to Almighty God for His gracious favor in the past, and invoke a continuance of His protecting care over us as a nation.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of the state of Indiana to be affixed at Indianapolis, on this the 12th day of November, 1895.

CLAUDE MATTHEWS.

By the Governor:
W. D. OWEN, Secretary of State.

Debs Again

Nov. 22, Debs goes free, having served out his sentence in jail. His mistaken friends are going to give him an ovation when he comes out. Do they stop to think that he caused more misery, more crime, more loss of property, and more general trouble than did Holmes recently convicted of murder and supposed to have put to death more than twenty human beings. Debs is a black hearted fraud, and his followers are guilty of a crime against society when they encourage such a man.

Shot The Calf.

A farmer named John Dungan, near Muncie, shot a fine jersey calf worth $75 Monday night thinking it was a burglar. The calf was pushing its nose on a window, Dugan was awakened and with his big revolver sneaked out the front part of the house in his night clothes and around the corner of the house, when he fired, thinking the calf was two men, one assisting the other in the window.

Stole Horses and Rigs

SHERIFF STROH AND DEPUTY SHERIFF OF HILLSDALE, CO. MICH., CAPTURED THE MEN.

Friday's Daily.

Day before yesterday a span of horses with two men and three rigs, one a top buggy and two road wagons, passed through Auburn going south. They were followed later by the deputy sheriff of Hillsdale county who stopped here and got Sheriff Stroh to go along and follow them up as they did not own the property. The first trace of them was where they had stopped at Knott's school house and asked for John Surface, and later, they inquired for Samuel Surface, and reached his house in time to stay all night. The next morning they wanted to trade buggies with Surface, but he refused to have anything to do with them, as he saw something was wrong. Later on they tried to sell one of the road wagons for $9 and would take pay in chickens or turkeys but the farmer would not bite. It seems they then worked along over into Allen county, and finally to Ft. Wayne The officers having lost track of them some where, telephoned last evening to the police department at Ft. Wayne describing the men and rigs, and the police captured them at a livery stable. Today Mr. Stroh and the Michigan officer went to Ft. Wayne and got the whole outfit. But when they reached here, the prisoners refused to go further without a requisition from the state of Michigan. So they were put into the jail, and as we write, the rigs stand hitched at the south side of the square. The top buggy is hitched to the sheriff's rig, while the team the strangers drove still has the two road wagons attached. We don't know what will be done with them. They had about $60 worth of harness, lap robes, curry combs, etc, etc, that they had got on credit at Reading by claiming they owned 160 acres of land and were selling implements for South Bend parties. They also had two new suits of clothes in the buggy and one old suit and one of them had a new suit on. We have not heard where they got the clothes or the horses but the buggies seem to be from Montpelier, at least Will Campbell recognizes the trimming as work he did up there a month or two ago.

FROM TROY

Saturday's Daily.
Special to the COURIER.

The Teachers, Trustee and County Superintendent together with a number of pupils of Troy township met at Dist. No. 2 in institute at 8 o'clock this morning. The exercises were interesting and profitabla. Arrangements were made for trustee and teachers to attend the association at St. Joe Nov. 29th and 30th and they also decided to have a vacation of two weeks during the holidays.

Wm. Rummel who teaches at No. 4, was not able to teach Thursday.

Mr. Hinkle has been on the sick list for a time. He was at one time a resident of Auburn.

O. P. Leanded shipped a car load of hogs to-day, Nov. 16. He finds Hamilton a good market.

Joe Bell an old friend of the COURIER is still doing business at Troy. He is apparently doing well.

D. W. Weitz is every day on hand at the Wabash to furnish milk for the dining car. Travelers on that popular line may be assured they get good quality.

Our schools are generally in good condition and everything going on well.

FOOT BALL EIGHT TO FOUR.

Saturday's Daily.

That is the result of the foot ball game between Auburn and Kendallville this afternoon, the eight being to the credit of Kendallville. Auburn men were too light, although they were well managed by J. C. Teeters. Some of our boys played well but the average of weight was not quite high enough. It is a rough game and rather dangerous. Several men were hurt.

A Surprise

Friday's Daily.

Carrie and Emma Beuret go to Detroit Saturday to remain about three months for the purpose of taking lessons in stenography. So their young friend planned a surprise on them. They gathered at the Beuret residence on West Fourth street and before the girls knew what was going on, they were fairly captured. The visitors brought materials for a splendid supper, and so with conversation, music, games etc, ther was a grand time. Among those present were: Mary and Theresa Ashley, Gertrude and Lena Schiffli, Minnie and Nettie Hoff, Lizzie Ertle, Lulu Berg, Libbie Hosler, Mayme Buckley, Lillie Fell, and Fred Ashley, Johnnie Berg Christie Fell, Ed. Shophurst and Roy Hull,

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."
DR. G. C. OSGOOD,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
DR. J. F. KINCHELOE,
Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."
H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

CIRCLING THE GLOBE.

CONCISE HISTORY OF SEVEN DAYS' DOINGS.

Intelligence by Electric Wire from Every Quarter of the Civilized World, Embracing Foreign Affairs and Home Happenings of an Important Nature.

AN OPEN DRAW,

Into Which Plunges an Electric Car Filled with People, Killing All on Board.

The most frightful catastrophe that has ever occurred in the history of electric railways and high bridges happened early Saturday evening, at Cleveland, Ohio. One of the large combination cars of the Cedar avenue and Jennings avenue line of the big consolidated system plunged through the draw of the Central Viaduct, fell 100 feet, struck the protection piling around the base of the pier upon which the drawbridge is pivoted, and toppled over into the water.

From fourteen to twenty-one persons lost their lives, either by being killed by the fall or drowned in the water, which at this point is about fifteen feet deep.

The accident occurred at the north end of the draw, the car which went down being bound from Cedar avenue to the South Side. It struck the pilling, was probably broken up and went into the river, trucks upward, and then turned over. A part of the roof only was visible when assistance in the shape of the fireboat John H. Farley arrived.

Firemen rigged up a raft and took their yawl, from which they fished with pike poles for the podies. Thousands of people went to the scene of the accident, crowded upon the great bridge, and went down to the valley, 120 feet below, to get a sight, if possible, of the rescue work. At 10:30 o'clock fourteen bodies had been recovered. The news of the accident created almost a panic on the South Side and along Cedar avenue, for at that hour thousands of the residents of those communities were out, and the friends and relatives of each one inquired with great fear if any of those they were interested in were aboard the ill-fated car.

The terrible catastrophe was all due to the criminal and still unexplainable carelessness of the conductor. This, however, will never be explained, for he went down with the wreck.

Elevator Drops.

Miss Carrie Potter, a stenographer employed by the Metropolitan Insurance company, New York, is at death's door from nervous prostration due to a fall of ten stories in one of the company's elevators. The company occupies an enormous new building at Twenty-Third street and Madison avenue. The elevator car containing Miss Potter and the elevator man suddenly broke and dropped like a cannon ball ten stories. At the first floor a safety clutch sprang out and caught the car. The elevator man was slightly bruised by being knocked down. Miss Potter fainted, and has been confined to her bed ever since, a nervous wreck.

Typhoid Fever Epidemic.

Typhoid fever is cutting a wide swath in Allegheny City, Pa. The records show that in the last two and a half months there have been 1,038 cases. During this time there were 103 deaths, showing that 10 per cent. were fatal. Nearly 10 per cent. of the entire population has been afflicted and health officials are at their wits' end to discover the cause. The largest proportion of cases is in down-town wards, where the sewerage is of the best. The disease has made the most headway among the better class of citizens, and the average of the striken is one in twenty.

Massacre of Eight Hundred Christians.

Washington special: Secretary Olney has received a cablegram from United States Minister Terrell confirming the Associated Press reports from Constantinople, concerning the massacre of 800 persons by the Mussulmans at Harpool and the destruction of a large amount of American mission property. The scene of this massacre is far inland and beyond the reach of a man-of-war, which would be obliged to pass the Dardanelles and enter the Black sea to approach even the neighboring coast.

Murder and Suicide.

At Phoenixville, Penn., Thomas Elwin cut the throats of his two children, aged 4 and 6 years, with a razor, and then attemped to commit suicide in the same manner. The children died almost instantly, and there is but little hope of the father's recovery. For some time Elwin has not lived happily with his family, and this, together with drink, is what caused the tragedy.

Carelessness Caused It.

At the opening of the grand jury investigation into the recent explosion at Detroit, strong evidence was adduced tending to show gross carelessness on the part of Engineer Thompson, who, it was stated left his boilers often to be watched by inexperienced persons, and that the steam pressure and height of water were at times badly looked after.

Fatally Burned.

Emma and Lucy, two little daughters of Larry Rafferty, living near Blackford, Webester County, Ky., while romping, overturned a lamp, the oil from which overspread their clothing and ignited. They were fatally burned.

Senator Hill to Lecture.

Senator David B. Hill is going on the lecture platform, and Chicago will be the city of his debut. Senator Hill will make his first appearance in Chicago on the night of Friday, December 6, at the Auditorium. The subject of the lecture will be "Liberty."

Forty-Eight Lives Lost.

London special: The admiralty has received confirmation of the dispatch from Shanghai saying that the launch of the British cruiser Edgar had been sunk, with the loss of forty-eight lives.

A Steamer Lost.

San Francisco special: Meagre particulars of the loss of the steamer Kungpai in Kinchow Bay, were received by the steamer Coptic. She blew up when on a voyage from Tien Tsin to Kinchow. She was carrying troops to the number of about a thousand and had six foreign officers and one foreign passenger on board. Out of this number nine Chinese and two foreigners only are reported safe.

Death in a Mine.

London special: Fire damp caused an explosion at the Winning Collery, at Blackwell, near Alfreton, in the County of Derby. Seven persons are reported to have been killed.

THE TRADE REVIEW.

The Money and Stock Markets are Strong.

R. G. Dun & Co., in their Weekly Review of Trade, says:

"Failures for the first week in November amounted to $2,971,475 against $2,844,445 last year, and for October show liabilities of $16,637,921, against $41,127,590 last year and $24,958,132 in 1893. For the past week failures have been 283 in the United States against 270 last year, and 49 in Canada against 28 last year.

"The scare about gold exports had no real significance, and although $2,250,000 more will go out the stock market has been recovering. The collapse of Kaffir speculations abroad has forced many to realize on Americans held, and the impression that our government may have to borrow again also operates to our disadvantage. But there is no local disturbance of money markets, stocks are eighty cents per share stronger than a week ago, commercial loans are not large and the demand for moving crops has been remarkably small, so that on the whole the money market has shown very unusual strength and steadiness for the fall season. The government monthly crop report has caused, as usual, rather more uncertainty as to its interpretation than previously existed as to crops."

BAD ENOUGH

Is the State of Affairs Among the People of the Far East.

Constantinople special: According to official Turkish advices received by the Government, the Armenians of Zeitoun, since capturing a battalion of Turkish troops and practically obtaining possession of the city, have attacked the village of Tehoukourhissar, killed thirty-five Mussulmen, pillaged a house at Dunghel and carried off the arms and cattle of that neighborhood. The Armenians are said to have assassinated the secretary of the Collector of Customs of that part of the country. The vali of Adana, a town situated some distance from Zeitoun, and near the coast, telegraphs that 200 Armenians disguised as Circassians attacked and plundered the Mussulman villages of Zeitounbeli and Narl, killing a number of inhabitants.

It is believed in some Armenian quarters here that the estimate of 10,000 Armenians killed during the recent massacres, may be considerably under the real total and that the number may come nearer 15,000 than 10,000. Reports from Armenian sources place the number of killed at Diarbekia at over 2,000. This needs confimation in spite of the fact admitted that there has been terrible bloodshed and that a large part of the town was burned.

THE LION GROWLS.

Hopes to Be Able to Pick a Quarrel With the Columbian States.

A Washington special says: There has been much friction of late between Great Britain and the South American republic of Colombia, which it is thought may lead to radical steps by the British. The Colombian government gave a concession to an English syndicate to build a railway through the state of Antioqua, tapping the richest sections of Colombia. The company did not proceed with the work, and the government declared the concession forfeited. The company then presented a claim for $640,000 damages. Colombia refused to pay, but consented to arbitrate the claim, and out of this arbitration has grown the present friction.

No settlement was made on the arbitration, and now influences are being brought to bear on the British foreign office to administer a rebuke to Colombia, which will serve as a reminder that British investments in that country must receive full protection. These efforts come from interested capitalists, and it is not known that Lord Sallisbury has as yet considered the advisability of putting in motion the machinery of the foreign office in order to protect an English investment of a private character.

DUEL TO DEATH.

Prominent Southern Farmers Engage in Mortal Conflict.

A special from Westville, Fla., says: George Phillips and John McLain, prominent farmers, fought a duel to the death near Wetaphain, Washington county. Last spring John Waller, McLain's nephew, killed a man near Eufaula, Ala., and fled to his uncle's home for refuge. A reward was offered by the Alabama authorities and Phillips betrayed the fugitive's whereabouts.

This incensed McLain and he swore revenge on Phillips. The men met the other day for the first time since the betrayal. Each was mounted and carried a rifle. They rode toward each other furiously, firing as rapidly as possible, and finally both men fell from their saddles. Phillips had been shot four times, one of the bullets penetrating the brain and causing death. McLain had been shot twice, one bullet piercing the left lung and inflicting a mortal wound.

WON'T MEDDLE.

Two Vessels Now in Turkish Waters Believed to Be Sufficient for all Purposes.

In the present state of affairs in Turkey, the navy department will not add to the strength of the United States squadron now in Turkish waters, which consist of the San Francisco and the Marblehead. It is felt that these two vessels are ample to protect American residents in Turkey, even in the event of actual hostilities, and to assemble a strong naval force there now might be construed as a joint participation by the United States in the demands which have been made on the porte, whereas our government has no intention of becoming embroiled in any European complications. The Asiatic squadron is to be kept at its present full strength for some time to come, certainly until there is no longer reason to apprehend further wars in the East or uprising against foreign missionaries.

GOSHEN AROUSED

By the Brutal Assault on a Young Woman.

Intense excitement prevails at Goshen, Ind., over the brutal assault upon Miss Carrie Connell, a prominent society young lady. She is engaged in the millinary business at New Paris, but her home is at Goshen. She was out riding on her bicycle near the outskirts of town about dark, and as she was about to return a stranger grabbed her by the waist and dragged her from her wheel to a lonely spot and by the use of threats with a pistol assaulted her. After accomplishing his vile deed he mounted her bicycle and rode away. The young lady dragged herself to her home and gave the alarm. The Sheriff was notified and the neighborhood has been scoured for the ruffian, but so far the authorities have failed to capture him. The young lady is in a precarious condition.

YELLOW JACK

Attacks the Crew of a Norwegian Vessel.

A dispatch from New Castle on Tyne says: The Norwegian ship Mindet, Capt. Christiansen, from Mobile, September 12, for West Harlepool, has been towed in here with eleven of her crew prostrated with yellow fever. Two members of the crew died on the voyage. Owing to the spread of sickness among the crew of the Mindet her commander was unable lo handle her, and she drifted for several days and was finally picked up off this coast by a tug which brought her safe into port. Everything possible is being done for the sick men. The ship will be thoroughly disinfected before anything or anybody on board is allowed to land from her.

Vile Cigarettes.

A case of cigarette poisoning, which will be attended with fatal results is reported at Converse, Ind. The victim is Pearl Pence, the 17-years-old son of John Pence, and one of the brightest young men in the town. He began smoking cigarettes four or five years ago, and the habit grew upon him until he became a slave to it. His health began to fail, and he stopped using the weed, but his system had become so saturated with nicotine poison that he was beyond the reach of medical aid, and physicians says life could be prolonged for only a short time.

A Mysterious Explosion.

A mysterious explosion took place in Lawyer James L. Zimmerman's office at Washington, C. H., Ohio. Mr. Zimmerman was in conversation with a client near the stove when something in the stove exploded, demolishing the stove and stovepipe, filling the room with soot, ashes, smoke, and pieces of stove. Mr. Zimmerman and his client narrowly escaped serious injury. The entire large building was shaken.

Two Men Killed in a Wreck.

A wreck on the Cleveland, Lorain and Wheeling railroad at Warwick, Ohio, resulted in the death of two men. The engineer of a freight train on stopping whistled for a flagman to be sent out. The conductor, Charles Ernest, and brakeman, John Adams, were asleep in the caboose and did not hear the signal. A second section ran into the first at twenty miles an hour. Both Ernest and Adams were killed. The money loss will be $10,000.

An Unlucky Visit.

John Sprunger and wife and Dr. P. A. Sprunger, of Berne, Ind., went to Sonnenberg, Ohio, to visit and attend a church convention. Mr. Sprunger, the day after his arrival, fell and broke his arm. Mrs. Sprunger took down with typhoid fever and died. The other day Dr. Sprunger started out for a drive, and shortly after was found dead in the road, heart disease being the cause.

Wholesalesale Murders.

A wine merchant of Paris, M. Domergue, has suddenly become violently insane and has already killed a number of people. He shot his wife and mother and then opened fire upon people in the street, killing three of them and wounding several others. The madman then barricaded himself in his house and fired upon the gend'armes who surrounded the building.

A Fatal Wreck.

Four cars which were being drawn up a steep grade on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western railway, near Short Hills, N. J., broke away from the locomotive and ran back at great speed, crashing into a locomotive of a newspaper train which was moving forward at a good rate. The engineer of the newspaper train was killed and his fireman badly injured.

Fearful Condition.

Los Angeles (Cal.) special: It is reported that twenty-five immigrants on their way to Oklahoma are in a fearful condition on the Colorado desert. They have abandoned their outfit of horses and their food is almost exhausted. A Southern Pacific train stopped and gave them a barrel of water.

Under a Red-Hot Stove.

Bluefield (W. Va.) special: At a negro religious revival on Elk Horn, Mary Cobb was fatally burned by the turning over of a red-hot stove. She was shouting and lying on the floor, when some one knocked the stove over on her, burning her breast and abdomen into a crisp. She will die.

Duel in Arizona.

Frederick Romero and James Montague fought a duel at Bisbee, Ari., in which each received injuries that will probably prove fatal.

Romero believed that Montague had alienated the affections of his wife and challenged him to fight a duel.

Gov. Matthews' Son Dead.

Indianapolis special: Governor Matthews received word that his only son, Seymour, who has charge of the government exhibit at Atlanta, Ga., was dying. The Governor left at once, and an hour after his departure the death of Seymour Matthews was announced.

Kate Emmett's Car and Contents Burned.

Kate Emmett's special car, together with two horses and all the baggage and scenery of the company was destroyed by fire at Greycliffe, Mont.

Senator Sherman Ill.

Senator John Sherman of Ohio, is suffering from a severe cold and intermittent fever at his residence in Washington. Although there is said to be nothing serious in his condition, he denies himself to callers.

Knocked Out in Four Rounds.

Jimmy Ryan and G. W. Johnson, of Cincinnati, and middleweights, met at the Olympic Club Cincinnati, for a ten-round go. Johnson was knocked out in the fourth round.

Lime Kiln Employe Killed.

Ed Barrick, an employe of the lime kilns at Huntington, Ind., was run down by a Wabash freight train and killed. His body was terribly mangled.

CURIOS IN CONGRESS.

MANY ARE ABSOLUTELY NEW TO THEIR DUTIES.

One Salvation Army Soldier, a Texas Cowboy, A Carpenter and an Ex-Cash Boy—A Maine Farmhand and New York Poet.

All Kinds of Statesmen.

THERE will be more new members in the LIVth Congress than ever before in the history of that body. Out of the 356 members 162 are absolutely new to Congressional duties. Of the 162 new men only twenty-seven are Democrats and the Republican majority will be made up of 135 youngsters and 106 veterans. The old-timers among the Democratic members are enjoying the melancholy thought that notwithstanding their reduced numbers they will be able to have plenty of fun with the raw recruits on the opposing side.

There are some curious men among the new members and in the coming session they will be sure to attract considerable attention. For instance, the First District of New Hampshire sends a Salvation Army soldier to represent it in the person of Cyrus A. Sulloway. Sulloway is a big, brawny man and in the old days could hold his end up in a stiff fight with charming ease. It will not do for the veterans to take too many liberties with him. He is an able lawyer and is well up in parliamentary rulings. Ten years ago he became converted and joined the Salvation Army. Texas sends from the Tenth District Miles Crowley, a young man who does not know much about lawmaking, but is sure to take as good care of his constituents as a man skilled in the intricacies of legislation. He has served one term in the Texas House of Representatives and two terms in the Senate and is a very popular man. He is 36 years old and was born in Boston. J. Frank Hanley, from the Ninth Indiana District, is the log-cabin man of the LIVth. He was born thirty-two years ago amid the forests of Champaign County. When 6 years old his father purchased a "History of the Civil War," and from this the boy learned to read. Poverty and an invalid father called upon Frank at the age of 12 to help the mother earn the living. He sawed wood, taught school and finally entered upon the practice of law, which in time yielded him a good income. He has served in the Indiana Legislature.

Harrison H. Atwood, from the Tenth District, Massachusetts, will be the artistic member. He is a clever architect, having adopted that business in preference to the more uncertain one of painting. He is also a skillful politician. He is but 32 years old and a native of Vermont. Dennis M. Hurley, a Brooklyn man, who will represent the Second New York District, began life as a carpenter. He is an Irishman by birth, but was brought to this country when a small boy. William Alden Smith, from the Fifth District of Michigan, is proud of the fact that he started in business for himself when 12 years old at Grand Rapids, selling popcorn and newspapers. He was a page in the Michigan House of Representatives and later studied law. William M. Treloar, from the Ninth Missouri District, used to be a professor of music. He taught music to the pupils of the Mount Pleasant College, Iowa.

Frank S. Black, from the Nineteenth New York District, began life as a farmhand and now looks like a college professor. He is a Maine man by birth and taught school after he gave up farm work. Later he was a newspaper reporter and then he studied law. The poet of the new Congress is Rowland Blennerhasset Mahany, from the Thirty-second New York District. He is a native of Buffalo and has had a stiff struggle with fortune. Col. George B. McClellan, son of the late war general, is about the youngest member of the new Congress. He is a Tammany Hall man and served as president of the Board of Aldermen of New York.

The Navy's Oldest Officer.

The announcement that Commodore Thomas O. Selfridge Jr. has been ordered to command the European squadron, vice Kirkland, removed, and that in a few months Selfridge will be promoted to the full rank of rear admiral is interesting, in that for the first time in the history of our navy, or any other navy, for that matter, two officers of the same name—father and son—will be found enjoying the same high rank. Rear Admiral Thomas O. Selfridge Sr. is the oldest rear admiral in our navy, if not in the world. If he lives until his next birthday he will be 93 years old. He was born in 1802, and entered the navy in 1818. He lives in Washington, he and his aged wife, and is yet hale and hearty. Nobody that knows the old sea-dog doubts for a moment that he will become a centenarian. In recognition of his long and distinguished services he was placed on the retired list with the rank of rear admiral. His son, Commodore Selfridge, also has a brilliant record. When he graduated from the Naval Academy in 1853 it was at the head of his class, and his future career was in accord with his proud beginning.

O. SELFRIDGE, SR.

How a Canard Originated.

There has been considerable curiosity as to how the story started that Secretary Olney was about to resign from Mr. Cleveland's Cabinet. The story was telegraphed far and wide, and although it was early pronounced false it was difficult to obtain a denial of it. The story, like many another that has been sent from Washington this summer, was a pure and unadulterated fake resulting from a chance remark. It happened that three correspondents met on the street and stopped to comment on Venezuela. One of the men represented a Washington afternoon paper, another was the correspondent of a Pittsburg morning paper, and the third man belonged to a Chicago afternoon newspaper. As the talk drifted along the Chicago man remarked, apropos of nothing in particular, that if he knew anything at all about Olney the Secretary of State would not be in Mr. Cleveland's Cabinet another three months. It was just a surmise on the part of the Chicago man, but somehow or other it sank deep into the hearts of the other two men. The Pittsburg man went to his office and sent a long and startling account of the Cabinet crisis to his paper. A little later on he met the correspondent of a Chicago morning paper and told him the story. The Chicago man characterized it as "hot stuff," and sent his paper a column and a half surmise of what would happen when Olney resigned. Next day the man whose chance remark started the story received a telegram from his home office telling him to send all he could about the rumor that Olney had resigned. Other able correspondents took their cue from this, and the result was that those useful but mythical persons known as "a prominent member of the diplomatic corps," "a Cabinet officer who declines to permit the use of his name" and "a man who stands very close to the President" were all interviewed and talked copiously of the Cabinet crisis. This is the true story of the rumor that Secretary Olney is about to resign from the Cabinet.

Tipping the Jury.

One of the curious customs that have survived in Washington is the custom of "tipping" the jury in all civil cases tried before the upper courts. The "tip" is nearly always $2 and is over and above the juror's regular salary of $2 a day. In every civil case tried in this city, if the plaintiff wins, his attorney promptly hands the foreman of the jury $2. If the defendant wins the attorney of his side shells out the money. Nobody knows how this custom started or where it originated, but it has been a usage for so many years that it is practically a law. In criminal and United States cases the "tip" is never given, but in all suits in which the District of Columbia is interested the extra compensation is given whenever the district side comes out on top. As jurors in all civil cases in the district are compelled to serve one month, these $2 "tips" amount to quite a snug little sum at the expiration of their thirty-day term of service. In one court where appealed cases from justices of the peace are heard as many as four cases a day are tried and in each of them the foreman of the jury is entitled to the extra $2. The money is always handed to the foreman of the jury, who turns it over to the jury treasurer to keep until the discharge of the jury from further service.

Aid for the Poor.

The coming of cold weather has already shown that the demands on the philanthropists of the district will be as great, if not greater, than last year. During the summer what was known as the Pingree plan was tried. Land and tools were lent to destitute able-bodied persons, and they were given seeds, to see if they could raise enough of a crop to keep them through the winter. The superintendent has received reports from twelve of such experimental lettings, and only two of the number were failures. It is probable that the plan will be put into far more general operation next summer, as it appears to be a distinct success. In the meanwhile a project is on foot to establish a number of credit stores to sell the necessaries of life. This will only benefit the destitute residents of the district, and will be run upon the honor plan. The person who draws supplies from the stores during the winter will be expected to pay for them in summer, and the credit given will be with the understanding that those who do not pay when they get work will receive no further public aid.

The Congressional Library.

By the time Congress meets the Senators and representatives will be able to see how the new Congressional library will look when Gen. Casey finally turns it over to the United States in 1897. The fence which for so long has stood around the mammoth structure has been removed, and the splendid front of the building now shows up from the east front of the Capitol with nothing to mar its beauty. There is not another such library building in the world. The work of beautifying the grounds surrounding the library has already been begun, and by the 1st of December will be completed. The grounds will be laid out in a way that will accord perfectly with the rest of the Capitol park, and will permit a good view of the building to be had from all sides. The work of transferring part of the Congressional library is now under way, but the bulk of the work will not be attempted before spring.

WORK FOR THE NEGRO.

Methodists Representing the Freedman's Aid Society Meet.

Methodists representing various sections of the country met in Chicago and talked of the work of the Freedman's Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

BISHOP MALLALIEU. BISHOP FOSTER.

What the society has been doing since the last meeting and what work it has on hand for the next year were the subjects of most interest. The gathering of Methodists was caused by a meeting of the society in Chicago, the first time in eighteen years. The Rev. Dr. M. M. Parkhurst, of New York, presided, the address of welcome being delivered by Dr. Vanango. Dr. R. S. Rust, of Cincinnati, gave a short account of the origin and history of the society, which, he said, met in Chicago in 1870 and again in 1877. The call for a convention to form the society was issued July 30, 1866. The convention met in Trinity Church, Cincinnati, Aug. 7 of that year. Bishop D. W. Clark was chairman of the convention.

The report of the Board of Managers for the year past shows that during the last year forty-four institutions of learning have been maintained. Of these twenty-two are among the colored people, with 304 teachers and 4,845 students. Twenty-two schools are among the white people, with 169 teachers and 3,880 students, making a teaching force of 473 and a total enrollment of 8,725. The school property is valued at $1,969,800, of which $1,691,800 is owned by the society. One-fifth of the 2,045 teachers and professors in Methodist schools are appointed and almost wholly sustained by the society, and of the 36,374 students in Methodist schools 8,725, or nearly one-fourth, are under the direction of the board.

One theological, ten collegiate and eleven academic schools are for the colored people. The largest of the institutions is the U. S. Grant University at Athens, Ga., and Chattanooga, Tenn., and there are 675 students and twenty-six teachers. During the year ending June 30, 1895, the total receipts were $367,809 and the expenditures were $358,509, leaving a balance in the treasury amounting to $9,309. Of the expenditures $250,500 was for school work.

ABDUL HAMID II.

The Insolent Sultan of Turkey Who Is the Most Bloodthirsty Monarch in All Europe.

FATE OF THE TURKISH EMPIRE.

It Will Be Complete Dismemberment or Deposition of the Sultan.

London advices say that the political outlook in the East became more critical and complicated during the latter part of the week. The Sultan seems to be defying the powers in bestowing decorations for "good services" upon the Turkish officials who are held responsible for recent outrages in Armenia, the British Mediterranean fleet near the Dardanelles is being strongly re-enforced, Italian war ships are said to be ready to assist those of Great Britain in an emergency and the division of the French fleet which cruises in the Levant during the winter will start for those waters immediately, a month earlier than usual. Every indication points to the fact that the affairs of Turkey are approaching a crisis, and it is significant that only two solutions of the difficulty are discussed by the European press—the entire dismemberment of Turkey or the deposition of the Sultan. The powers are now showing that they will no longer be hoodwinked by the Sultan's promises, which are never intended to be kept.

The final stage of the diplomatic pressure was reached when Germany, Austria, and Italy, which had hitherto stood aloof, joined the other powers in a menacing note which has just been presented to the Sultan. The next step will undoubtedly be a conference of the representatives of the great powers, which will discuss, not merely the administration of Armenia, but the fate of the Turkish empire. The powers are in complete unison, and this fact is grasped everywhere except at the Yildiz Kiosk, for the Sultan, in appointing the Halil Rifat Cabinet, composed of puppets and reactionists, is simply courting ruin.

CORN CROP LARGEST RECORDED

Rate of Yield Somewhat Less than the October Estimate.

The November returns to the Department of Agriculture make the corn crop the largest in volume of record, with the rate of yield, however, somewhat less than that indicated by the returns for October, being 26.2 bushels per acre. This must be regarded as preliminary and not a final estimate of the yield. The rate of yield of the principal corn States is as follows:

New York	35.6
Pennsylvania	33.5
Ohio	32.6
Michigan	33.8
Indiana	32.8
Illinois	37.4
Wisconsin	31.8
Minnesota	31.2
Iowa	35.1
Missouri	36.0
Kansas	24.5
Nebraska	16.1

The average yield of buckwheat is 20.1 bushels, against 16.1 last year; the average yield of potatoes is 100.7 bushels per acre, tobacco 743 pounds and hay 1.6 tons.

AROUND A BIG STATE.

BRIEF COMPILATION OF INDIANA NEWS.

What Our Neighbors Are Doing—Matters of General and Local Interest—Marriages and Deaths—Accidents and Crimes—Personal Pointers About Indianians.

The farmers around Union City are excited over the numerous "hold-ups" by highwaymen. Two men seem to be doing all the work. They drive a small pacing horse that is very speedy. The men wear their coats turned wrong side out and are masked. They are throught to be home talent.

John Dungan, a Muncie farmer, thought he heard some one breaking in at a window, the other night. He sneaked out the front door with a big pistol in his hand, and looking around the corner, was certain he saw a man helping another in at the window. He fired and later found that he had killed his $75 calf.

A sad accident occurred at Disko, Fulton County, in which Isaac Lambert, aged 22, was killed and Miss Estelle Stofer was seriously injured. The two had been lovers for several years, and Mr. Lambert was accompanying Miss Stofer to her home, just outside of town. To save distance, they walked along the Chicago and Erie Railroad track. The night was dark and the unfortunate couple did not observe a freight train that was being backed toward them. Mr. Lambert was run over and both legs were cut off. Miss Stofer was knocked off the track and seriously injured, but she crawled to her unfortunate lover, and when found by the train crew she was holding his head in her lap They were soon to have been married.

CHAPTER XV.
